Let it be Steady in Quality

WOMAN'S uncertainty, you know, is proverbial.

Which is probably the principal reason why the good cook wants all her raw materials changeless as the sun or a mother's love.

Kind of goes by opposites, you see.

Now in this matter of FLOUR, Brother Grocer—

When young Mrs. Homemaker has once made a successful venture in her cookbook—say a wondrous batch of glorious loaves such as only FIVE ROSES flour can coax out of the oven, crisp, nutty, well-piled, with golden crust and snowdrift crumb—

Or, maybe, a dozen dainty rolls of the toothsome kind—

Or one of those palate-pleasing pies like mother tried hard to make, but couldn't.

She wants to again feel that glow of pride, to hear the sweet praises at tea-time. She has tasted success and likes the flavor.

So she carefully measures out with puckered brows the same exact quantities, repeating the identical conditions which brought forth yesterday's happy doings.

Because she wants the same results to-day, Brother Grocer.

So you do see how very, very important to lasting satisfaction is FLOUR RELIABILITY, dependability, constant, sincere trustworthiness.

Which means QUALITY, of course. But QUALITY plus UNIFORMITY.

If, Brother Grocer, there should be milled to-morrow a flour superior to FIVE ROSES, it would be worth less to you unless it were changeless.

All the more valueless on account of this extra quality.

Since it would merely cause even more bitter disappointment in the sequel, having educated the housewife to bigger expectations, you see.

Look at the FIVE ROSES crest, Brother Grocer, at the top of the page.

Boldly blazoning the slogan of ABSOLUTE UNIFORMITY, because we know this to be the very strongest of the strong FIVE ROSES selling arguments.

It insures steady, constant demand, unfluctuating repeats.

Wouldn't FIVE ROSES dependability help YOUR profits a lot?

Just say the word, Brother Grocer. Soon.

Seven Phases of Retail Store Salesmanship

An Analysis of the Points of Contact Between the Retailer and His Customer—The Importance of Personality in Every Business Enterprise.

By H. N. Tolles.

Confidence is the basis of all trade. It is impossible to build any business or successfully promote any enterprise without the element of confidence entering. Confidence in any institution is made up of the sum total of the confidence which is secured through the personality of all the persons employed in that institution.

Personality is more than good looks and good clothes. It is that which rings true in the voice, which flashes sincerity in the eye, which reflects honor and honesty in every deed and business dealing.

When the individuals of an institution attain success the institution is all right; when the institutions of a community are all right, the cities are all right; when the cities of the state are all right, the state is all right; when the states of a Union are all right, the Union is all right. Therefore, in the last analysis the business problem is primarily a problem of the individual. "The science of business is the science of service—he profits most who serves best." This is the universal principle. The firm that succeeds must ever keep in mind the idea of quality of goods and excellence of service. The employe must harmonize with the heaping-measure-pressed-down-service principle—not how little, but how much can I do?

Confidence is the basis of all trade. Let the confidence of the patrons of any business be shattered or destroyed and that institution will close its doors and hang up a "For Sale" sign.

Seven Points of Contact.

There are seven ways in which an institution comes in contact with its patrons and builds confidence.

1. Through the advertising. Good advertising men to-day earn some of the largest salaries in the business world. This in itself is evidence of the importance of advertising. Liberal advertising, carefully worded and attractively displayed, is one of the best ways of creating confidence in any institution. When advertisers consider that in most media the cost per word is more than is charged in telegraphing or the cable message, they will realize the importance of weighing every word and studying carefully the construction of ideas which they wish to convery to the general public.

2. Through the window display. I recently saw the window of a store which advertised to be "par excellence" in fittings and furnishings, and yet the window of this superb store was full of dead flies and accumulated dust. We should realize that the windows are the eyes of the store; they should be kept bright, pleasing and attractive. Successful decorating is a high art. Other things being equal, people like to go into stores where the display windows reflect dignity and refinement.

3.—Through the telephone. Many institutions depend largely on building business through the telephone service. A soft, cultured voice, with polite, courteous attention to the customer, is a wonderful force in building business. Abruptness should never be tolerated.

4. Through the correspondence. Frequently too little care is given to the appearance, spelling and punctuation of the letters that go from some of the best houses. The letter should be gotton out with the idea of creating confidence and bringing results. Even the best letters are often spoiled by sloppy folding and enclosing. Many customers are never seen or reached except through correspondence. It is, therefore, very important, if we wish to build and hold patronage, that the letter should be as strong as human skill can make it.

5. Through the salesman. While in the broad sense the entire institution is established to sell goods for a profit, and is therefore the salesman, yet, individually, every sales person making up the composite personality of the institution should be of the highest possible type. We need not only men who can make quick sales and produce good results, but they should be business builders in every sense. The most meritorious merchandise that science and invention produce, the most attractive display of it and the most carefully planned advertising, do not guarantee success unless supported by active, intelligent salesmanship.

6. Through the delivery service. There is nothing quite as exasperating to a customer as to find pledges of prompt delivery service unfulfilled. Neatness in packing, regularity in the time of service, well-fed and well-groomed horses and frequently painted and varnished wagons all tend to make a favorable impression upon a customer.

7. Through the bills. A Philadelphia merchant told me recently that he prided himself on the carefulness, the arrangement and accuracy of his bills and monthly statements. Many customers have been thoroughly satisfied with the service until they get their monthly statements. Mistakes and errors, as well as untidy appearance, have a disastrous effect upon a customer's confidence in the firm.

Realizing that the advertising, telephone service, window display, salesmanship, delivery service and billing are all factors in the establishment of confidence and of maintaining it, it would be well for us all, as business men, to check over these various items to see if there are any leaks in our business through any one of these channels.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

The La Retreat Factory Co., Kingston, Jamaica, is erecting a fine factory for the manufacture of high-class cigars and cigarettes. The company are large cultivators of tobacco which grows on their own estates from imported Havana seeds. They produce some of the finest brands of cigars. They intend introducing them on the Canadian market and as will be seen from their advertisement, they are offering special inducements to a reliable representative. The firm also does a commission business in groceries, condensed milk and other Canadian products.

The Salada Tea Co. resumed packing tea Tuesday. By the end of this week they expect their entire plant to be in complete working order. The insurance was finally adjusted Friday noon of last week—four days after the fire.

To the retailer and his clerks: We, The MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., would draw your attention to our full page ad. in this issue. This special deal was first offered to the retailer and his clerks January 1, 1909, and was to have been discontinued December 31, 1909, but during that period the returns were far beyond our expectation and the enthusiastic expressions of satisfaction which we received from retailers, who had taken advantage of this special offer, as to the quality of the watch and the satisfaction that Imperial Dessert Jelly gave both to the consumer and themselves caused us to carefully consider the matter at the end of the year, when we decided to give the retailers or clerks who had not taken advantage of this special offer an opportunity to do so in 1910. Nineteen hundred and ten is not ended yet and those retailers or clerks who wish to procure a first-class watch, either gold, silver or gun-metal, in lady's or gentleman's style, will find it to their advantage to read our ad. in this issue and "get busy."

Vegetables Cheapening as Season Advances

Big Sale For Tomatoes and Celery—Declines in Pineapples and Strawberries—Orange Market on the Upward Trend—Demand For Fresh Caught Fish.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—Florida fruits, particularly pineapples and strawberries, are coming in freely and show a decline as a result. Strawberries are now 45c per quart and pines $4.50 per case. There is only a light demand for all lines and the situation on the whole looks weak. Oranges and lemons are only in fair demand.

Vegetables—Florida tomatoes are $1 cheaper. They are coming in freely of late, and sale is slow at present. Spinach is down to $2 per bbl., a drop of $1 from last week. Other lines showing decided weakness are, cucumbers, peppers and lettuce. The whole market tone is weak and demand is poor.

Fish—It is now close season for dore, bass and maskinonge. The trade is allowed to sell frozen fish during the close season, however. River and lake fish will be plentiful now for some time. Halibut are coming in freely from both the east and west coast, and prices have, as a result, declined. Haddock is a little scarcer this week. Salt and pickled fish are at a standstill.

On the whole the market is quiet and of a hand-to-mouth character.

Green Fruits—First class, well kept apples are in good demand, and will bring as high as $4.50 a barrel, but there are still large quantities of out-of-season stock which is spoiling faster than it is selling. Oranges are firm and will be higher. The primary markets have advanced from 30 to 40c a case. The quality, however, is much improved, and the increased consumption will naturally follow. Lemons are also looking upward and higher prices are expected to rule the market in the near future. Strawberries are still coming from Louisiana in "pint" boxes and are selling about the same as last week.

Vegetables—The vegetable market has a summer-like appearance. Almost every vegetable imaginable is on hand, and it is surprising how fresh they arrive in view of the long distances they have to travel. Radishes, cucumbers, onions, asparagus, spinach, lettuce, beets, carrots, etc., could not be better if they were sent in from our own gardens. New potatoes at $2.50 per hamper will find sale alongside of our own good old potatoes at about 30c for the same quantity. This might be taken as one sample of the cause of the high cost of living Tomatoes and celery are at present the largest sellers, and are getting a little cheaper. Rhubarb and asparagus are also in abundance.

Fish—The fish market is somewhat unsettled. The supply of fresh caught fish is still insufficient and frozen fish are not wanted. Fresh caught halibuts are arriving regularly from the coast and seem to be in abundance and are likely to be cheaper.

WANT B. C. FRUIT.

Western Retailers Cannot Get Enough—Demand From the Old Country.

Vancouver, B.C., April 21.—Retailers even on the coast have complained at times that they cannot get British Columbia fruit, and the statement of T. W. Stirling, one of the large growers of the Okanagan, tends to show the reason. He was in Vancouver this week and said that although the production is yearly increasing it is not nearly large enough for the demand. Buyers from England and Belgium, as well as from other parts of Europe, have asked for British Columbia fruit, but there was not supply enough. One firm in England wanted 100 cars, but this had to be turned down. The principal market is on the prairie, and all that can be shipped from the Okanagan is absorbed there. To facilitate the shipment of fruit, the C.P.R. is putting car barges on Okanagan lake, and have put in a large ice house, that ice may be had for the refrigerator cars when fruit is shipped east.

Mr. Stirling states that according to expert opinion the tomatoes grown in the Okanagan are equal to, if not superior, to anything grown in Eastern Canada, and the canning factory that has been operating at Kelowna for three years has found that the tomato grown in that district was fine for canning purposes, being heavier in substance and not containing much water.

Canada, the Seat of Empire

A Great American's Fifty-Year-Old Prophecy, Which Has a Marked Significance at the Present Day.

The Busy Man's Magazine has unearthed a remarkable prophecy about Canada, dealing particularly with its relations to the United States, which was made fifty-three years ago by the Hon. W. H. Seward, Lincoln's famous Secretary of State. The prophecy was made ten years before Confederation, thirty years before the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, and at a time when Canada was merely an infant in arms. The story of how the prophecy came to be made and the prophecy itself will appear in the May number of Busy Man's Magazine, but The Canadian Grocer is able to reproduce an advance sheet, as follows:

Fifty-three years ago, in the month of July, 1857, a small party of three Americans, consisting of a middle-aged gentleman, his son and his son's wife, landed in the City of Quebec, having journeyed thither by boat from Niagara. After a short stay in the quaint old city, they chartered a small fishing schooner, with the odd name of "Emerence," and, having shipped a competent crew, set sail down the river for a month's pleasure cruise to the Gulf of Labrador.

The gentleman was the Hon. W. H. Seward, at that time one of the members of the Senate from the State of New York, destined in a few years to become Abraham Lincoln's Secretary of State, and after his death, the exponent of his policy during the succeeding four years.

Even in 1857 Seward was a striking personality, not alone in his own country, but throughout the civilized world. He had not yet, it is true, made those famous journeys of his to the capitals of Europe and around the world, when, though holding no official position in the Government of his country, he was received by monarchs and ministers as an ambassador extraordinary, but it was only two years later that he visited England and was welcomed by Disraeli, Gladstone, Bright and other British statesmen, as the most notable American of the day.

The voyage to Labrador on the "Emerence" was typical of Seward. No public man of that period delighted so much as h did in travel and in the opportunities of observation which travel afforded, and in his journeyings he always adopted the more of conveyance best calculated to enable him to understand the country, which he was visiting. Social and political questions everywhere interested him keenly and, while he was first and foremost an American politician, he had eyes and ears and tastes for almost everything.

From July 31 to August 27, while aboard the schooner, Mr. Seward kept what he jokingly called "The Log of the Emerence," a most entertaining diary, intended merely for the eyes of the members of the family, including Mrs. Seward, who were left at home at Auburn, but which, after earnest solicitation on the part of the editor, he permitted to appear in the New York Tribune.

Towards the end of the log, when nearing home, Mr. Seward took the opportunity to refer seriously to Canada, and his words, written on the deck of the Emerence, "ten watches of the day and night—since we left Anticosti," and fifty-three years ago, are in reality the occasion for this short article, for they are full of significance at the present time, when relations between Canada and the United States have been the subject of so much discussion.

In weighing them it is well to remember that Seward was unrivalled in his day and generation in his genius for politics, and the wide range of his abilities. As his biographer says, "He was not the father of the Republican party, but he, more than any other, was its master. He was not the first of the Anti-slavery champions, but of the great anti-slavery north he was the directing intellect." The man, who as Secretary of State under Lincoln and Johnson, filled a post somewhat analogous to Canada's Premier, can only be listened to with confidence and respect.

"Hitherto, in common with most of my countrymen, as I suppose, I have thought Canada, or to speak more accurately, British America, a mere strip lying north of the United States, easily detachable from the parent state, but incapable of sustaining itself, and therefore ultimately, nay, right soon, to be taken on by the Federal Union, without materially changing or affecting its own condition or development. I have dropped the opinion as a national conceit. I see in the British North America, stretching as it does across the continent from the shores of Labrador and Newfoundland to the Pacific, and occupying a considerable belt of the Temperate Zone, traversed equally with the United States by the lakes, and enjoying the magnificent shores of the St. Lawrence, with its thousands of islands in the river and gulf—a region grand enough for the seat of a great empire. In its wheatfields in the west, its broad ranges of the chase at the north, its inexhaustible lumber lands—the most extensive now remaining on the globe—its valuable fisheries and its yet undisturbed mineral deposits, I see the elements of wealth. I find its inhabitants vigorous, hardy, energetic, perfected by the Protestant religion and British constitutional liberty. I find them jealous of the United States and of Great Britain, as they ought to be; and therefore when I look at their extent and resources, I know they can neither be conquered by the former nor permanently held by the latter. They will be independent, as they are already self maintaining. Having happily escaped the curse of slavery, they will never submit themselves to the domination of slaveholders, which prevails in and determines the character of the United States. They will be a Russia behind the United States, which to them will be France and England. But they will be a Russia civilized and Protestant, and that will be a very different Russia from that which fills all southern Europe with terror, and by reason of that superiority they will be the more trrible to the dwellers in the southern latitudes.

"The policy of the United States is to propitiate and secure the alliance of Canada while it is yet young and incurious of its future. But on the other hand the policy which the United States actually pursues is the infatuated one of rejecting and spurning vigorous, perennial and ever-growing Canada, while seeking to establish feeble states out of decaying Spanish provinces, on the coast and in the islands of the Gulf of Mexico.

"I shall not live to see it, but the man is already born who will see the United States mourn over its stupendous folly, which is only preparing the way for ultimate danger and downfall. All southern political stars must set, though many times they rise again with diminished splendor. But those which illuminate the pole remain for ever shining, forever increasing in splendor."

THE BUSY MERCHANT.

The merchant who is too busy to read a good trade paper is usually a poor manager, and poor managers usually fail in business, sooner or later. The success of nearly every business depends upon good management. Every department of the business should be properly organized and conducted with reference to the other departments, so that all departments will work together harmoniously and to the best possible advantage, and the business as a whole should be adapted to the external conditions that control or materially modify its destiny. The doing of these things requires the expenditure of much time and the use of a large quantity and variety of information that no merchant can acquire without reading a good trade paper.

Market conditions are continually changing, the art of dislaying and otherwise advertising goods is subject to frequent improvement, the art of salesmanship is steadily progressing, and the art of bookkeeping is improving occasionally. The successful merchant must keep himself thoroughly posted on these changes in order to be able to profit by favorable market conditions and important improvements in business methods made by his progressive and successful competitors.—Trade Register.

FRIENDS—NOT GROWLERS

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes never comes back to you with growls from the housekeeper. It is always up to the same high standard maintained for forty years, and is always just right. That's why we have the thousands upon thousands of grocers pushing it everywhere. Grocers don't wish to run the risk of losing a good customer by passing out an inferior stove polish, which is wrong more often than it is right. RISING SUN makes friends for you and for us in every household where you put it.

Berkel's Improved Slicing Machine

BERKEL'S Latest Improvement Patent Knife Guard to protect operators from accidents by thoughtlessly getting their hands against the circular knife. The only slicing machine in the world that has this protection.

BERKEL'S is the machine with the Patent Automatic Sharpener, by means of which the keen cutting edge on the knife is constantly maintained. The only machine with an automatic sharpening device. Simply press the Carborundum wheel shown in the cut above the knife downward and it strikes the knife edge at just the proper angle, a few turns of the wheel and your knife has an edge like a razor.

Will Slice Boiled Ham and Bacon Down to the Last Ounce

We call attention to the photographic production of two plates of boiled ham, there is just one pound of ham on each plate, it was all cut from the same piece, the eight slices on the right hand plate were cut with an ordinary knife, while the twenty uniform slices on the left hand plate were sliced on a slicing machine. This is an average result. The difference can be more or less marked according to the skill and time given the hand cutting, however the machine never can vary, the customer is always protected by dealing where there is a BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine. Dried Beef can be sliced thinner, quicker and better on BERKEL'S than any other made. The BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine is now used by Grocers, Butchers, Department stores, Delicatessens, Hotels, Restaurants, Hospitals, Educational Institutions, Steamship and Railway Companies, Charitable Institutions, Penal Institutions, the Army and Navy, Soldiers' Homes, etc. BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine can be set to cut automatically (14) different thicknesses, from 1-40 of an inch up to ¾ of an inch, "it cuts bread or meat equally well," requires no skill to operate and will slice perfectly more meat or bread in twelve minutes than the most expert cutter can slice by hand in an hour. While it is a hand machine, for several years many packers, as well as grocers and marketmen who do a large sliced meat business, have been running their BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machines by mechanical power. Enough pieces of bacon can be put on this machine to cut 300 slices a minute. This should be of interest to those who put up bacon in boxes, glass or tin cans.

NEW COMPANY A GOING CONCERN

Maple Leaf Milling Company, Limited, is a new Company which has taken over the whole undertaking as a going concern of The Maple Leaf Flour Mills Company Limited, including therein that of the Hedley Shaw Milling Company Limited. The company has mills at Kenora, Thorold, St. Catharines, Welland, and Port Colborne (the last named in course of construction) in the Province of Ontario and at Brandon in the Province of Manitoba. When the construction at present under way at Port Colborne is completed the company will have a total milling capacity of 12,800 barrels per day.

MARKET FOR OUTPUT

The rapid growth of the business of the two companies taken over has long made apparent the necessity of additional milling capacity. Further, the tremendous increase in the total output from the Western Wheat Belt makes it absolutely necessary to have more mills in Canada to handle it. Last year this output amounted to about 125,000,000 bushels, and experienced men estimate that by the end of the year 1920 Canada will be producing fully 500,000,000 bushels annually.

Security and Earning Power

The assets of the old Companies taken over as above stand in excess of all liabilities and without any allowance for good-will, trade marks, etc., at $3,770,524.11, this amount being ascertained on the basis of an appraisal by the Canadian American Appraisal Company, Limited, as of March 17th, 1910, of the capital assets taken over, and the certificate of Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Company, as of February 28th, 1910, as to current assets and current liabilities, with a liberal allowance for all contingencies. There has also been placed in the Treasury $1,000,000 of additional cash, which, besides permitting of the completion of a 6,000 barrel mill and a million bushel elevator and storage warehouse at Port Colborne, and of fifteen additional elevators in the West, will provide the new Company with further working capital.

As per certificate of Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co., of London, the earnings of the old Company on the present plant amounted from September 25th, 1908, to August 20th, 1909, to..... $218,843.38 being for the latter period at a rate equal to over 13 per cent. on the preferred stock of the Company.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained at any branch of the Imperial Bank of Canada or The Royal Bank of Canada, from Guardian Trust Company, Limited, Toronto, and from Cawthra Mulock & Company, Toronto.

The Three Great Trade Interests Talk Business

Most Unique Grocery Trade Convention in Canadian History—Wholesalers Introduce New Methods for Maintaining Prices—Contract Selling Plan and Secret Commissions Act Provoke Much Discussion—Relations Among Retailers, Wholesalers and Manufacturers—Some Interesting Repartee Between Wholesaler and Manufacturer.

Toronto, April 28.—By virtue of the fact that manufacturers and retailers were present, the convention of the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, which opened on Monday morning at the King Edward Hotel, was unique in the history of the trade in Canada.

In practically all the questions discussed the conditions existing in the retail trade were referred to as well as those in the wholesale and manufacturing departments. Free discussion was invited, the convention partaking solely of an educational character. The big questions on the slate were existing conditions in the trade, the wholesaler's relation to the manufacturer, declarations and the Contract Selling Plan, the Secret Commission Act, discrimination of manufacturers in favor of certain retailers, quantity price, relations between the retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers, etc.

Out of 52 Ontario wholesalers invited there were some 45 accepted and out of 71 invitations sent to manufacturers there were more than 60 acceptances. President W. G. Craig, Kingston, occupied the chair.

Thos. Kinnear, Toronto, welcomed the guests to Toronto.

This was the age of conventions and conferences, said Mr. Kinnear. Fifty years ago men went on from year to year doing business in their leisurely way without much thought or care about what their neighbors were doing. Today, owing to the pressure of competition, it was found necessary to meet and discuss the best methods of doing business.

"Everyone will, I think, recognize the legitimacy, as well as the necessity of such conferences, and the advantage to all who are engaged in the trade, whether wholesale or retail, because the better and more modern methods the better for all concerned.

"These meetings have not been held for two years, owing to the unfortunate litigation into which we were forced and the delay in getting judgment. That judgment was entirely in favor of the Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, and stated in plainest terms that we had done nothing contrary to law. I would like to say here, that it seems unjust that one or two men should be able to bring about such a litigation and force into heavy costs men who are carrying on business in a legitimate way. I need not say anything about the merits of our case beyond this, that so far from 'unduly restricting and hurting trade,' what we aim at in the Exchange is to act only in the best interests of the wholesale merchants and of the retail as well. So long as the wholesaler is a necessity as a distributing agent—and he is a necessity—so long will it be to the advantage of the retail trade that he remains strictly a wholesaler. I believe that the intelligent retail merchant will recognize this, too."

Profits of the Wholesaler.

Mr. Kinnear intimated that wholesalers were not an army of autocrats, and said that so far as profits were concerned, there was no class of men engaged in the pursuit of commerce that has a more meagre return for the amount of capital invested, the amount of risk undertaken, and the amount of energy expended; and that were it not for the strictest attention to business and the employment of the most economical methods, the wholesale grocery business at the present time would not be worth while.

F. T. Smye, Hamilton, read letters and telegrams of acceptance of invitations and regrets at not being able to attend, from all over Canada, and from New York. Practically all of these were in sympathy with the idea of carrying on an educational campaign in trade matters.

President Craig, in addressing the convention, called attention to the important matters to be discussed and reviewed the situation as it existed during the last two years, when the Grocers' Exchange was 'under a cloud' on account of the suit brought against it in 1906. The judgment of Justice Falconbridge given out in March last had 'lifted the cloud'—the defendants were found not guilty as charged. Had the verdict been adverse the situation would have been deplorable.

In view of the favorable settlement he predicted a new era for the trade with progress and profitable advancement. As observed from the programme, the convention was arranged on a broad basis, so as to admit of every feature and branch of the grocery trade being considered.

He referred to the recent new tariff agreement with the United States, and to the reduction in duty, which, though small, would result, in his opinion, in favor of the consumer in Canada. But it averted a probable tariff war, which would have been demoralizing. Then there was the prospect of a reciprocity measure, an agitation for which already existed in the northern States.

High Customs and Trusts.

"There seems to be the growing conviction," he said, "that high customs duties encourage trusts and mergers, and this lends strength to the reciprocity propaganda."

The speaker dealt at length with the new Combines Bill, illustrating one of its purposes by pointing to the Grocers' Guild litigation. This bill was introduced into the House of Commons by Hon. Mackenzie King. The cost of living, the influx of people from the country to the cities, and the productive capacity of the country were also touched upon. He had prepared a tabulated statement comparing prices of staple groceries of 45 years ago with those of the present day and this showed that present prices were lower.

Referring to the cutting of prices, he deplored the practice of some travelers in this respect. It should be stamped out, he maintained, by the firms who are members of the Exchange. The buyer, however, too, was often to blame for misrepresenting prices quoted them by other travelers and houses.

Enjoyment Without Paying.

"The Conditions of Trade and the Educational Advantages of Trade Meetings," was the subject introduced by F. T. Smye.

MR. SMYE'S ADDRESS.

While appreciating to the limit the honor of being permitted to address this convention, I feel that a subject of such vast importance at this particular time cannot be much more than introduced by any one member of the trade, and hope that the subjects and conditions brought out in this paper will be fully discussed by all the trade, and that some good will result.

We have just emerged from a period of doubts and uncertainties, and are now entering upon a dawn of a new era. The trade has been in such disorder, and so much out of sympathy with each other that the wonder is that conditions are not much worse than they are, but we are thankful that our course is now clear to start over again and build our houses on the solid rocks by honest and profitable co-operation—by eliminating all personal animosity and grievances—and by banding together with a determination to raise, by educational and social methods, the moral tone of the great grocery business. and in righting the illegal practices and long-standing abuses, under which we have suffered so long and so patiently.

We can correct all these evils if we stand together, and they never would have existed had we been united, as the manufacturer has taken advantage of our being at sixes and sevens, and has permitted and allowed certain classes of trade to carry on their businesses by these questionable methods; and it is for this convention to adopt ways and means of putting an end to these commercial pirates and secret rebaters.

We have a straight course to pursue —the court says we are right, and have always been so, and that the modern way of conducting a business is by fair and honorable methods; so let us put into action the machinery to raise our business out of the mire—let our motto be from this convention, "Co-operation," and let everyone make up his mind to do his share.

There has been a lot of hard work done by the faithful few to preserve the profits on numerous lines, which you are now enjoying, and some of us have stood aside and silently accepted these profits without paying our share of the expense of association work, or even a word of appreciation.

We will have many papers and addresses at this meeting, all of which will be on educational lines, and pointing us to the higher plane of business morals. Let us take heed and profit by them for our own sake—for our children's sake—and for the sake of our country, and let us hand down to history a period of high ideals in business.

The grocery trade is an important factor in the business community, and as it has often been said—there is no class of business where so much capital is invested, and where so much hard work and thought is required, that has such a small reward—and the question is, how long are we going to allow ourselves to be the slaves of the manufacturer and producer? The answer is—just as long as we remain divided on the subject of united effort.

We have it within ourselves to demand a fair compensation for services rendered, and we all know we are handling 50 per cent. of our turnover below the cost of doing business, and have been doing so for thirty years or more. Is it right that this state of affairs should continue, and what are going to do about it with our expense account increasing annually? We seem to forget that trade conditions have changed in the last twenty years. We are now confronted with innumerable specialty houses, who have extracted the cream and left us to do the banking for the trade of the country with the skim milk of profit to do it with. We find that the accounts we are financing are the ones who generally give us the trade on which there is the least profit, and we will find that these evils will grow if not attended to. We will eventually find ourselves in the rut, but we can cure those evils, and thereby benefit the retailer, manufacturer and ourselves—by association and co-operation.

It would pay every firm represented here to-day to resolve to appoint one member of his firm, or the brightest men in his employ, to do nothing else but attend trade meetings and to co-operate to remedy trade evils, and it is certain the result of his efforts would be more money for his firm than he could make in any other capacity, and is the only way that large results can be obtained. The man who stays at home and gloats or mopes over his own troubles, who regards his competitor and neighbor with suspicion, will never get out of his rut. If he is content to absorb benefits others have paid for, or take everything and give nothing and never lend a hand in the work, he will never be counted as a part of the Army of Progress. Co-operation is the theme of the advancing—march and individuality its key-note. Let us do it now, and a year hence we will see the magical result. Fancy what a change of ½ of 1 per cent. would mean on your turnover, and it does not look impossible to accomplish that by standing together and positively refusing to handle any manufacturer's line that does not pay us a fair profit.

F. T. SMYE, HAMILTON,

In opening subjects for discussion we hope that every member will state his views, and that our consolidated views will result in resolutions that will not be merely ideals of our thoughts and ideas, but practical resolutions, which will be put into action, and for the sake of opening up discussions would suggest the following subjects:

1st.—Elimination of Illegal Practices and Long-standing Trade Abuses.

(A) Secret rebating on tobacco, sugar, cereals, starch and soap.

(B) The abuse of giving discount on lines where Selling Contract says "30 days net" and general discount abuses.

2nd—Justice of Supporting Manufacturers Who are Loyal.

Manufacturers complain that the trade insist on their profits and terms, but that the trade do not in return help them to create a demand. Would suggest a manufacturing committee—one or two members of the trade in each section—who would advise their district of the manufacturers who were loyal or disloyal, and would be of great service to the retailer as well as by insisting on the jobber as the only source of distribution, thereby treating all retailers alike.

Anather grievance that this committee could remedy is that manufacturers adopting the Contract Selling Plan have not in the past carried out their part of the agreement, and have not treated all jobbers alike.

3rd—Uniform Plan of Making up Costs.

Would suggest a committee taking up this matter, as feel it is very important, and if followed out would, to a certain extent, curtail price-cutting.

4th—Brokers Who Sell the Retailer Direct.

A great annoyance to the trade, and also to the legitimate broker, and steps should be taken towards co-operation. The legitimate broker is to the jobber what the traveler is to the retailer.

5th—Prepayment of Freight to Non-Competing Points.

This evil is growing rapidly and should be dealt with.

Gentlemen, I thank you for your patient hearing to these few thoughts which are contained in this paper, and hope sincerely that much good will come out of this convention, and also that at no distant date to see a convention of not only ourselves, but our travelers, who act and carry out our ideas. The honest traveler has had a hard road to hoe for some years past, and many have laid down their sample cases completely discouraged by their inability to earn their living in an honorable way. and that important body of men look to us now to put things right, as they also have been long-suffering and full of patience.

In conclusion will give you a newspaper clipping from Walt Mason, which seems appropriate:

When the sun of your life's going down in the west,
You'll try to recall all your deeds that were best,
For soon at the seat of your Judge you'll appear
To give an account of your stewardship here.

Each day you are doing something that may seem
As smart and as brilliant as any man's scheme;
Perhaps it will gain the applause of the town,
But how will it look when the sun's going down?

Each day you are striving to build up your pile,
And may be resorting to systems of guile,
And when you are asked if you think it is straight,
You have your defence and begin to orate.

There's fierce competition, and men who would win,
Mustn't be too afraid of the shadow of sin,
That logic may do in the loud bustling town,
But how will it do when the sun's going down?

You'd like to be good if you only had time,
But you are so busy pursuing the dime,
That helping your brother or trying to cheer
The grief-stricken pilgrims now journeying there
Is merely an impulse that comes but to fade,
There's only one temple whose idol is "Trade"
And there you may grovel for wealth and renown,
"But how will it seem when the sun's going down?"

Manufacturer and Wholesaler.

Mr. Smye supplemented his address by referring to the trade abuses and by maintaining that the Government should take a hand in enforcing the laws protecting honest business.

"Manufacturers should protect us or we should refuse to handle their goods."

He read an account of an address given in Pennsylvania at a wholesale grocers' convention, showing that the two great troubles in the United States were the cash discount and the cutting of prices or rebating.

Conditions were becoming better over there, due to education more so than from the "big stick." Yet they haven't the laws over there that we enjoy here.

"I hope, gentlemen, you have come here with the idea that things are rotten that that we are to better the existing conditions," concluded Mr. Smye.

W. P. Riley, of Riley, Ramsey Co., Port Arthur, said that all were in favor of better trade conditions, but all should be doers, instead of mere sayers. Prices were being cut in his territory, and he was in favor of not handling any article which did not pay a legitimate profit. The manufacturer realizes that the wholesaler is the legitimate channel to the retailer. He cannot afford to carry accounts such as wholesalers carried, and he hasn't got the selling force. Mr. Riley strongly advised co-operation.

Discrimination of Manufacturers.

R. J. Carson, Kingston, agreed with Mr. Smye that there should be co-operation. Wholesalers were badly paid when expenses were considered such as cost of travelers, losses in bad accounts, etc. They have considerable capital in their businesses and they have to carry customers, while the manufacturer is practically immune from that. Yet many manufacturers do business direct with large retailers and then come round to the wholesaler with all their small orders, which they are afraid to send to the small retailers for fear of loss.

"The manufacturer has no trouble when he sells through the wholesale trade and I cannot see why it is not possible for us to get fair and better profits from him. We should appoint a committee to talk to these manufacturers when they come."

"We have no fault to find with the consumer and retailer," said Hugh Blain, Toronto, "the manufacturing interests are becoming wealthy at the expense of the distributor. We distribute in some cases for nothing or less than nothing. The manufacturer, of course, has a right to distribute his product as he chooses, but if he doesn't chose to place the distribution of his goods on a fair, honest basis, it is our right to refuse to handle them."

Co-operation, he maintained, was necessary; it was not possible for one to refuse.

Should Interest Retail Trade.

When a manufacturer makes an article he considers the price to the consumer. It is important that it should be an article of quality to insure permanent consumption.

"But he should interest the retail trade in its distribution, and therefore should give the retail man a reasonable profit, as well as the wholesaler. If he doesn't he cannot hope to have the interest of the retailer and wholesaler, and therefore the manufacturer has to create an interest in the consumer, retailer and wholesaler.

"The manufacturer has not given the careful consideration to us which we think he should. If he lays down his goods under certain conditions he should enforce them.

Mr. Blain referred to demoralization in the trade through secret rebating. There were honorable wholesale houses who, as well as their travelers, did not deviate from the conditions set down by manufacturers, but the trade was injured by those who allow to be given or give secret rebates. The rebater, of course, suffered injury, as his profits at the end of the year would be less, but there should be some method of enforcing an honest method.

"If we cannot place business on such a basis that we cannot carry it on honestly, we should get out of it," declared Mr. Blain.

The following resolution was then presented, moved by Wm. Logan, Davidson & Hay, Toronto, and seconded by W. Ince, Toronto: That the meeting recognizes the conditions of trade so clearly expressed in this splendid paper by Mr. Smye, and agrees that sound justice should be done by all the trade to the manufacturer who is loyal to both the wholesaler and retailer. It is also the opinion of this meeting that every effort should be put forth by the members of the trade to stop the injurious and dishonest methods all too common in the sale of proprietary lines."

After luncheon at the King Edward Hotel at which the visiting wholesalers were guests of the Toronto section a special paper prepared by H. C. Beckett, Hamilton, was read by F. T. Syme, Hamilton, on account of the former suffering from a cold.

The address which was again read to the manufacturers on Tuesday morning was as follows:

This convention has been promoted and is being conducted for improving the conditions of trade.

First, by making if possible, the retail and wholesale grocers and the manufacturers think logically for the correction of trade evils which exist, and intelligently negotiate for better trade arrangements.

The jobbers and retailers are beginning to think there is something more for them to do than treat their rivals in busias enemies. There never was a time when organization had higher ideals or a stronger desire to elevate business ethics.

You sometimes hear the argument that the fixed price or contract selling plan is bad because it reduces the retailer and wholesaler to dead level—but do not be deceived; people who talk that way are animated by a desire to get the best of somebody. We want to study the situation with a view to benefiting the great majority, not pandering to the selfishness of a few. Good horse sense is what is needed—no use catering to the selfish side of business but let us get down to a foundation that is solid and lasting.

We are making the first attempt when we promote a convention of the three classes of trade—manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers. This kind of a meeting and this kind of educational work suggests possibilities for eliminating trade evils that has never before been presented.

There has come an awakening. Trade inconsistency — irregular channels — double dealing—unstable prices on proprietory lines—individual loose dealing —are too common, and nothing more than conferences, publicity, and a frank heart to heart show-down will work the correction of these growing evils and ensure a cleaner slate.

There are some who have a yellow streak. Such men have little sense of honor in their make up, they always look with pride at any little advantage they think they can gain over their competitors. These men are the ones who delight in breaking away from the legitimate rules of business—these men are price cutters—they bribe the buyer—they have a degree of dishonesty that does not appeal to right thinking people. This policy of deceit practiced in trade has undoubtedly made money for some who have followed it, but they would not have had such license very long if we had years ago such a gathering of manufacturers and merchants as is taking place at this convention.

Subjects of vital importance, subjects that have received all too little consideration at the hands of the three classes of trade, are on the programme for to-day, and it is to be hoped that careful consideration and study will be given these matters

The Contract Selling Plan.

To-day this is a live issue in all lines of trade. Some of the most profitable specialty lines in recent years have been built up by the contract price protective plan, and this plan is engaging the serious attention of many up-to-date manufacturers who have hitherto let the wholesalers' and retailers' prices take care of themselves.

Price protection if wisely carried out and scrupulously adhered to is a means of safeguarding the manufacturer's goods and his reputation against the evil effects of price cutters.

There is far more danger to the manufacturer in catering to a class of price cutters, who depend for their success upon gulling and deceiving consumers, than there is in the contract selling plan.

The contract selling plan ensures the wages justly due to the merchants (both wholesale and retail) for the part they play in keeping the manufacturer's goods prominently before the consumer.

The price protective plan is an evolution in trade made necessary by changed conditions and because of so many food products being put up in a package and extensively advertised by the makers.

A manufacturer who spends thousands and sometimes millions of dollars to attract the attention of the consumer has no means of reaching the consumer except through the recognized channels of trade. The manufacturer who intends that his distributing agents shall make a fair margin for the service they render cannot be sure of this unless he adopts measures that will safeguard against price-cutting and dishonest practices.

Success in marketing any desirable commodity through the trade must be based on knowledge of mercantile conditions with reference to that particular article.

We are here to-day to tell you that the contract selling plan is the only one that in the opinion of the trade will ensure the honest dealer the margin he is justly entitled to.

May Fix His Own Price.

The law gives the manufacturer the right to fix a price at which his goods shall be sold to the consumer, the retailer, and the wholesaler. A regulation fixing a fair profit is not in restraint of trade, and price cutters are liable if they do not maintain the prices fixed by the maker of the goods. Public welfare is first considered and if it be not involved, and the restraint upon one party is not greater than protection to the other party requires, the contract may be sustained.

HUGH BLAIN, TORONTO,

Whose Address on Declarations and the Contract Selling Plan Called for Much Discussion.

Next we come to discrimination in favor of certain retailers and the harmful results thereof.

It must be clear that if a manufacturer places a small percentage of, say, five per cent. of retailers in a position to buy on a more favorable basis than the other ninety-five per cent. the five per cent. are in a position to do and will do and have done untold damage to the ninety-five per cent. We go on record on this subject, and say that if a manufacturer wants to sell five per cent. of the retail trade at the same price as he sells the wholesaler. then he should frankly state his position to the trade and sell all retailers on as favorable a basis as he would the five per cent. It is unfair for a manufacturer to supply a small percentage of retailers with ammunition to blow the heads off the big percentage of retailers. Such a policy is suicidal; it is not a policy that will ensure loyal support and interest in the sale of the manufacturer's goods on the part of the great majority of the retail merchants throughout the country. It is a policy that will ultimately react upon the manufacturer in a manner very serious and detrimental to his business.

The Quantity Price.

Next we come to the consideration of quantity prices and their evil effects.

Theoretically a lower price for a greater quantity looks reasonable, but in practice this has worked out to the disadvantage of the trade. It has put a premium on dishonesty—it has encouraged salesmen to devise secret ways and means to sell small quantities at the large quantity price—it has overloaded the trade much beyond the requirements of their business—it has involved the retailers in financial difficulties—it has resulted in deterioration of many lines of food products because of the length of time they are carried in stock, and in this manner has reacted upon the reputation of the goods, the quality of which when it reaches the consumer is of great importance to the manufacturer.

Theories look well and sound well, but we have got to deal with conditions as we find them, and conditions to-day do not warrant quantity prices beyond any arrangements that will place retailers located in the smaller business centres on as favorable a basis as those in the larger centres.

The same reasons and conditions that make the quantity price on proprietary lines of merchandise a menace to the trade are the very reasons that necessitated the appointment of our Railway Board of Canada. Experience proved that it was an evil hurtful to the best interests of the trade of this country to permit a shipper with five cars of freight to get a better rate than a shipper with one car of freight. The same reason against quantity price will account for the Government inflicting a penalty on any dealer in postage stamps who sells a large quantity at a lower price than a smaller quantity. Our customs, our telegraph service, and all branches of public service that concern the welfare of the public are worked out on a fixed price, and no quantity price basis.

See what an advantage it would be to a favored merchant, and what confusion would arise if an importer of $5,000 worth of a line of merchandise got a discount of, say 10 per cent. in duty because of the quantity, when the smaller importer would have to pay the full price. It only requires your imagination to picture the impossibility of any such plan—and so in a modified form the evil effects of a quantity price in merchandising have grown and grown as new schemes were hatched out by the cunning salesman.

We go on record in saying that if the price for a large quantity is less than it is for a smaller quantity, the fairest way would be to make the selling price of the smaller quantity the same as the price for the larger quantity.

If you can do your business to advantage through the wholesaler, then it is necessary that the honest salesman in the employ of the wholesale house should know with absolute certainty that when he quotes a price to a retailer on a proprietary line that that price is the lowest.

Doubt in the mind of a salesman means uncertainty, hesitancy, and lack of faith in the line of goods he has to offer. Doubt in the mind of a salesman unfits him for his important duty.

Confidence is a great essential to successful salesmanship and no effort should be left undone to gain the confidence of the salesman.

If you are satisfactorily working the selling end of your business through the wholesaler do not forget that the grocery traveler of the wholesaler is indirectly your traveler. We are only your selling agents, but if we are to occupy that position then we will never be satisfied if the traveler directly in the employ of the manufacturer on the road watching the manufacturer's interests, is permitted to offer concessions that the traveller for the grocery house cannot offer.

We know we have a valuable distributing machine. We know you will not use it if you can secure a more effective and cheaper service through the medium of your own selling staff. When we get unreasonable in our demands, the alternative is always open to you in doing your own selling, your own distributing, and your own collecting. If we cannot be of service to you do not engage us. If we are of service to you treat us fairly, confer with us, and work along lines of mutual fair dealing between manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers.

The Cost of Doing Business.

This has an important bearing on the margins we reasonably look for in the distribution and sale of any manufacturer's goods. This is a matter that is receiving much attention from the trade and one with which you should be more familiar so that you might more clearly see the reasonableness of our ideas and efforts to impress upon you our position.

RELATIONS WITH MANUFACTURERS.

The next address was by H. C. Beckett as stated on the program, on "Our relations with manufacturers—what the the judgment teaches." He said:

The benefits to be derived and the results to be accomplished from such an important organization as the wholesale grocers of the Dominion must depend upon the state of development reached by its members in properly appreciating the actual conditions that prevail in the business with which we are identified.

If conditions of the wholesale and retail trade are unsatisfactory—if our business is being destroyed—if our profits are being reduced to the vanishing point —then it must be clear to every one of us that we should "take stock" immediately, analyze the the conditions that prevail, and find out what the trouble is.

In this connection what part of our business is more important than "Our Relations with Manufacturers?"

I feel certain that you will regard the following statement as extraordinary (but I believe it to be a fact nevertheless) viz., That not one manufacturer with whom our relations are satisfactory has taken the initiative in making them so. Everything that has so far been accomplished has been the result of individual and collective effort on the part of the wholesale trade. I refer now particularly to manufacturers of proprietary articles who have been using the wholesale trade for the distributing end of their business.

Gentlemen, you alone must decide how long you are willing to continue handling proprietary lines, the margin upon which is not nearly sufficient to pay the cost of handling, for it is certain the manufacturer is going to use you just as long as you will let him.

If travelers worth two thousand dollars a year each to you were willing to work for one thousand dollars each, the chances are ninety-five per cent. of the trade would accept their services at the lower rate and let the traveler suffer and do the worrying.

That is just about the position in which we find ourselves to-day with many manufacturers. We are rendering them a service that in many cases they could not duplicate at double the present cost to themselves, and so long as the trade quietly accepts the position of salesman and distributor, practically guaranteeing the payment of all accounts (since the wholesaler takes all risk of losses) just so long will advantage be taken to use us. Now, gentlemen, ask yourselves the question, "Has the manufacturer or the consumer any claim upon us that we should perform this service for nothing?"

High Cost of Living.

In the press appear from time to time an article or editorial on the high cost of living, and the matter is considered of sufficient importance for Government investigation. The grocers, both wholesale and retail, are looked upon as having a share in this, but rest assured that no wholesale grocer need feel alarmed that any investigation of his percentage of net profits would show that he had any large part in it. While food is higher in price it is principally in meats, and farm and dairy products, a matter over which neither the manufacturer nor the wholesaler has any control. Rents, fuel, clothing, and everything of that nature have increased largely whilst sugars, teas, and so forth have decreased very much in the last twenty years. A careful investigation of the products handled by the wholesale grocer, covering a period of twenty-five years will show and does show that prices are, on the average, to-day considerably lower than they have been during that period.

This looks like a reasonable argument in favor of our claim that we are the cheapest and most effective medium of distribution, but are we not carrying our good nature too far—is not the manufacturer riding the willing morse to death? It is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when every man in the grocery trade will refuse under normal conditions to handle the product of any manufacturer unless on a basis that will show something at least over the cost of doing business. The wholesaler has a legal right to a fair profit and to have his business protected and no manufacturer can force us to sell his goods at a loss to ourselves by refusing to give us a reasonable profit, or having given it, to place the people we depend on for a living in a position to undersell us or destroy our trade.

What the Judgment Teaches.

The judgment in the Guild suit teaches us that confined to proper limits we have the right to protect our interests, and that efforts in that direction are laudable. In a recent judgment the court made use of these words: "This is the age of association and unions in all departments of labor and business for mutual benefit and protection. Confined to proper limits, both as to ends and means, they are not only lawful but laudable."—"The right of a combination of dealers to advance their own interests by mutually agreeing that they would not deal with any manufacturer who should sell directly to their customers has been broadly upheld."

The court says we have the right to protect ourselves against persons who either openly or by some ingenious device aim to belong to the wholesale trade and at the same time by secret arrangements with retailers or by owning retail stores, injuriously affect and demoralize the trade not only of the wholesaler but of the retailer.

It is perfectly clear that we have a legal and lawful right to protect our own interests, even, if in doing so, some rival trading shall be rendered unprofitable by the more favorable terms we have to offer.

In the case of King vs. Gage the court holds: "That traders may legally organize for the protection and advancement of their own interests, provided the interests of the public are not to be unduly impaired," and that "a regulation fixing a fair price is not a restraint of trade if it appears that such profit is a fair and reasonable one."

This seems to be a common sense view and one that must surely strike any reasonably inclined person or business man as being fair.

Without taking up too much of the valuable time of this meeting I have endeavored to make it clear that if we want to improve conditions in our business we must do something—we must be active in looking after our interests—don't imagine that better profits will come to us if we drift aimlessly upon a sea of indifference—experience has taught us that if we are willing to work for half pay—if we are willing to permit dishonest practices in business—if we are willing to permit discrimination favorable to a few retailers at the expense of the many—these practices that have prevailed in the past will continue.

It is up to the trade to point out to the manufacturer any grievances we may have and endeavor to find a remedy. If we ask anything reasonable and the manufacturer is not prepared to grant our request, then it is up to the trade to take a united stand in discontinuing the sale of a line that will not cover the cost of distribution. If the wholesalers are unable to make a living profit they are entitled to demand better terms from the manufacturer and there is nothing illegal in their doing so. The evil of combinations lies in the injury to trade or business of others by unlawful means, but it is perfectly legal for any class of men to unite for self preservation even if prices are thereby increased.

No manufacturer uses our distributing machinery for any other reason than that it pay him to do so, and if our requests were unreasonable no manufacturer would regard us as the cheapest medium of distribution.

The alternative of the manufacturer employing his own salesmen, taking chances of losses, and all other expenses incidental to dealing in small quantities direct with the retail trade, is always open to the manufacturer—so you see, there can be no restraint of trade—except that it will cost the manufacturer more to deal direct with the retailer and he will make a correspondingly smaller profit on his output, or charge more for his products which will then injuriously affect the consumer.

In this connection an excellent article appeared some time ago in the Los Angeles Commercial Bulletin concerning the advertising and distributing of goods by manufacturers. The writer says: "If a manufacturer expects his products to take a permanent stand upon the market, he must reckon with two elements of trade—the wholesaler and the retailer—as well as the consumer. The manufacturer who is wise will make his peace and friendship with both alike and will share with each a reasonable profit in payment for their share in marketing the manufacturer's wares.

"The wisest students of the art of merchandising to-day have agreed that the true tide of success lies along the logical channel of the wholesaler and retailer. Here and there an eddy which cuts out one or both may reach its goal, but the great, deep, irresistible tide runs smoothly in the recognized channels, and a cargo on such a stream will reach its goal more safely and surely than it will when threatened by rocks of antagonism.

"The manufacturer who can win the co-operation of the wholesaler need have no concern about the fate of his goods. The wholesaler with his corps of salesmen, his economical and co-operative facilities for handling many lines, his knowledge of local conditions, his recognized influence with the retailers, the obligations perhaps which the retailer owes to the wholesaler for past favors, his knowledge of financial circumstances—all these, and more, are the possession of the manufacturer who will win to his cause the wholesaler."

Wholesaler Next to Retailer.

The writer of that article has not only given a correct and clear presentation of our relations with manufacturers, but he makes it clear that next to the retailer, the friendship of the wholesaler is one of the most valuable assets any manufacturer can have.

H. C. BECKETT, HAMILTON,

Who Delivered an Address on "Our Relations With Manufacturers—What the Judgment Teaches.

Think, gentlemen, what does it mean to a manufacturer to secure the services of over three hundred and seventy-five experienced grocery salesmen personally acquainted with every retail grocer in the Province of Ontario? What does it mean to the manufacturer to be able to cover almost every town in this Province every fourteen days with nearly four hundred salesmen, and only pay for this service on a commission basis? In giving you the figures of the number of grocery salesmen I am not exaggerating; I have personally communicated with nearly every wholesale grocery house in the province and they have kindly furnished me with figures giving the number of their salesmen.

To keep this army of salesmen properly posted there is a manager for at least every ten men; then there are the warehousing facilities of a wholesale firm, the convenience of prompt delivery to the retail merchants, and many other advantages that it would be absolutely impossible for the manufacturer going direct to the retail trade to duplicate. This immense selling machine costs millions of dollars to operate. The average cost of a salesman, including his salary and traveling expenses, is at least six dollars per day, or over twenty-five hundred dollars per day in the aggregate. The money invested by the legitimate wholesale grocery trade in the Province of Ontario exceeds nine million dollars. The good will of this splendidly organized selling agency is worth more to the manufacturer than he cares to admit or perhaps realizes.

To Prevent Trade Abuses.

The abuses in trade can be prevented by the manufacturer because he has the right to attach any conditions he may deem fit or necessary when engaging a wholesaler as his selling agent. All we ask is that the wholesale trade shall be placed on a uniform selling level. The manufacturer can fix his own price at which we shall sell, but the price should be uniform and our customers should not be employed by the manufacturer to destroy our trade.

If he permits the wholesaler and the wholesaler's salemen to destroy or reduce the margin that he, the manufacturer, intends the wholsaler should have, by cutting the price so that the line becomes unprofitable, then it is clear the price cutter is an injury or a stumbling block in the way of the manufacturer's success. We cannot compete with the contract breaker, and the manufacturer should know that we cannot handle his goods if he employs contract breakers and price cutters in direct opposition to our business. The business of the country must stand on an honest basis and the manufacturer who enables dishonest men to compete with us in depriving us of our means of existence and unfairly discriminating against us.

If the manufacturer secretly allows a large retailer a concession or special price that is not enjoyed by all retailers, then the manufacturer is acting unfairly to the large majority of retailers, he is destroying the business of the wholesaler, and the majority of the retailers, and is not entitled to the support of either wholesaler or retailer.

The business of the wholesaler is destroyed because the manufacturer sells at a price the wholesale could not compete with, and the business of the majority of the retailers is destroyed because they cannot successfully compete with those retail merchants who are placed by the manufacturer on a favored basis.

In considering our relations with manufacturers and the unsatisfactory conditions that prevail in handling a large portion of our business, it will not be surprising to find that comparatively little attention has in the past been given by the trade to this very vital matter.

Co-operation Necessary.

Commerce is growing, trade is ever finding new methods that must be applied to suit the exigencies of the age in which we live. The question for consideration is, are we alive to present day conditions —are we doing all we can to solve the difficulties which we so frequently run across—do we appreciate the necessity of getting more closely in touch with each other and having business talks with manufacturers—can we help the retailer—if so, why don't we make a greater effort.

These results cannot be obtained by individual effort. There must be united action, good faith, and unanimity on our part, else we accomplish nothing. We too have something to say regarding terms, and if we agree to act as agents, the arrangement cannot be one-sided. Every agent has the right to dictate his terms as well as the man who employs him. The actions of this association have always been directed not to the protection of the Guilds, but to the protection of the individual members who act as agents for the producer.

It is true that some retailers do not quite appreciate the value of the work done by this association, but this to a great extent is due to misrepresentation and will continue until the gradual development now taking place in the minds of the ill-informed is more complete. In the meantime, let us work zealously to overcome obstacles and always keep in mind that right is might and will ultimately prevail.

The following resolution moved by J. H. Gilmour, of Gilmour & Co., Brockville, Ont., and seconded by T. B. Escott. of London, was carried unanimously:

> "That this convention heartily endorses the attitude (as set forth in the paper presented at this meeting on "Our Relations with Manufacturers." that the wholesalers should take in dealing with manufacturers who will not reasonably share with the wholesaler a fair remuneration for the service rendered, and that immediate steps be taken at this convention to appoint committees to interview manufacturers (whose goods the members of this Exchange are selling on a margin too small to cover selling expenses) with a view to a more reasonable working margin.
> "And that this meeting unanimously endorse the proposal made by Mr. Beckett, that manufacturers be asked to decline any wholesaler which does not keep the selling agreement."

Contract Selling Plan.

"Declarations: Their Uses and Importance," was the question handled by Hugh Blain in the next address. Mr. Blain said:

"In one of the earlier accounts of Creation in the inspired volume we are told that God created the heavens and the earth and all things therein, including our first parents, who were placed in the Garden of Eden and were commanded not to eat of the apple. The serpent induced the weaker of the two to disobey. Adam also yielded to temptation and for their disobedience both were justly punished.

"Ever since, cunning serpents have been actively at work inducing the weak to disobey. The expulsion of Adam and Eve from the garden did not cancel God's right to control and this right has been freely admitted ever since and will continue so as long as we are recognized as his people.

"The same principle has been extended to his creatures. Ownership has always carried with it the right of control. Without such a right, human affairs would fall into chaos. With it, order is established, system is made possible and society is organized and conducted in the interests of the human family, each member admitting the rights of the other.

"In the interests of the public, ownership is variously treated. Some things of their very essence are the property of the individual in common with all others. Some things the individual is permitted to own only upon stipulated conditions. while some things he is permitted to own exclusively and unconditionally. Wherever exclusive and unconditional ownership is admitted, the right to control is fully conceded. There can be no more striking or real instance of absolute ownership than in the case of the producer or manufacturer. The article he makes is his own and he has the undoubted right to adopt the plan he thinks is best in placing it on the market. He has the right to make the conditions upon which it will reach the consumer and therefore has the right, if he deems it to be in his interest, to adopt what is known as the 'Contract Plan' for the sale of goods by which he can compel the wholesale distributor and the retail distributor to sell at stipulated prices and terms. That he has this right is abundantly established by numerous decisions of the courts, with which you are now more or less familiar.

Admitting then, in the first place, that the manufacturer has the right and in view of what I have said, and the decisions of the court, this must be admitted, and in the second place that he has decided to adopt the 'Contract Selling Plan,' let us consider how this contract can be best enforced.

His Authorities for Declarations.

"In the conduct of human affairs a promise has been found to be most binding when made under oath. The King takes his oath of office to rule and govern his people. The Premier and his Cabinet assume office by taking an obligation as to the management of the affairs of the state. The Parliament is formed by the members swearing to a proper performance of their duties. Every official in the service of the empire, from the King down to the humblest in the state, has to promise under oath to properly perform his duties. Each profession requires its members to swear to a correct observance of its rules and regulations. Judges. sheriffs, registrars, lawyers, doctors, preachers and all others who have positions of trust or special privileges conferred upon them yield a ready obedience to their duties and promise under oath to faithfully perform them. Corporations working under legan sanction have to make their reports to the Government and give such details concerning their business as the Government may require, to show that they are not violating the law, and this report is given under oath. Voluntary organizations, when properly constituted, impose the most binding obligations upon their members. Free Masons, Oddfellows, Orangemen, Foresters and other friendly and fraternal societies all find it necessary to have allegiance sworn to under oath. All commissions having important business to do take evidence in the same way under oath. Indeed, to take evidence in any other form would discredit and destroy the usefulness of the commission, no matter how constituted. The most trivial dispute in the affairs of life are settled in accordance with sworn testimony.

Suggestions From a Traveler.

"One of our travelers who has always been anxious to do a clean, honest business, suggested to me that every traveler in any way connected with the carrying out of a business agreement, before going on the road should be required to take an obligation to faithfully observe the conditions imposed, just as an official who has to perform important duties before he is installed in office. takes an obligation to faithfully and honestly discharge the duties required of him.

"I was deeply impressed with this suggestion and persuaded that it would have a deterrent and elevating influence if it were generally known that everyone in any way responsible for carrying out an agreement had taken such an obligation. The buyer would then hesitate before suggesting or accepting any proposal which he knew was contrary to the seller's obligation and the salesman would shrink from proposing or giving what he and the buyer both knew was contrary to the declaration he had taken.

"Where we agree to do business in the ordinary way of trade with stated conditions imposed has been one of the few exceptions to this almost universal practice.

"What then are the inferences we must draw from a proper consideration of these facts? In the first place, that wherever important matters are to be dealt with, they, as a rule, are surrounded with the safeguards of a declaration as to their faithful performance. and in the second place, that business transactions to be conducted under agreed conditions have not been recognized as of sufficient importance to be upheld with the much-needed declaration for their support. Experience has demonstrated that a solemn obligation commands the greatest degree of care and attention and the fullest measure of observance. Reflect for a moment on what would be the result if these all important concerns of life were not surrounded by the safeguards I have endeavored to explain. What confidence would we have in the everyday affairs of life? We would be appalled with the contemplation of the conditions of human affairs under such circumstances.

Secret Commissions Act.

"The position is emphasized by a recent addition by the Dominion Parliament to the Criminal Code, and it is gratifying to know that our legislators have at last recognized the importance of having business actually conducted as it is openly represented and understood to be conducted by the passage of an Act to prevent the giving or receiving of a secret commission. The Act is as follows:

"'Everyone is guilty of an offence and liable upon conviction on indictment to two years' imprisonment, or to a fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars, or to both, and, upon summary conviction, to imprisonment for six months, with or without hard labor, or to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or to both, who,

"'(a) being an agent. corruptly accepts or obtained, or agrees to accept or attempt to obtain, from any person for himself or for any other person, any gift or consideration as an inducement or reward for doing or forbearing to do, or for having after the passing of this Act done or forborne to do, any act relating to his principal's affairs or business or for showing or forbearing to show favor or disfavor to any person with relation to his prinicipal's affairs or business; or,

"'(b) corruptly gives or agrees to give or offers any gift or consideration to any agent as an inducement or reward or consideration to such agent for doing or forbearing to do, or for having after the passing of this Act done or forborne to do, any act relating to his principal's affairs or business, or for showing or forbearing to show favor or disfavor to any person with relation to his principal's affairs or business: or

"'(c) knowing gives to any agent. or, being an agent, knowingly uses with intent to deceive his principal. any receipt, account, or other document in respect of which the principal is interested and which contains any statement which is false or erroneous or defective in any material particular, and which, to his knowledge, is intended to mislead the principal.

"(d) Every person who is a party or knowingly privy to any offence under this Act shall be guilty of such offence and shall be liable upon conviction to punishment hereinbefore provided for by this section.

"'The last clause was an amendment to the original bill which passed the Senate on March 31st, 1909. After being amended it was sent back to the House of Commons and agreed to on April 21st, and was finally sanctioned by the Senate.'

"This Act is a strong additional safeguard to square business dealings and when taken in connection with the form of declaration I have outlined, should establish a solid foundation on which to build a superstructure of business honesty and integrity. It surely cannot be said in this enlightened period of our history that such a declaration is undignified or improper. It has the highest authority for its adoption and has been dignified with acceptance by the best elements in every walk in life. We hold that truth in its purity in a mere statement should be as binding as the most solemn obligation, and it is by the lover of truth.

T. B. ESCOTT, LONDON,

Not all Lovers of Truth.

"At the same time we must admit that everyone is not a lover of truth, and where an obligation under oath differs from a mere statement is that if false the one is punishable by law while the other is not. Where the possibility of punishment exists even the depraved will hesitate before incurring the danger. How much more then will the recognized respectable person hesitate before swearing falsely when he knows the offence is criminal and subject to punishment, and how much more still will he hesitate when he realizes that others as well as himself know that the declaration is false and that he is liable to punishment? Perjury is a serious crime and I venture to say that there are few in the respectable walks of business life who will deliberately place themselves in this despicable and dangerous position. It must also be borne in mind that the person who accepts a secret rebate or commission is equally liable, and few merchants, either wholesale or retail, when they come to understand the law, will care to put themselves in the criminal classes.

"I am, therefore, firmly persuaded that the declaration, if used wisely, in connection with the 'Contract Selling Plan,' will practically enforce a just and rigid observance of the manufacturer's prices and terms by the wholesale distributors. The judicious use of the declaration is the practical question which demands the best consideration of the manufacturers and wholesaler. It is important that the individual who violates a contract or is supposed to have violated a contract should be required to give an explicit denial under oath and a refusal to do so should be considered an admission of guilt. If the individual who violates the agreement be an agent, then the firm employing him should be required, if considered necessary, to make a declaration applicable to the case.

"The manufacturer should have the right whenever and as often as he may deem it expedient to call upon the distributor or anyone in his employ, or both, or as many as he may determine, to make one or more declarations in such terms as he may require. While it may be advisable to have a general declaration at stated periods covering the general features involved in an agreement it will also be necessary when a complaint is made to have a special declaration dealing in terms sufficiently definite to cover the alleged offence.

Would Improve Business Ethics.

"I am satisfied that with such a system as I have outlined these immoral practices which have been so prevalent in business, will be almost entirely eliminated and the standard of business ethics will be greatly improved. It must be admitted by everyone having even a superficial knowledge of these conditions that business is seriously demoralized and that it is most humiliating to be connected with a line of trade where such methods are practised. It is, therefore, the obvious duty of everyone immediately interested in these transactions to do all they can to abolish this growing evil. We would each continue to do our fair share of trade and competition would be had along healthy business lines.

"A young man going out on the road for the first time as salesman would feel that sterling business ability was necessary instead of secret concessions involving the meanest kind of dishonesty. Does it not bring a blush of shame to the cheek of a wholesale man when he thinks of sending a traveler out on the road to solicit business under such a system of fraudulent deception? The motive which has caused this lamentable demoralization has been a desire to do more business and make more money, but when analyzed carefully will be found to be mistaken cupidity. Remember that 'corruption wins not more than honesty.' Even those who indulge most freely in the practice do not as a rule profit by it in the end and it is most unfair to the honest houses.

"If, however, such practice did accumulate wealth, there are surely other aims in life beside making money. Let all of us act fairly towards each other and towards our customers. Let us elevate the standard of business morals. To quote from Shakespeare:

" 'By Jove, I am not covetous for gold, nor care I who doth feed upon my cost; it yearns me not if men my garments wear; such outward things dwell not in my desires; but if it be a sin to covet honor, I am the most offending soul alive.'

"Let such inspiring words animate us with higher ideals. Let us decide to be ourselves and keep those in our employ honest men. We will then raise the wholesale grocery business to a position of dignity as well as importance and those connected with it will be an honor to the country in which they live and leave a name behind them that their family and friends can fondly cherish."

Mr. Blaiu read a letter from E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., who had read his paper, and the lawyer stated that the plan outlined by him (Mr. Blain) was the only one feasible.

T. B. Escott, London, thought that a man should conduct a grocery business as honestly as a man preaching the gospel—it should be on just as high a plane.

W. G. Craig lamented the fact that young men when going out to sell goods for a wholesale house are told that those goods can be bought from some one else for less money, when that same young man knows that other houses are not supposed to cut prices or rebate on those goods.

"Your character and my character," he said, "are worth more to us than all the sugar on earth." It was too bad that men in commerce were not all honest.

Thos. Kinnear, Toronto, said that the whole spirit of Mr. Blain's paper was the honest man's sentiment. At one time he had opposed such sentiments, but if men are inclined to do wrong it was better to have the oath which all men in trust are obliged to take. He was surprised to hear of reports, which in view of their source were apparently correct, that some travelers who have been guilty of secret rebating have taken the declaration. It would be a good thing if every man could be kept to the right prices, and he maintained that it was only fools who cut, as there was not an article produced on which wholesalers got much more than running expenses.

Such methods might steal away a customer, but he did not think that that customer would have much faith in a traveler or house who sold him the goods. Cutting was usually done on goods which showed little profits and he advised honest houses to sell the profitable goods and they would come out better in the end than if they cut prices. His experience was that honesty was the best policy, and he would stand always for honesty and the keeping of agreements. The fact that a traveler cut prices was an evidence of his inability to get the business.

"You'll find out at the end of the year," maintained Mr. Kinnear, "that if you keep from cutting prices you'll be in pocket."

A. G. Oliver, Geo. Foster & Sons, Brantford, endorsed the sentiments of Mr. Kinnear. So far as he was concerned, he thought the suggestions made by Mr. Blain should be fallen in with by all members of the Exchange.

Found Charges to be Roorbachs.

John. Sloan, Toronto, thought that Mr. Blain put too much stress on affidavits. If he had a traveler whose word he could not respect he would not respect his oath. He thought highly of the method prevailing in Hamilton. There when a charge against a man was made, a visit was paid to that man and he was talked to. He had himself tried the same thing in Toronto, and in nine times out of ten he found the charges were "roorbachs." He believed in high ideals, but he also believed in coming down to practical facts.

J. H. Gilmour, Brockville, wanted to know if Mr. Blain's method was to cover the whole Dominion, as in eastern Ontario travelers from Quebec come in competition with Ontario salesmen, and would be free from making affidavits, while the Ontario travelers would be forced to make them..

Mr. Blain, in answer, said that likely the matter would be taken up at the Dominion convention, but at present it was before the Ontario convention. If an agreement was made it was only right that some guarantee should be given by wholesalers, and he supposed that Quebec men would also have to make affidavits. We must deal fair with the manufacturers. He would rather see a traveler lose an order and retain his honor than see him, by passing a $5 bill, come away with a big order and thereby place himself under the thumb of any buyer.

R. J. Carson, Kingston, said that the question was a matter for manufacturers to take up with those who sell his goods. There were retail merchants enjoying the same privileges as wholesalers, and there was no method of bringing them to time except through the manufacturer. To make the Contract Selling Plan operative it must be general.

H. C. Beckett, Hamilton, stated that each manufacturer of a proprietary article would have to be dealt with separately. It did not matter then where a manufacturer was situated. If in Montreal, the Contract Selling Plan he made would apply to everybody in all provinces of Canada. It was not the intention to have Quebec manufacturers come into Ontario and sell any differently to what they do in Quebec—it was for each manufacturer to deal the same with all jobbers. Wholesalers can go to the manufacturer and get such a contract. Then if a wholesale house or its representative is alleged to have given a secret rebate, say in tobacco—when the price has been agreed upon by that wholesaler or traveler—the manufacturer is in a position to put the declaration to the traveler, and if necessary to the wholesaler, and thereby clear up the matter.

Geo. E. Bristol, Hamilton, referred to Mr. Kinnear's statement that some travelers had taken a false affidavit. If that were true, it was only what was found in everyday life all the time, he said. Travelers on the road, however, when he was one of them some years ago, wouldn't do it.

"Why is the whole business of the country and in the courts done upon oath?" asked Mr. Bristol. He did not think there were ten men who would agree with Mr. Sloan in his contention. Mr. Sloan had referred to the Hamilton system. It was true wholesalers there were intimate. Nevertheless, they had their own spats, but had always tried to thrash them out and be fair.

Since the passing of the Secret Commissions Act, making secret rebates illegal, there had been some wonderful changes in business in some lines. These improvements were due to this Act. He cited cases where wholesalers had got back customers they had years ago since the passing of this Act.

H. T. Wilson, Groceries Limited, Toronto, thought that wholesalers should agree not to again employ a traveler who was caught cutting.

A. H. Pafford, Davidson & Hay, Toronto, stated that when a manufacturer discovered an alleged breach of the Secret Commissions Act and Contract Selling Plan, he was bound to get an affidavit or cut off the house from his goods. To decide at the convention, however, to cut off a manufacturer who was disloyal to the wholesaler might weaken the stand of those at the convention with that manufacturer, because all the wholesalers were not present.

Mr. Pafford also told of the benficial effects of the Secret Commissions Act, but declared that there were firms in Toronto who had never posted their travelers on the passing of it for weeks and months after it was circulated.

Geo. E. Bristol did not think it would weaken the position of the wholesalers to decide to cut off disloyal manufacturers. The gathering was too large and the Ontario wholesale trade was too well represented for that. A decision from such a number would have a wonderful effect on every manufacturer.

"I agree to say right now," he said, "that I will give an affidavit if nobody else did."

He spoke of the old sugar agreement, which had been broken. But it was because refiners said, and probably rightly, too, they would not agree to it simply because they were not certain of the law. That now is all cleared away.

Col. Smith, London, thought that the affidavit idea was all right, and that it was practically a necessity.

Chas, Parsons, Parsons & Brown, Toronto, considered that the trade would be up against quite a proposition if every traveler, as well as wholesaler, had to sign an agreement to keep to prices and obey the contract. The idea, anyway, of cutting prices on proprietary articles was becoming a thing of the past, and he knew some travelers who rather than take such a declaration would give up their jobs.

Geo. E. Britol pointed out here that the declaration was only to be used when a manufacturer called upon a traveler to take it in order to clear up an accusation against him—it didn't mean that a traveler will always have to take it.

Jno. Sloan remarked that it seemed to him the trade was getting into too many agreements.

F. R. Parnell, of W. H. Merriman & Co., St. Catharines, was in sympathy with Mr. Blain's paper, After the passing of the Secret Commissions Act conditions for a time were much better than in the old period. But recently his travelers had run into rebate cases every week, but not to the same extent as formerly.

Jno. Marr, Elliott, Marr & Co., London, felt that a man's word ought to be sufficient.

J. Medland, Toronto, said that Toronto wholesalers would make more progress by co-operation. If wholesalers could get together and have their travelers present to listen to addresses, something useful could be done. He would be quite willing to co-operate with the rest.

A. D. Lumsden, of Lumsden Bros., Hamilton, stated that he heartily sympathized with the idea of declarations.

J. Howard Simpson, Guelph, endorsed every word of the paper read by Mr. Blain, and speaking for his house, he would agree with any resolutions passed.

Samuel Vila, Jas. Turner & Co., Hamilton, would undertake to promise on his own behalf, as well as other members of his house, and travelers, that affidavits would be made. He did not think anyone should or would object.

W. P. Byrnes, Collingwood, was in hearty accord with Mr. Bristol, as was also Mr. McLaughlin, Owen Sound, for whom Mr. Byrnes spoke as well.

Wm. Turnbull, Adams & Co., London, believed that a good deal could be accomplished by getting the oath. There was a great advantage gained from the Secret Commissions Act, and if there were a punishment under the Act there would be a great improvement in the grocery trade.

A diversion was made from the question for a few minutes, while H. N. Kittson, Hamilton, read his paper on "Cost of Doing Business."

After that Mr. Bristol again took up the matter of a resolution. He wanted, he said, to see something actually done and not merely to see a resolution passed favoring Mr. Blain's paper.

"We want," he said, "to eliminate all the bad features of trade and strengthen the backs of both wholesaler and manufacturer."

He asked H. C. Beckett and T. B. Escott, mover and seconder of a resolution commending Mr. Blain's paper, to allow of the original motion being added to and differently worded, and after a slight debate, participated in by Mr. Beckett, Mr. Bristol and the chairman, the following resolution was put to a standing vote, and carried unanimously:

> "That this convention is under a deep sense of appreciation and gratitude to Hugh Blain for the timely and most thorough manner in which he has set forth to the trade of this country the importance and great value to the trade of declarations in business, and that a universal adoption of the principles laid down in his able paper will do more to uplift the morals of trade than any suggestion so far made. That this meeting unanimously endorse and agree for our respective firms that we will take and have our employes take an affidavit when called on by the manufacturers."

Cost of Doing Business.

In his address on "The Cost of Doing Business," H. N. Kittson, of W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, referred first to a paper on this subject, which had been read in Quebec in June, 1908, by Mr. Wollaston. While a comparatively short time has intervened since that paper was submitted, yet in view of the vital relation in which the cost of doing business stands to the ultimate profit of any business, he thought every opportunity should be taken advantage of to throw as much light as possible on this subject.

It may be assumed that the increased cost of doing business coincides with and keeps pace with the increased cost of living. The serious problem is to devise means to keep down expenses. In 101 items which enter into the cost of doing business in the grocery trade there is scarcely an item that does not show a substantial increase on former outlay. The increased cost of eggs, butter, bacon, beef, rents, traveling expenses, follow as a consequence of the adoption of local option in some sections. Increased insurance rates, more frequent service given by the travelers of wholesale houses to the retail trade also operate to bring up seriously the ratio of the cost of doing business to the volume or turn-over.

It would be calculated to throw light on the cost of doing business if the wholesale trade would agree to appoint some trustworthy accountant who would act in a confidential capacity to obtain from every wholesale house a memorandum, giving its total volume of business and a statement of the various items of expense of such business—the percentage which each item of expense bears to sales of each house respectively could be ascertained. In that way each house could know what was the lowest ratio of expense under any one item or heading any house had reached. House A might get their average charges down to a lower point than any other house. House B might get their ratio of traveling expenses down to a lower point than any other house. and so on. The sum of the lowest ratios would be the ideal minimum cost.

Mr. Kittson then took up the various items of expense, such as cartage, insurance, salaries of principals, losses by bad debts, travelers' expenses, office staffs, telephones, telegraphs, rentals, taxes, water rates, repairs, light bills, subscriptions to benevolent objects, postage, stationery, fuel, advertising, as well as several others, including samples to retailers, shrinkage in weight, etc.

A resolution was passed commending Mr. Kittson for his paper. A. H. Pafford, Geo. E. Bristol, H. C. Beckett and Thos. Kinnear spoke to the motion, Mr. Pafford urging the appointment of a committee to work along the lines suggested by Mr. Kittson's paper and get information on the subject for members of the Exchange.

Other Resolutions Passed.

F. T. Smye read a resolution dealing with the Contract Selling Plan. W. P. Byrnes stood sponsor for the motion, which was seconded by W. P. Riley. The resolution was carried. It reads as follows:

> "That in the opinion of this convention the Contract Selling Plan (or price protective plan as it is sometimes called) on proprietary articles, is the only means of safeguarding a manufacturer's goods against the evil effects of price-cutting and dishonest practices, and that when such selling contracts are adopted by the manufacturers a provision should be made therein for a declaration to be given by any salesman when called upon, as is so admirably set forth in the address by Mr. Blain on "Declarations: Their Uses and Importance."

Another resolution, proposed by Mr. Carson, dealt with quantity prices and their evil effects. It was worded as follows:

"That years of experience in connection with the quantity price has proved to this convention that the method is hurtful to the best interests of the retail trade, as any method that is calculated to place the buyer of a large quantity in a position to injuriously affect the trade of the great majority of the retailers of this country is not in the interests of the trade in general."

It was carried unanimously.

M. S. Sutherland moved, seconded by Jno. Marr,

"That the action of some manufacturers in discriminating in their prices and discounts on their proprietary articles to favored retailers is a menace and a direct injury to the large majority of the retail trade of this province, and that the manufacturers be requested to give this matter their serious consideration, with a view to treating all of the retail trade in a fair manner."—Carried.

Interest of the Retailer.

The last subject of the afternoon was John Dillon's (of A. M. Smith & Co., London) paper on "How to Preserve the Interest of the Retail Trade." In Mr. Dillon's absence the paper was read by Col. Smith. It was as follows:

"I have been asked to introduce the subject, "How to Preserve the Interests of the Retail Trade." I regret that this subject is not in better hands, as it is most important and I feel that I cannot do it justice, but I hope that the discussion which will follow will bring out good results.

"Self-preservation is one of the first laws of nature, and as the retailer's interests are our interests, he is necessary to us and in fact part of us. How to better the conditions of the retailer should be one of the first considerations of the wholesaler. For some years past the wholesale trade has been working along this line. This meeting is an evidence of that. The natural channel of distribution is from the manufacturer through the wholesaler to the retailer. The retail grocer is the most necessary, the most used and the most abused of all dealers. In the present day, through competition, his expenses have been unavoidably greatly increased. In the cities we find that it is a general practice for him to solicit orders, as well as to deliver the goods, and in towns and villages competition has caused him to pay exorbibant prices for produce.

"The retail grocer is also, through common practice, one of the greatest philanthropists of the day. He distributes more charity than any millionaire. If through sickness or other cause the head of the house loses his position, the grocer is called upon to supply goods on credit. He really feels at the time that he should not do it, but he argues with himself, 'I cannot see these people starve.' I feel quite satisfied that there is not a retail merchant in our province who has not numerous records such as this, and they are costing thousands of dollars. This is another reason why he should be protected and conditions improved.

To Handle Profitable Goods.

"Now, it is an easy matter to criticize, but what we want is to offer some remedies. I think, in the first place, we should start with our travelers, and get them to persuade our customers to buy and handle profitable goods, not to be looking for cheap lines. Invariably my experience has been that the selling of these cheap goods displaces lines on which there would be a profit and in the end there is a certain amount left over, which is often sold at a sacrifice, practically absorbing all the profit, whereas if the merchant had saved his energy and used his newspaper for a little judicious advertising I am satisfied he would have been farther ahead. Cutting prices, especially of proprietary articles or staples, is a very dangerous and unnecessary way of getting business. I think we should post our travelers on legislation respecting trade and commerce, especially the Secret Commissions Act. He should be familiar with this so as to impart the same to his customers. They would not be misled into transacting business along immoral lines. Another thing, every traveler should be familiar with the average cost of doing business, and in conversation with his customer he should be an educating medium in this respect.

"With reference to some of the remedies. We should avoid handling any lines of proprietary articles that do not pay a fair margin and we should get the co-operation of the retailers. If the manufacturer wants to put a line of goods on the market to make himself a good fellow with the consumer at the expense of the trade, let him go to the consumer and pay all the expenses himself.

The Quantity Price Again.

"Another evil is the quantity price. This is invariably abused and it gives a few retailers an advantage over the many. A line of demarkation between the wholesaler and the retailer should be drawn at the retail counter. Merchants buying together in quantities to get the price is a mistake, as it gives perhaps the small man, who is a cutter, the opportunity to cut. We feel that if there was more confidence among the retailers, and if they consulted with one another, a good deal of unnecessary cutting could be avoided. This selling of ten-cent lines at three for a quarter, and buying goods at 50c per dozen to sell at 5c, and $1 to sell at 10c, should be entirely done away with. In talking to several of the retailers I find that a conservative estimate of the cost of doing their business is about twenty per cent. and surely they are entitled to some small profit for their investments and their services. In the present day there is a large demand for package goods. Looking at this from a sanitary standpoint of view I think it is right. It preserves food from dust, not only in the store, but in transit from the retailer to the consumer. But many of these goods do not yield the cost of handling.

"I hope there will be a full discussion."

On the conclusion of the address, F. T. Smye moved, seconded by Geo. E. Bristol,

"That John Dillon's paper, presented by Col. Smith, on "How to Preserve the Interests of the Retail Trade," be gratefully received and thoughtfully considered and placed on record in the minutes of this meeting for reference."

Day With Manufacturers.

President Craig, on business being resumed on Tuesday morning, pointed to the fact that out of 71 manufacturers invited to the convention there were 60 acceptances—a large percentage, which was gratifying.

F. T. Smye then read again the special paper of H. C. Beckett, giving his ideas on the unfair methods which some manufacturers employ and suggesting remedies. The foregoing resolutions were also read to acquaint the manufacturers with what had been done the previous day.

Mr. Smye pointed out that out of 52 Ontario wholesalers invited 45 were represented. "Seven," he said, "have no use for association work. This class of jobber will not be educated and is a menace to the trade. He wants special advantages, and to play to weak retailers who haven't minds of their own. We are here to present an undivided front, for the disloyal manufacturer is going to work a great trouble to the trade. The Contract Selling Plan will correct the evils because it treats everyone alike."

He hoped that all were meeting there as friends in the trade, and that no petty jealousies or trade animosities should enter the convention.

President Craig pointed out that it was not the intention of the Exchange to force any outsider to become a member. We ought to consider them innocent unless they are proven guilty of unfair methods. Some of them have been in business a long time and they have old ideas which are often hard to overcome, particularly if they are Scotchmen. They have done business in the old way like their forefathers and cannot see why the old system should not now succeed. But if they want to be up-to-date, they must keep up with existing conditions. There have been wonderful changes.

"We have no fault to find with those who are not members, but we are surprised that these men who get benefits and privileges from us should allow some person else to pay for the machinery in motion."

"The manufacturer and wholesale grocer should be in accord with each other," said Hugh Blain. "Their interests are identical and unless the one is prosperous there is not the same opportunity for the prosperity of the other.

"We recognize that the manufacturer is the foundation of business in this country, and that it is a mistake to interfere with his interests. If we are the cheapest and best channel for his goods anything done to benefit us would be good for him as well. The manufacturer has the undoubted right to put his product on the market at the price that will best repay him for his efforts. He can say at what price it shall be sold, and he can apportion profits for handling his product to himself, wholesaler and retailer. It is for him and for us and for the retailer to say along what lines his business can best be conducted. The recommendation in the resolution referring to the Contract Selling Plan points out the only way in which the manufacturer can sell his wares advantageously.

"He spends thousands of dollars on advertising to the consumer for the public must have confidence in his goods.

Power of the Retailer.

"But the retailer can destroy all his chances if he wishes. A half dozen retailers throughout the country can cut the prices so that his goods will soon be shoved behind the counter and their sales will fall off."

Mr. Blain cited a case of this nature which happened in Hamilton. There the retailers killed the sale of a manufactured article which was being sold by what they claimed were improper methods through one wholesaler. The manufacturer had to withdraw his methods and the business came back again.

That went to show what a few retail men could do with a well advertised article. They could destroy all the efforts a manufacturer puts forth and why should the manufacturer therefore not have the right to lay down conditions to keep his goods perpetually before the people? The Contract Selling Plan, after many years of trouble, had been adopted requiring the wholesaler and retailer to sell at fixed prices. Having made those prices every man through which the goods pass should feel it his duty to carry them out.

"But," said Mr. Blain, "we cannot vouch for the integrity of the entire trade. The majority want to distribute goods honestly, but we want the manufacturer to protect us against the others, and to share up with us a portion of the vast fortunes they are acquiring. We poor grocers are losing money and what I'm saying is true.

"When we have such a vast army of agents—some 400 in Ontario—distributing your goods at less than cost, then we think you should consider us and give us a little better profit.

"We want your co-operation—if the manufacturer is loyal to us we will be loyal to him and we are not going to do anything adverse to the interests of the retailer and consumer."

The Manufacturers Talk.

R. J. MacDonald, representing the Quaker Oats Co., Peterborough, was the first of the manufacturers called upon. He referred to the time when three or four years ago his company had tried to do business with the retail trade direct and when it was at loggerheads with the wholesaler.

But the company found this to be a mistake and finally adopted the Contract Selling Plan, but not without opposition from the Chicago head office. Now they have fixed prices on all packages and pay a rebate of 10 p.c. every three months to the wholesale trade.

"To-day," said Mr. MacDonald, there is only one retailer to whom we sell and that is the Robt. Simpson Co. We cut off the T. Eaton Co. because they were cutting our prices."

He cited an instance which happened once in Seattle where the trade had cut his company practically off because it used arbitrary methods.

"The wholesale trade said they would cut us off," he said, "but we thought they couldn't on account of our advertising. They went to the retailers and we found that in spite of our heavy advertising the wholesale and retail trades were too strong for us—we had to give them better profits."

Some wholesalers, he thought, did not take the manufacturer into his confidence enough and vice versa. Some workable agreement should be reached. The great advantage he saw in the agreement plan and Secret Commissions

Act, was that although there may be cutting by the wholesaler, it makes the retailer neglect to mention he is getting the better price—if he can buy the goods cheaper nobody knows it. He believed the wholesale grocers to be the cheapest medium and if all goods of manufacturers paid them a fair and uniform profit and that if goods with small profits were eliminated the wholesaler might not complain of high cost of doing business.

"The main point," he added, "is taking the wholesaler into our confidence and interesting him with fair profits."

Undersold by Wholesalers.

A complaint that R. L. Innes, Canadian Canners, Hamilton, made was that he had actually found travelers of wholesale houses selling their goods at less than their own travelers. They give a rebate even on restricted lines and he did not think, therefore, that his company received the co-operation of the wholesaler and retailer to which they were entitled. He thought the only remedy was that the wholesalers as well as travelers should be obliged to make the declaration as suggested by Mr. Blain, that they were not cutting prices.

Referring to the wholesalers' cost of doing business Mr. Innes suggested that traveling expenses be cut down. He thought there were too many travelers on the road in Ontario. In Ontario there were 400 travelers to 52 houses. Each sold probably from $60,000 to $70,000 worth of goods in a year, while in the west every traveler sold about $200,000 worth. If operating expenses could only be cut down $5,000 or $10,000 there would be that much profit found and nobody would be the loser.

He wished the wholesalers to bear in mind the fact that their goods had to be sold at popular prices—10 cents for instance, and if there could be co-operation to reduce our expenses we could give the consumer better prices.

Mr. Innes did not think that the large retailer who buys in car load quantities should be antagonized—such as the large departmental stores—but that some plan should be worked out to hold their favor. He was not advocating quantity prices, he said, but there should be some special method for keeping their interest.

"We realize the wholesale trade to be the legitimate distributing channel and if 95 p.c. of the trade could be controlled all would be in a position to make a fair percentage of profits."

Retailers were now more and more taking advantage of rising markets, they bought right and were not merely selling above cost.

In reply to a question from Wm. Ince, Perkins, Ince & Co., Mr. Innes stated that his company had never sold a case of goods to a department store or to a retailer.

Competition From Wholesalers.

Wm. Dobie, of E. W. Gillett & Co. Ltd., Toronto, then addressed the meeting. He said in part:

"Gentlemen, without intending any flattery, I can truthfully say that during my experience of about 30 years of close connection with the wholesale grocery trade in Canada. I never knew a finer lot of men than those engaged in the business, but I must reluctantly qualify this statement to a moderate extent, by saying that some of you are a rather difficult lot of people to please in some respects. Sometimes we get the notion that some are like the average small boy who is looking for the long end—the biggest half of the stick of candy. We do our best to divide it fairly and in proper proportions, but our efforts we are sorry to say are not always appreciated. Considering the present high prices of all raw material, we are really treating you well. We desire it should be understood that it has always been our aim to get along nicely with our friends in the wholesale grocery business, and we think as a rule, speaking in a general way, that things have been fairly satisfactory to all concerned.

"Of course where interests clash, as they do in many cases, owing to the fact of such a large proportion of wholesale grocers being manufacturers of certain lines as well, it is utterly impossible to avoid all friction. Some of our actions have been criticised and occasionally criticised quite severely, but notwithstanding such to be the case, we can truthfully say we have made a strong effort to be fair and to favor our friends as much as possible, under all circumstances and conditions, and if we are permitted to carry out the same policy, we will likely do so. We, however, always reserve the right to change our plan of operations and if found necessary, to go direct to the retail trade, although we hope that such a course may not be necessary.

"We are taking this opportunity of answering something that is possibly uppermost in the minds of all, and that is the question of making certain changes in price schedules recently put into effect, with the idea of making the jobber's profit slightly higher. I want to say if you thoroughly understood all the conditions leading up to the changes that were made, I am sure you would feel entirely different about the question. The fact of the matter is we have for some years been too liberal with the wholesale trade, and possibly this makes the difference in profit more noticeable now. When we reach the point where we find the wholesale trade are the real distributors of the product of our plant, we would of course, naturally feel more inclined to allow as large profits as possible, but unfortunately, to-day our records show that the majority of our output, with the exception of one line, is placed by our own salesmen. As to what may be done in the future, in the way of increasing the jobber's profit will depend largely on the showing you make. We will experiment for a few months with the new lists which became effective in March, and you can also do the same. Possibly after we have all had actual, practical experience, we will be in a better position to judge as to what is needed and what should be done.

"We are aiming to manufacture a complete line of pure goods, articles that are better than is required under any pure food law that may be put into effect in Canada or any other country. It is only reasonable to suppose that we cannot give you the same profit on the better quality of goods on which our margin is small, as on less expensive goods on which there is quite a large profit. Although members of your association have used many arguments to show that slightly larger margins should be allowed, we desire to say no change in prices or in your margin, can be made at the present time, and we cannot promise that any will be made very soon, but there is no telling what may be done if the wholesaler and his selling staff get busy and show good results. Work of this kind will be more effective in bringing around a different state of affairs than anything else.

"We strongly urge and advise that you become the real distributors of the product of our plant. By this we mean that you should through your selling force, actually sell the lines that are difficult to sell, as well as the others —the ones that are comparatively easy to dispose of. Under improved conditions such as these, we could no doubt afford to deal a little more liberally with you.

"It should be possible for us to work together and get things running in such nice smooth shape that we could rely on you to attend to the selling end, and all that would be required of us would be to have a few good advertising men on the road to do necessary work in that line, of which you would of course reap the benefit. Under such ideal conditions as these, you would be satisfied, we would be satisfied, in fact everybody would be satisfied. Sizing up the whole situation, we desire to say that while the jobbing and retail trades do not make quite as large profits as formerly, yet when the goods are bought in proper quantities the margin is very fair. Should we find it possible to get the cost of manufacture down finer from time to time, it will be a pleasure to see that our friends get their proportion of the saving.

"As all present know, we have a salable line of well advertised goods on which all make a profit. We have been criticized quite harshly for changes made in prices, but these changes were compulsory and there are various reasons for saying this. Since new lists became effective on March 1st, we voluntarily made a concession on one line, in the shape of a rebate which will be paid every six months, to loyal concerns, and we expect to and no doubt will receive the commendation of the wholesale trade for this action. We think the trade understands the whole question fairly well but for fear some do not, we take this opportunity of referring to Magic Baking Powder especially. Realizing that the public demand the best article possible in this line, at a moderate price, we decided to produce it and place it upon the market. This meant a vast amount of work, and a great deal of expense, but having facilities to do the work, we concluded that circumstances justified us in standing the expense. The result is that we have to-day in Magic Baking Powder the very best article in its line that can be made and sold to the consumer for 25c per lb.

Before recent change in prices took effect, a special arrangement was made with Ontario wholesale houses to confine their purchases and sales in the yeast line to Royal Yeast and in the lye line to Gillett's Lye. In this connection we have been accused of deliberately reducing the jobber's profit after this arrangement was made; but viewing the question from the company's standpoint, this is not correct for it is a fact that the changes in prices were contemplated and in fact decided upon before other arrangement was talked of or considered at all. It is out of the question in such a case to make public anything in connection with changes in prices of the goods, for it is necessary that they be put into effect automatically, in all sections. The point of change in price is covered in the arrangement, so we should not be accused of any violation.

"While it is not my wish to interfere in any way with the program of your convention, yet it is hoped by some manufacturers as well as ourselves, that before this meeting adjourns on Thursday, that the question: "Should jobbers be competitors of exclusive manufacturers who favor the wholesale trade?" be gone into and discussed fully, and we would like you to link with that questian the other: "How can a wholesale grocery house who manufacture a similar line of goods to that made by the Gillett Co. honestly push and recommend the goods made by latter concern?"

"If things go on as they are now, and possibly get worse, we fear you are going to drive the legitimate manufacturer who is willing to work with you, to go direct to the retail trade. We have good and sufficient reasons for thinking that a wholesale grocer should be a wholesale grocer, and that he should keep out of the manufacturing line altogether. Of course we know what a good many will say to this, but believe it to be wise that this convention should give these questions very serious consideration.

"In giving consideration to our particular case, we hope you will not be too harsh, for you all know that for a long period we have indirectly been the means of the jobbing trade of the Dominion of Canada making considerable money.

"I thank you for the fair treatment and patient hearing you have given, and I take pleasure in extending a cordial invitation to all delegates to call upon us before leaving Toronto."

F. T. Smye said: "Mr. Dobie says that a complaint has been made that the wholesaler grocer has become a manufacturer and competitor. In reference to that phase of the question I would say that the percentage of wholesalers who are manufacturers is very small. Our firm is one of the guilty ones, but we were driven into the manufacture of goods by the inferiority of some of the goods supplied by some of the manufacturers. Take it in spices, coffees and extracts—for the reason that manufacturing houses were going direct to the retail trade and putting in a superior quality of the goods to the goods which they supplied to the trade. They supplied cheaper goods to the wholesaler at the same price. A good many of the wholesalers are interested in the spice business. Outside of that I do not think we have sinned very grievously in that direction. The grocers have never gone into the manufacturing business except where the manufacturer would not share a fair profit with them—that is the only reason why the trade has gone into the manufacturing business."

Hugh Blain's remarks on this were: "I think Mr. Smye has overlooked the real reason why the wholesalers have gone into the manufacturing of goods. I think the real reason was the grocery trade did not get sufficient profit on the goods the manufacturer handed to them to distribute. I can tell you this much, that if it were not for the manufacturing branch of our business we would show a loss at the end of the year instead of a profit, and that is the reason why the wholesale grocer has been forced into the manufacture of goods when he did not want to go into it. It just shows that conditions of trade have been wrong. The conditions of trade are responsible for the position outlined by Mr. Innes. We have not had them properly enforced or we would not be manufacturing today. Another reason is that in some lines—I am not referring to Mr. Dobie or any manufacturer in particular—but it is well known among the grocery trade we used to get our manufactured goods from the factories and we had to compete with the manufacturer when it was frequently represented to our customers that the manufacturer specially made our goods for us and that we were simply distributing their goods, and they were not putting in the quality of the goods they were selling direct from the factories. It is a condition our travelers had to meet every day in the month, and in the year, and it was for these causes where we had to compete with inferior goods, because we were not getting sufficient profits to enable us to do our business that we were forced into the manufacturing branch of the trade. I would like to impress that fact on Mr. Dobie, because if the conditions had been satisfactory from the beginning and if we had been getting the profit that as distributors we were entitled to, none of us would have cared to devote part of our institution to a manufacturing branch, and the remainder to the distributing."

E. G. Henderson, Windsor Salt Co., was the next speaker.

"In theory possibly the suggestion of my friends from the wholesale trade are perfectly correct," he said, "but theories do not lead to very much. It is rather a big question—the idea of having such friendly relations between the manufacturer and the wholesale grocers. But there are several things to be considered, especially in regard to the question of fixed prices. We have always been loyal to wholesalers, and I can say without fear of contradiction that no manufacturer in Canada or any other country has been more loyal to the wholesale trade than we have been. When I began business I had to look around for the cheapest and best method of distribution, and found the cheapest method was through the wholesale trade."

But there ought to be some way, he thought, of reaching the large retail buyers and not antagonizing them as suggested by Mr. Innes.

A fair profit was wanted, but wholesalers had said to him why he did not meet competitors' prices and then they would handle his goods. What was to be done?

These were conditions that had to be met.

Some concerns had been accused of holding up consumers, but manufacturers have to have a legitimate profit.

"You never know where you are at when rebates are given," he said, touching on the rebate problem.

"Retailers never know what prices their competitors are getting from houses who cut prices to them.

"Cutting prices is a curse to the country," he emphatically declared yet newspapers were calling for competition. He called attention to the fact that railways fixed prices both in freight and passenger service and asked if there was no way in which prices could be fixed to bring about a more stable condition in trade.

The convention then adjourned for luncheon.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

After the noon adjournment the manufacturers again presented their views, the starch men being given an innings.

Robt. Wallace, of the Battle Creek Toasted Corn Flake Co., said his company was one of the first to take up the matter and adopt a uniform contract selling plan. Inside of a short time fully 75 per cent. of their customers had agreed to the plan, and at present practically every customer on their lists had signed the agreement. There was some little difficulty experienced in inaugurating the system—there always is—but in the main it was found to work admirably. When charges were made the fullest information was asked for. The regulation of quantity price was at first thought to be an imposition, but the system was found to work well, and in the main was indispensable to the trade.

G. H. Benson, managing director of the Edwardsburg Starch Co., Cardinal, Ont., said the starch people stuck as well to the agreement as did other manufacturers. Last July they entered into an agreement, which now is working very well. The trade cannot say they have not been treated generously, and they should not forget that the manufacturer has had to meet changed trade conditions, which were really forced on them. Raw material prices vary as also does the cost of production, and the manufacturer is sometimes forced to ask the wholesalers to put up with inconveniences that he has to suffer. This was the condition of affairs last July, when they were criticized by the trade. Just now they are dealing as fairly as possible with the wholesale trade and he thought the present a good agreement. There was no use denying the fact that the Edwardsburg Company sold to grocers not strictly in the wholesale trade, but since last July the numbers of such accounts was small, and at present there were but one or two such on their list—old friends and old customers, who would not interfere with the agreement. A large number of retailers were cut off. He did not suppose that by holding these one or two old friends they were going to get any more business, but if these names were taken off there might be price-cutting and strong competition in the trade. The agreement had better be left as it is, as their position was a fair one, and he did not see any better way of dealing with the difficulty. So far as the starch men were concerned the agreement was being adhered to. They had cut out the old discount on 100-box lots, and now make a certain specified discount to the trade. After doing that he thought that was about all they could be expected to do.

W. G. Craig said there were one or two Kingston retailers on the manufacturers' list chiefly because of being old friends of the manufacturers.

Few Retailers on List.

Arch. Hutchinson, of the St. Lawrence Starch Co., had a connection with the starch trade for 35 years, and had charge of the Edwardsburg starch sales west of Montreal for many years. He had sold through the wholesale trade and would continue to do so. His relations with them were always amicable. The profits to the wholesale trade had been satisfactory, except on one or two occasions, because of certain reasons. The few retail accounts dealt with on the manufacturers' lists should not make for trouble. It would be a mistake to change these conditions. There are so few of these accounts—about five in the whole province. The conditions of the starch and corn syrup trade is entirely satisfactory and the wholesalers are getting a good profit.

H. S. Bourke, of the Imperial Tobacco Co., did not think that the contract selling plan would work so well with them as with other manufacturers, because of their method of dealing with customers outside as well as inside the grocery trade. In general, though, the contract selling plan had helped to make the tobacco business pay. While realizing that they should sell only to wholesalers, they had been compelled to sell to retailers sometimes. However, when such sales were, or are, made they are not allowed to sell below the rest. If any person breaks this rule he is immediately cut off the list. But you wholesalers are not always able to control your own members. There is one of your number here to-day who makes our travelers miserable every time they call on him, by insisting that the "30-days net" clause be expunged from the contract.

"Who is it? name him," cried several of those present.

"I do not think I should give his name. I am not here for that."

"Let him stand up," was shouted from the body of the hall.

F. T. Smye, said that Mr. Bourke has made a statement that there is not harmony within our ranks. I think we should have a poll to find out who he means."

W. G. Craig—"Will the member who is accused defend the charge or explain himself?"

A. Hutchinson—"This is not the place to investigate any such charge. I understand that the manufacturers were invited here to address the convention and give their views. If any matter was to be probed then it had better be done in committee."

H. C. Beckett was glad that Mr. Bourke brought up that question. "We want the manufacturers to come here and state their grievances, give their views and get the sentiment of the trade. If any wholesaler made such a statement, he made it unthinkingly."

The matter was then dropped.

Friendship With Retailers.

Mr. Beckett went on to say that the manufacturers should make friends with the retailers. Part of the duty of the wholesale trade is to protect the interests of the retail trade. "We have discussed the cost of doing business with the retailers and find it is about 22 per cent. Some manufacturers have sold goods to the wholesale houses, at a certain price and after tying them up have offered the same goods to the retail trade at from 10 to 20 per cent. lower figures, the manufacturer profiting by the competition between wholesaler and retailer. We have fought this thing out in the courts; we have been misrepresented; but the courts have made things right. Now if the manufacturers can make more money by dealing direct with the retailer he is at liberty to do so, but the wholesaler will not handle his goods. At present the wholesaler is making between 6 and 7 per cent. It costs 9 per cent. to do business. The retailer sells almost at cost, and his charge is 20 per cent for doing business. When a manufacturer compares his profits with those of the wholesaler and retailer he will see things from our standpoint. Sometimes it is enough to make a man go out and——— well take a drink.

Mr. Craig thought the discussion had proceeded far enough to have some resolution passed.

Mr. Blain, therefore, again read his paper presented the day before, and the resolution based on it was put. The terms of the resolution were explained to the manufacturers by Mr. Beckett, as well as the important paragraphs of the proposed contract form.

H. N. Cowan, of the Cowan Chocolate Co., said that it was satisfactory so far as their dealings with the grocery trade was concerned, but they made and sold confectioners' goods as well.

Christie, Brown & Co.'s representative did not wish to take sides because he had no power or authority to do so.

Mr. Rose wanted to know who would enforce the agreements.

Mr. Craig—"The manufacturers."

Mr. Rose—I think the Exchange should do its own police work.

F. T. Smye thought manufacturers should assist.

Mr. Marshall, Canners Ltd., believed that a solicitor should be appointed to look after that matter.

Mr. Beckett—The agreement is between the wholesalers and manufacturers individually.

Mr. Marshall—"But the wholesaler is directly benefited."

Mr. Beckett—"Yes, but if cutting goes on on goods because of the neglect of manufacturers the wholesale trade will lose interest in the goods and eventually that will mean a loss to manufacturers.

Mr. Hutchinson though a committee should be appointed to deal with the details of enforcement.

Not Absolutely Obliged.

Mr. Blain—"This resolution does not mean that manufacturers are absolutely obliged to sign a declaration. If the manufacturers think there are no grounds for the charge, or if the charge is too trivial he need not enforce the declaration. We are not committed to this system. If there is something better then let us have it. But if you cannot see your way to enforce it, or will not enforce it, then we won't handle your goods."

Mr. Rose believed that the manufacturers should first have been allowed to discuss this question among themselves and then—say to-morrow—be allowed to discuss it at the convention.

Mr. Craig thought the suggestion a good one, and if a motion was put along those lines, then it would be satisfactory.

Mr. Hutchinson—"The manufacturers are agreed to the principal of the resolution, but would rather discuss the matter later and allow the details to be worked out."

Mr. Marshall here asked if an outside packer, say, was to sell goods in Ontario would he be required to sign the agreement.

Mr. Blain—"Certainly, and if he didn't his goods would not be handled by the wholesale trade.

Mr. Smye corroborated Mr. Blain, and instanced a case on similar lines with a cereal manufacturer some time ago.

The matter was then dropped, and the convention adjourned.

DAY FOR THE RETAILER.

On Wednesday morning there were many retailers present from various parts of the province. The meeting was opened by President Craig who welcomed the retailers.

Vice-president F. T. Smye, reviewed the business that had been done during the past two days, and read the various resolutions on which he invited discussion. He outlined also the movement to advance an educational campaign to acquaint the trade with existing conditions and to correct evils existing.

E. M. Trowern, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, then read an address on the "Relations between the retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers." This address will be published in next week's issue of The Grocer.

A resolution moved by F. T. Smye and Jas. Vair, was carried tendering to Mr. Trowern the thanks of the trade.

Mr. Vair commended the action of the wholesalers in getting together the various branches of the trade. It was a step in the right direction.

Retailers and wholesalers have their difficulties, but he thought they could be smoothed out by convening on business matters.

"It is an undisputed fact," he said, "that we are not making the money in the retail trade to-day that we used to do 25 years ago in the small towns and cities."

Overhead expenses was the trouble. Retails hadn't the buying power they had 25 years ago. "We used to buy teas then from the wholesale houses for 14½c and 16c per lb., which we sold for 40c or 3 for a dollar. We were commended for doing it and looked up to, but now we are mere ordinary grocers.

"I attribute the difficulty to the fact that there are 32 grocers in Barrie to a population of 6,800. There were too many in the trade and he thought the wholesale trade had been fostering too many small grocers in the small towns in Canada.

"If a man buys a carload of sugar in Barrie he has to pay the same amount as the man who buys five bags; the same is true of a car of can goods. Retailers do not now have the buying power they used to have."

He hoped the wholesale trade would not countenance too many small grocers in a small town, as this only was en-

SEE NEXT WEEK'S GROCER.

Readers of The Grocer are requested to read carefully in next week's issue the address of E. F. B. Johnson, K.C., on the Secret Commissions Act. This will appear in full and as this act is one of the most important before the trade at the present time, it deserves the attention of every retailer, traveler and wholesaler in Canada.

couraging the small trader to cut prices and injure business.

The contract selling plan was a step in the right direction, but still he considered a grocer should get a better price when he buys in quantity in view of his buying power.

In order to have prices maintained he advised manufacturers to have their goods invoiced to the trade at the prices at which retailers should sell to the consumer. The retailer should then get a discount off, which would represent his profits.

He said that retailers had been working for a certain company all their lives instead of for themselves.

"The wholesaler claims it costs him 9 per cent. to do business; it costs us from 14 to 15 per cent., and yet we do not make a gross profit of more than 16 per cent. We should get at least 20 per cent. The large departmental stores make 25 per cent., because they have a buying power behind them. New wholesalers starting up with $5,000 or $10,000 capital are selling cheaper than wholesalers who have been in the business for years with capital of some $400,000. We cannot make money and we are forced to do things we wouldn't think of doing 25 years ago."

M. Moyer, Toronto, chairman of the retail grocers section of the Retail Merchants' Association, supported organization work, which would be in the interests of consumers as well as retailers.

Consumers are now finding out that the retailers are not making the profits they thought they were—this was brought out by the recent discussion on the high cost of living question. Organization work with a view to educating the people was what he advocated.

Position of the Retailers.

Mr. Moyer then read a number of resolutions, which the retailers had drawn up at their meeting on Tuesday afternoon and these formed the basis of the discussion until the hour of adjournment. These resolutions were as follows:—

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that it is not in the best interests of the grocery trade that some few retail houses should have the right to purchase in large quantities direct from the manufacturer and that this privilege be not allowed to all."

"That we think that it is not fair to the retail trade that wholesalers and manufacturers should sell direct to consumers, including hotels, boats, restaurants and public or private institutions."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the Wholesale Grocers Exchange is an advantage to the Retail Trade if properly conducted, and providing that what is done is done in the best interests of trade and not against the welfare of the public."

"That we are as strongly as ever convinced that the contract plan of selling goods is the right and proper one."

"That we consider that it is the opinion of this meeting that price cutting on all goods should as far as possible be stopped, as it demoralizes all branches of the retail grocery trade."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that all biscuits should be sold on the contract plan and invoiced at retail prices less the discount, and that this meeting desire that this subject be taken up by the proper committe of this section with the manufacturers and dealt with."

"That we consider it not in the interest of the retail trade that manufacturers and wholesalers should agree and fix prices among themselves and not consider the retail trade, as price cutting injures the retail trade and wholesalers and manufacturers are not affected."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that all manufacturers should have their cases properly marked specifying the exact quantity and weight in them."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that all goods which are to be sold by the retailer at 10 cents should not cost more than 90 cents a dozen."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that all package goods should be sold on the contract plan."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that immediate steps should be taken by the retailers to act with the wholesalers and manufacturers to prevent price cutting."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that we should consult with the wholesale dealers and point out to them that it is not fair for them to encourage people going into the trade who have no knowledge of it, and who have very little capital, and the experience and knowledge not have had in business should count for something. In our opinion discretion should be used when persons who go into the grocery trade as to where they are located, and this could be done for the betterment of the trade by wholesale houses when persons apply to them to open accounts."

"Should retailers be placed on the jobbers' list and thus have advantages over ordinary retailers?"

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that it is unfair for the wholesalers, when a man fails, to compromise with him at 50 or 60 cents or even less on the dollar and thus put him in a better position than those who pay 100 p.c., and they should take steps to remedy said evil."

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the wholesalers should restore the cash discounts."

Jas. Staples, Lindsay, spoke to the first resolution. "Is it right for the manufacturer," he asked, "to sell to a few of the retailers and then hand over the bulk of the goods to be sold through the wholesale trade?

"If it is fair to sell to one retailer in a town is it right not to sell to another, for the one is then in a position to offer baits to customers and undersell the others?

"If you are agreed that the right channel is through from manufacturer, to wholesaler, to retailer, why not do it?"

These were questions which he asked the manufacturers and wholesalers to consider.

It was not fair to the retail trade, maintained Alex. Fisher, of Lindsay, who spoke on the second resolution, for the manufacturers and wholesalers to sell to consumers, hotels, etc.

He referred to cases where Toronto wholesalers had come into Lindsay and sold direct to hotels and he knew of other cases where consumer had bought tea from a wholesaler 10 cents cheaper than she should have paid to the retailer.

"If you gentlemen think that is right say so," he added.

Profit Question Again.

"The majority of the retail men," said J. F. Holloway, "do not consider the wholesale men thieves, but they have not protected the retail trade as they should have done. It is not fair that a traveler should sell an article the profit on which he says will be 20 p.c. to the retailer when he knows it will not be more than 16 1-3 per cent. Our running expenses are 15 p.c. leaving a profit that is absurd. The wholesale men are handling articles at 15 p.c. gross profit, with only 8 p.c. working expenses. The proper channel for trade is from the manufacturer to the wholesaler, and from the wholesaler to the retailer. Manufacturers have ignored the retailer in every respect. They have acted with the idea that 'If I advertise my goods the retailer must carry them.' He should first find out if the retail grocers are in sympathy with them and and are not substituting others for them. The question should be 'does the grocer get sufficient to warrant his pushing a manufactured article?' We have to increase our profits. Matches have gone up 15 cents a case. Who pays that increase? It is not the consumer. The money is coming out of our pockets. Baking powders and other lines show similar conditions. The wholesaler does not lose."

Mr. Holloway suggested that wholesalers meet the grocers and let them consider whether the goods are being handled with a proper profit.

"I do not see," he said, "wholesalers or manufacturers putting their sons to learn the retail business.

"Would you put your boy in a business which after years would only yield him $8 a week?" he asked.

"We will soon have to put women behind the counters unless you give us more profits. We should have a profit of 20 p.c. on the majority of articles. Our working expenses of 15 p.c. cannot be cut down. You are spending thousands in advertising only to get kicked at the counter.

"You may think it all right to sell a car load of goods to the T. Eaton Co., but who sells it broadcast throughout the country? It is the small man and you should look after him."

"The stopping of price-cutting is a matter of concern to all retailers," said F. W. Forde, of Ottawa. "We have had considerable trouble from a department store continually cutting."

Mr. Forde read a list of goods advertised by this store, showing the extent of the cut rates, and stated that every few days the list is changed.

"Some time ago," he continued, "they advertised breakfast bacon at 20 cents a pound, when we were selling it much higher. They were really offering the customers green bacon, using this questionable method. I hope the convention will consider this," Mr. Forde concluded.

J. McCorvie, Chatham, in speaking on the selling of biscuits on the contract plan, stated that retail grocers have no particular fault to find with biscuit manufacturers. The principal difficulty was with retailers themselves, who cut prices on fancy biscuits as an advertisement.

"There are merchants in every town," he said, "who do not know what it costs them to do business. They cut prices and demoralize the trade in various places. The others must suffer, but if prices were not cut a fair profit could be made. What was wanted was a legitimate profit to cover expenses and a little for our own hard labors."

Jno. O. Carpenter, Hamilton, thought that some adequate system should be worked out to see that the retailer gets a fair show with wholesaler and manufacturer. He considered that cutting prices injured the manufacturer as well as the retailer, because competitors of the price-cutters would not have any reason to push the goods that were cut upon.

Retailers' Cost of Doing Business.

D. Bell, Ottawa, (Bryson-Graham & Co.), stated that he was in a department store that had never been a price-cutter.

"I've never," he said, "sold sugar or anything else but at a legitimate profit. Treat your customers right, get your profits and they'll come back to you."

He presented some interesting figures on the cost of doing business. In 1907 his gross profits were 23.13 per cent., while the expense element was 14.97 per cent.; in 1908 gross profits were 23.25 per cent., and expenses 15.67 per cent.; in 1909 the figures were 21.44 per cent. and 15.71 per cent.; and 1910 they were 21.40 per cent. and 16.72 per cent. This showed that in 1907 the net profits was 8.6 per cent., while in 1910 they were 4.69 per cent. The increase in business was in four years $35,000, thus making a greater aggregate of profit.

It was very difficult now to get good help unless good money was paid.

"During the last two weeks four of our good men have left us and gone west, so it is difficult to get the help we want."

Mr. Bell paid a high tribute to service in the store.

"We give the service over the phone that customers get at the counter if not better. We pay no attention to other department stores who cut prices—we give good service and trust to our customers to recognize it."

J. Staples, Lindsay, said: "The 10 cent article is a popular one in the grocery. In charging the retailer $1 per doz. we are not getting living profit. The merchant must consider ways of loss such as breakage and freight to be added on. There is not a 20 per cent. profit. You should consider this and see that all articles now sold at $1 a doz. should be dropped to 90 cents. It has been noticed that articles that were 75 and 80 cents when introduced were raised to $1 when they became established."

"It is a case of the dog wagging the tail now, but before long the tail will be wagging the dog," was J. A. McIntosh's (Hamilton) manner of illustrating the future ahead of the retail grocers. He was speaking in reference to the resolution that package goods should be sold on the contract plan.

"All proprietary goods should be sold under the contract system," he said. "One or two have been sold that way and have proved most satisfactory. No person is as well acquainted with the needs of the people as the grocer and it is his desire to keep prices as low as possible. In the most cases he cannot do so. The retail grocer should have a say in the price of goods. Biscuits went up in price a short time ago because flour went up. Flour came down again but the price of biscuits remained at the higher figure. One grocer cuts on one line, another on some other line, and so on with the result that the small profits are being lost."

"If a man wants to be a wholesaler let him get out of the retail trade," was Wm. Potter's (Chatham) terse comment. "It is impossible to be a negro and a white man, and the same applies to this matter. If the cap fits anyone they will have to wear it."

"If a man fails and wants to compromise with the wholesaler it is not fair to the other retailers. Let it be referred to the retailers," was J. Staples' suggestion regarding the last resolution to be presented.

Cutting Out of Discounts.

M. Moyer asked that there be a restoration of cash discounts and reasons why they were cut off. It was fair and honorable to get the discounts but dishonest if done on a secret rebate basis. Some have good reason to believe that others were getting discounts on the sly and there was a lot of dissatisfaction on that account.

"Something can and ought to be done now," said E. M. Trowern in regard to his resolution dealing with the prevention of price cutting. "Let the wholesalers appoint five representatives to meet with retailers and manufacturers.

"Forget the past," he advised and expressed his faith in the wholesalers lending their support.

"If any manufacturer decides to overlook us and declares that he will run his own business, we will tell him to run his business, we will tell him to run go. All we want is that which is right, decent and fair."

R. J. MacDonald, Quaker Oats Co., Peterboro in referring to discriminations in favor of certain retailers recalled the statements of some manufacturers made the day before, that it was necessary.

"My experience," he said, "was that it was harmful to do so; we used to but we sell to only one retail counter today. I think that every manufacturer should cut out every retail counter—not to sell at retail prices.

"I don't think the T. Eaton Co. in cutting prices on our goods do others any harm. I hardly think any person would spend 10 cents car fare in order to buy a 10 cent article for 5 cents."

J. F. Halloway—"Doesn't it though; haven't they got a phone?"

Mr. MacDonald—"We would be very glad to stop it."

Mr. Holloway—"Why don't you?"

Mr. MacDonald—"We never had a complaint."

Mr. Holloway—"As president of the retail grocers' section of the R.M.A. I'll see that you get one."

Regarding a statement made by F. W. Forde, Ottawa, that a department store there cut prices on a product of the Quaker Oats Co., Mr. MacDonald said he would do all in his power to see that it would be stopped.

If the retailer, he said, was not getting a fair profit it was up to him to handle some other goods that gave a fair profit.

He thought, in connection with treatment of travelers, that the retailer should be more considerate in giving him a hearing. Travelers too often got discouraging receptions.

Mr. Holloway maintained that there was a depreciation in the stamp of man with the traveling bag during recent years.

"Educate your travelers to figure profits," he said, "then we'll talk business and give them a good reception."

President Craig smoothed out the ripples at this point, however, and ended the little repartee.

Mr. MacDonald claimed that the action of T. Eaton Co. in cutting prices was done intentionally to injure his company because they could not be placed on a favorable buying basis. They did not sell direct to them.

"Of course, we will do everything in our power to stop it," he added.

Predicted Good Results.

In reply to what the retailers said, Hugh Blain remarked that it was admitted there was room for improvement. Efforts have been put forth in the past to aid retailers in getting legitimate profits and there had been a gradual development towards the attainment of better business standards. It was only through organization work that anything of a vital character could be done. Disturbances could be smoothed away by proper discussion.

It was not in the interests of the public that any article should be sold at

ACCOMPLISHED MUCH GOOD.

During the discussion on trade questions and conditions at the convention of wholesale grocers in Toronto on Monday, there were many references to the part which has been played by the Secret Commissions Act.

Various wholesalers testified to its efficiency in placing business transactions between the traveler and retailer on a higher moral plane since it came into effect about a year ago.

As one of the speakers stated, the giving of a rebate or the cutting of fixed prices emphasized the inability of the salesmen to sell goods.

If he could sell them without giving it, he would do it and it also stands to reason that any man could do business on the rebate plan.

The educational character of the debate on this Act as well as on other trade questions was of great value and a careful perusal of the happenings at the convention should be made by all retailers, travelers, wholesalers and manufacturers.

WHAT TO DO IN MAY.

May is almost a synonym for "moving" and "housecleaning" time. There is seemingly no other month in which so much activity among householders takes place. Brooms, metal polishes, soaps, cleansers, soaps, waterpails and scrubbing brushes are in evidence everywhere.

While many people are supplied beforehand with these necessities, it is still a big element in the May trade. The grocer who has paved the way to handle this class of trade will undoubtedly be a lap ahead of his competitors by the end of the month. There is still time, however, to catch your share of this trade, if you have not already made preparations.

Window displays of soaps, etc., with occasionally some practical demonstration, such as soap manufacturers are always ready to give, as to the cleaning power of a certain brand which you handle will give that portion of your trade the necessary impetus.

Strawberry season practically begins in May. Fresh fruit is much sought after at this season of the year. Of course, there is always the danger with expensive perishables that they will spoil on your hands, but it is a good advertisement to have the first berries in your store. Care must be taken in buying, however, not to overstock, as there are almost daily changes in price.

Fresh dairy and farm products, butter, eggs and cheese, are in great demand. Spring is the season for fresh things to begin to come in and customers are eager to get away from the stored winter goods. It pays to push what the customer wants. Therefore do not let your competitor get the pick of the new products. You must have as good as, or better than the next man to hold your customers.

May is a month for the live, wide-awake grocer. It is at such a time that the way is paved for a good year's trade.

PROFITS IN CONFECTIONERY.

That there is money in confectionery is exemplified by the various moves a Toronto merchant made before he became satisfied with the profits his business was producing.

Some time ago he opened a grocery store in a good business district. The profits, however, were not sufficient to satisfy him and a few months later he sold the business to open a fruit and vegetable store.

He worked in this line for quite a while, but the profits in it were not what he would like.

A short time ago he became a confectioner and sells fancy chocolates, cold drinks, ice cream, etc.—and he is now satisfied.

He says his profits are much better than those in fruit and groceries.

WATCH PERISHABLE GOODS.

Considerable loss is incurred by many retail grocers on account of the fact that they do no use sufficient care in handling perishable goods, particularly in the summer season, which will soon be at hand.

During the summer months, goods that are at all perishable should be kept in a place where they are not subjected to the heat. Such goods as cheese, fish, molasses, syrups, pickles, etc., should be kept in a moderately cool place, and even canned goods should not be allowed to become too warm.

Refrigerators with glass fronts are excellent containers for cheese, pickles and the like. Some grocers who have such refrigerators keep them near the show window. The goods are kept cool and at the same time are well displayed.

Salt fish should be watched carefully and kept continually covered with brine.

Corn meal and like goods should be kept only in small quantities and not allowed to accumulate, as in warm weather worms begin to work on them if allowed to stand too long.

Keep a watchful eye on all goods of the above character from now on. If you find you have too large a supply of a certain kind on hand, do something to reduce it.

DELAYED PAYMENTS.

A reprehensive custom, quite contrary to honest business ethics, has grown up of delaying the sending of cheques in settlement of an account from one to two weeks after the first of the month, although the cheque itself is signed the first. Naturally the cash discount is taken, although by the delay in sending the cheque all right the rebate is lost.

It cannot be admitted that this is fair dealing with the firm awaiting payment. The cash discount is given on a perfectly plain agreement, and there is no excuse for this little trick. Of course, it is easy to see where comes the benefit to the senders of the cheque. They have time to get their own cheques in before the one sent out is presented.

The question of holding the cheque is their business, but the fact of taking a discount that is lost by the delay in receipt is a breach of agreement, and is a different matter altogether.

The signers of the cheque may not be responsible for the delay. We will put it that the bookkeeper, with his eye on his banking account, keeps back the cheque for a few days. But a firm is responsible for the acts of its servant.

Let business be done fairly and squarely. Let one firm feel that it can rely upon the business morality of another, and that no tricks can possibly make their appearance. We are all in business to make money, but let it be done without resorting to ways that make us lose the respect of those with whom we are doing that business.

The Markets—Uncertainty in the Price of Sugar

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Raw Sugars—Firm.
"Choice" Molasses—Firm at advance.
Canned Pumpkins—Up 15c.

Montreal, April 28th.

Trade has improved during the last week, partly as a result of a general weakness in prices. Also the roads are drying up and country buyers can get in more readily. Collections are greatly improved, showing that trade generally is better.

One of the fruit boats, the Tortona, arrived recently with a cargo of green fruits, and improved matters materially in this line.

Sugar is somewhat at a standstill of late, partly owing to the present high price and partly to the lack of any incentive to buy, dealers seeming to be well stocked up on this article.

The recent incorporation of a new refinery, the Atlantic Sugar Refining Co., Ltd., has caused considerable talk.

Local strawberries are on the market.

The weather has been against trade the last few days, a constant drizzle and mist causing buyers to stay in as much as possible. It is to be hoped that conditions will improve soon, as far as the weather is concerned.

Sugar—Although last week saw a considerable weakening in raw sugars, the past few days have restored prices to their former level and the local situation is practically unchanged.

Owing to the temporary shutdown of the Canada refinery, due to the water being withdrawn from the canal, a lull in refining has taken place, but stocks are ample for any requirements.

Syrup and Molasses—Offerings from the West Indies and Demerara have been large, but the exporter is holding them too high for the local market at present. Local men are holding off for a reduction. At present it is somewhat doubtful whether the expected reduction will take place.

Syrups are quiet at former quotations.

Evaporated Apples—There is too much low grade stock on the market this year. Dealers ascribe the present dullness to this cause. Consumers have become tired of this commodity, and buying has been extremely light. It is to be hoped that producers will take the lesson to heart in preparing the fall supply.

Dried Fruits—Buying is mostly being done for immediate requirements and as a result trade is well distributed in all lines, though the volume is none too large. Seeded raisins are having a somewhat slow sale at present. Currants are firm with a fair demand. This year's date crop promises to be exceptionally good according to a recent cable.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Unsettled market.
Dried Fruits—Quiet.
Evaporated Apples—Slow.

Toronto, April 28th, 1910.

The wholesale business men report fair conditions. In a few lines things are inclined to be quiet, but on the whole the markets are satisfactory. One wholesaler attempted a prediction saying that the coming year would be a poor one for credit. Events alone will prove the accuracy of his statement.

The week has been an epoch making time in the history of the grocery trade of this province. Grocers during the past few days have met and mingled with wholesalers and manufacturers and beneficial results to all three should be experienced in the near future.

Sugar—The sugar market is unsettled. Some wholesale men expect an increase of 10 cents at any time, others feel that the price has gone its highest. Opinion is divided. Willett and Gray one of the best authorities on sugar refer to the market as follows:

"Indications from the raw sugar standpoint all point to an advance in refined almost immediately. The fruit season is now near enough at hand to help along a new demand."

MANITOBA MARKETS

Winnipeg, April 28, 1910.

The local trade is heavy just now, and grocers in the city are ordering freely. It is believed that the large emigration has greatly stimulated the city trade and wholesalers report an exceptionally brisk trade with grocers everywhere in the west. Opening orders are frequent and it is evident that a large number of newcomers are engaging in the merchandising business. At any rate, the opportunities are many, and it is the concern of manufacturers and wholesalers how they are to take care of the rapidly-developing business. The hand-to-mouth trade is altogether too evident in a large number of lines, and shortages are continually being reported. The feature of the week is the scarcity and consequently high price of butter.

Sugar—The decline of last week is maintained and the feeling seems to be that it will be still lower. Some difficulty is experienced in landing the powdered stuff in good condition.

Butter—Jobbers report the most serious shortage in butter that this province has ever experienced. It is impossible to get supplies from the Eastern Townships and the local production has fallen off, due to the shortage of stock feed. When the grass butter comes on the market prices will go down rapidly. Today retailers pay 38c for No. 1 creamery, and 30 to 35 cents for dairy. These are high prices.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., April 28.—All grades of Ontario flour declined 20 cents on Tuesday.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, April 28, 1910.

The grocery markets were active this week, and there are several changes in the price list. One of the most important changes is in the price of sugar which has declined ten cents per hundred pound on all grades. The drop in the price was not unlooked for by the trade. There is great activity in the egg market, and the price has fluctuated widely. The receipts last week were heavy and the price was sent down to 17 cents, while a few of the dealers were quoting them at 16 cents. The speculators then got busy and bought up all the available stock, and a car load was shipped off to Montreal. As a result of this cleaning up the price was advanced and eggs are now quoted at 18 cents per dozen. The receipts are not heavy this week and the price remains firm. Some of the dealers say that there is a market in Montreal for all the eggs available.

Jobbers report a good demand for canned goods, and preserved fruits in glass. The sales of these goods have increased greatly this month.

PERSONAL NOTES.

C. F. Fisher, representing J. W. Windsor, packer of Ice Castle Brand lobsters and kippered herring, reports that new pack will be on the market about the middle of May. Advance sales, he says, are heavy, as the supplies on hand are practically nil.

Surprise Soap, the product of the St. Croix Soap manufacturing Co., Saint Stephen, N.B., is now known all over Canada. While Surprise washing powder has not been on the market so long it is an equally good article. A sample of it will be sent to any grocer in Canada on application so that he may give it a trial in his own home and prove its good qualities.

A Break in Price of Butter is Expected Soon

Reports From Country Indicate Heavy Milk Flow in Short Time—Heavy Production of Eggs in Ontario and Quebec — Substantial Decrease in Price of Live and Dressed Hogs — Maple Syrup Dearer on Account of Searcity.

A break is looked for in the price of butter by those in close touch with the market. The weather has been favorable for growth and from the country reports are received that the meadows and pastures are rich with grass. It is true that there is no change up to the present, but the feeling has grown that it is only a matter of time before a drop in price is experienced.

The receipts of eggs have been unusually large. Prominent provision houses state that they are two weeks ahead of last year in production and it is believed that the present condition will be maintained. The production of eggs has been particularly heavy in Quebec with the result that the receipts at Montreal have been greater than at Toronto.

The new cheese is beginning to arrive but there is no demand for it. The situation remains unchanged.

As anticipated, the easier prices in hogs have been realized but the drop has been greater than expected.

For live hogs at country points the price has fallen from $9.40 to $8.75 and $9.00 is being paid at the central points. The price of dressed hogs declined from $12.75 to $12.25. The receipts continue.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—There is a general feeling of growing weakness in both live and dressed hogs this week and a few sales are reported at 25c reduction. Prices in general remain unchanged, however, and the volume of trade passing is steady though not all that could be desired.

Butter.—There has been an increased output of butter at the factories but not sufficient to affect the market, which still shows but little change. As stated above, the annual break that comes with spring is about due and the conditions are so favourable that it should be experienced at any time now. Reports received by the provision houses are to the effect that the country could not look better and the milk supply should gradually increase to its highest mark.

John Bond, treasurer.

The retiring chairman, A. B. Griffin, urged upon the members to give the officers their united support. The association was a necessity, he said, and deserved the moral and financial assistance of every grocer. The two local grocers' associations are growing more friendly and the likelihood of a "merger" is more than probable.

less than cost—it was an injury not only to the party who cut the price, but an injury to the trade and commerce of the country.

"We are depending on you for our existence," said Mr. Blain, "and you deserve to get fair profits. I believe that retailers as a rule are the worst paid men in the community, and you have a right to have protection if you do work which is fair and honest in the interests of the public and of yourselves."

Mr. Blain predicted that good results would follow from the convention. They would not be immediate. Perseverance will be required, but ultimately business would be placed on a fair and honorable basis so far as all its branches were concerned, two of which he felt did not get a fair consideration at the present time.

The remaining part of the convention will appear in next week's issue of The Grocer and as this includes E. F. B. Johnston's address on the Secret Commissions Act every grocer should see that he obtains his copy.

Prices of Flour May Show Decline in Near Future

No Change in Quotations in Either Flour or Cereals — Market Rather Quiet in the Latter—Export Trade Dull.

The flour and cereal markets show no change from a week ago. There is a possibility, however, of lower prices on flour being registered, but no one seems to have any idea when they will materialize.

Cereals show a general weakness, due to the opening of spring, but quotations remain the same. Export trade in cereals is light.

MONTREAL.

Flour—While winter wheat is not pressed on the market, Ontario millers are in a position to do without it, as there is no lack of supply of the Manitoba wheat at even lower prices than is asked for the Ontario article. Flour prices showed no change, but a decline is looked for by dealers.

A COMBINATION FRUIT.

H. Coxwell, grocer, Howard St., Toronto, reports an interesting curiosity which he found among a shipment of California fruit. It is a combination of orange and lemon, the divisions of the two fruits having grown together in alternate sections. The light yellow skin of the lemon and the dark yellow of the orange is pretectly blended, he says.

If One is Enough, Why More?

WHAT'S the use of carrying around a pumpkin when a hazelnut answers the purpose?

What's the use of keeping two salesmen when one makes more sales and holds the business?

Brother Grocer, what is the use?
Recently our Toronto people wrote us of funny happenings.
Said they:

"We called to-day on Up & Doing "and asked them why they were push-"ing FIVE ROSES exclusively as a "pastry flour to the exclusion of bread-"making.

And they replied that they pushed a Manitoba Hard Wheat flour for bread baking, but always recommended FIVE ROSES for pastry."

Pretty rich, don't you think.

Because, you see, FIVE ROSES is strictly a pure Manitoba Red Fife product, the immaculate extract from the heart of the berry.

And to think, Brother Grocer, that many praise it exclusively for its fancy cooking proclivities, pastries and "sich."

And, what's more, the pastry folks take to it like unto an hungry kid to the wetnurse.

While the re-orders take care of your profits.

No doubt 'tis due to our advertising in the newspapers far and wide, featuring in detail the pastry possibilities of FIVE ROSES.

Which only goes to prove what a mighty force is good advertising copy, since it has created a prejudice for FIVE ROSES as a pastry raw material.

We tell YOU this, Brother Grocer, lest you think of Manitoba Spring Wheat flours as good only for bread.
Why pay two salaries when one delivers the goods—

Why keep so many brands when FIVE ROSES turns the trick—

Why lose time and money talking with a dozen flour mill representatives weekly when one flour fills the bill—
Why open separate accounts, make small separate entries, multiply YOUR bookkeeping when it means NOTHING in the till—

Why harbour the slow seller when YOU can sell FIVE ROSES—

What's the use, Brother Grocer?

Since one is enough, let YOUR own good judgment dictate.

Act Now and save yourself the work of second thinking.

HIS REQUEST WAS LATE.

Got Order Badly Mixed and Missed a Golden Opportunity.

"Here!" called the pretty servant girl as the grocer's man was just starting out of the kitchen door, "where's that can of salmon?"

"Did you order a can of salmon?" he asked, turning round with his basket in his hand.

"'Course I did, and I don't see any raisins, either, nor the eggs. Say, what's the matter with you lately, anyhow? You never seem to get anything right any more."

"I don't remember of you ordering eggs," he said, slowly.

"'Course you don't—you don't remember nothing. Here's summer squash. Who told you to bring a summer squash? You're about the limit."

"Say, Annie," he began, with a pained expression on his face, "please don't talk to me like that; it hurts my feelings."

"Lookey here," snapped the pretty servant girl as she brought her foot down sharply on the oil-cloth, "you don't know me well enough to call me by my first name!"

"Well, I'd like to," he said doggedly.

She blushed and poured some hot water into the dishpan, but did not reply. He stood embarrassed picking at the edge of the basket.

"D'you know why I got that order all balled up this morning?" he asked finally, with an effort.

"No, I don't," she answered.

"Well, I'll tell you," he plunged on desperately; "when I come for it I had my mind all made up to ask you to go for a walk with me next Sunday afternoon, but when I got where you was I lost my nerve and was so rattled I didn't know what I was writin' when you was givin' me the order, and that's the honest truth."

"Well, in that case, I s'pose you can take it over again. Now, listen."

Then she repeated the order while he took it down. He was as calm as a cucumber,

When he had finished he closed his order book and thrust it into his pocket.

"Well," he said, with his hand on the door knob, "will you come?"

"Come—where?" she asked, innocently.

"A walk with me, next Sunday."

"Very sorry," she said, with a face that told she wasn't the least bit sorry, "but the butcher's man asked me if I'd go driving with him next Sunday, and I told him I would."

THE WINDOW TRIMMER.

Speaking from a psychological point of view, the successful window trimmer of to-day should be endowed with the following faculties: Well developed imagination, inspiration, originality, color, balance, constructiveness, individuality and patience.

Imagination enables him to picture in his mind the work he wishes to do.

Inspiration enables him, after that start has been made, to place the various articles to be used in the exhibit where they will show to the best possible advantage. All this comes to the trimmer as he builds up his display, just as new ideas come to the mind of the artist as he paints his picture.

Through originality the trimmer makes a display that is distinctive in design and style and that does not show the earmarks of imitation.

Patience, and lots of it, enables the trimmer to carry to a successful conclusion many a tedious piece of work, that he would otherwise leave out of the display. Patience without doubt is one of the greatest assets a trimmer can possess.

Balance concerns the placing of articles used in the display so that the exhibit will not appear to be one-sided or topheavy at any particular point. A well balanced display is absolutely necessary at all times. A proper interpretation might be, "A place for everything and everything in its place."

The day is not far distant when a window trimmer, as he is now termed, must be something more than a mere trimmer. He must add the qualifications of a decorator. A color scheme of draping the bare walls of a window with either cloth or paper will tend to bring out the beauty of the exhibit and make it more attractive to the general public than the old style of trimming. Harmony in color is another valuable asset to possess.—World-Wide Publicity.

Green Fruits—Local strawberries are now on the market in sufficient quantity to bring down the price to 15c and 18c per quart. Green Fruits—The arrival of the first carload of North Carolina strawberries on Tuesday indicates the near approach of the opening of the Canadian season. Last week the shipments were received from Louisiana, and it is not so long ago that the market had to depend upon the Florida-grown berries. The price is slightly easier, quart boxes being quoted at 17c to 20c and pints at 11c. There is a healthy demand for oranges, particularly in the smaller sizes. Lemons are firm, with the prospect for higher prices. The apple market is on its last legs, as the season is drawing to a close. However, there is still a good demand for the higher grade variety. Cranberries are also nearly done.

Vegetables—The vegetable market is brightening. There is a good demand for all the season's offerings and prices are slightly easier. Tomatoes are one of the most popular lines, and in the higher grades are of excellent quality. Our own outdoor-grown rhubarb is crowding the imported article off the market and is meeting a heavy demand. As to radishes, cucumbers, lettuce, beets, etc., the supply barely meets the demand. Potatoes are still at a bottom price.

Fish—The fish market is opening upon the season during which the supply is of the best quality. The day of frozen fish is practically over, having given way to the fresh-caught variety, which is being received in larger quantities. The prices are easier and the demand is noticeably increasing.

A sharp knife is run about the edge of the half grape fruit to separate the pulp from the skin, in preparing it for the table, but a pair of scissors is more easily used in cutting out the centre fibre. Besides, if the fruit is at all tough, the knife is much more apt to waste the juice, and makes a more ragged hole.

Used as a first course at breakfast, many hostesses prefer not to sugar grape fruit beforehand, for the reason that some guest may enjoy it better in its natural state.

A good test in buying grape fruit is the weight, which seems to disappear when the fruit becomes pulpy.

A grape fruit salad is occasionally very useful as a variety in the menu. The pulp should be cut in large sections, with the fibre removed, sprinkled with French dressing, left for half an hour on the ice and then piled on crisp lettuce leaves.

A delicious marmalade is also made, either from grape fruit alone or from a combination of grape fruit and oranges.

A very pretty dessert is obtained by cutting the rind of the half fruits in points and garnishing in the centre with maraschino cherries.

CASH REGISTER AND THERMOMETER.

One would hardly tumble to the idea that there is any connection between the cash register and the thermometer in business affairs. But there is a candy and ice cream parlor on Queen Street, Toronto, where the thermometer hangs besides the cash register and the proprietor says that they always move together. As soon as the thermometer goes up the cash register follows without fail, and when the thermometer registers below 40 deg. Fahrenheit then he takes a holiday and leaves the store in the hands of his assistant. They are two true friends, he says, which are always reliable.

ANNUAL PROFIT OF $1,580,000.

The owners of Ivory Soap—Proctor & Gamble Co.—in a financial statement recently made public in the Wall Street Journal, admit annual profits during the past twenty years of 8 per cent. on $2,250,000 preferred stock and 14½ per cent. on $10,000,000 common. This makes the average net profits for twenty years considerably over $1,580,000 a year. The quoted bid valuation of both classes of stock amounts to over $40,000,000. The business was started in 1837. For many years it has been the most extensively advertised soap in the United States. For one insertion of a page in one magazine they paid $5,000 a month.

They make a good soap, always maintaining the quality, and from small beginnings they have, by good advertising, built up this enormous revenue.

The T. Eaton Co., Toronto, have decided to close their store at 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoons during June, July and August. In former years the early closing was in effect only during July and August.

AVOID LOSSES IN COOKED HAM.

Care Necessary in Cutting Ham in Small Pieces—Watch the Ounces.

By M. M.

It is a very common habit for people to run to the store for 5c worth of cooked ham. This means from 2 to 2½ oz., which is so small that the average grocer is apt to throw in a little slice extra. A fraction of an ounce means a loss. It is impossible for a grocer to sell a ham in 5c lots and to get his money back, to say nothing of store expenses.

Why should this be continued? No order should be taken for less than 10c and that should be a quarter of a pound.

Supposing a grocer cuts up a ham that weighs 8 pounds and he sells it at 35c per pound, he would get $2.80 if he had no loss in weight. If he sold it in 5c lots he would have to weigh 56 times. Now, supposing he lost ½ an ounce each weighing, he would lose 28 ounces in the ham, which, at 35c a pound, would mean a loss of 61¼c.

All that it is possible to make on the 8-pound ham at 10c a pound profit would be 80c. Supposing it took a clerk two minutes to cut, weigh and do up 5c worth, it would take him 112 minutes altogether. Now, if the clerk gets $12 a week and works 10 hours a day, the clerk's time to put up that ham in 5c lots would cost 37 cents.

The loss in weight of 61¼c, plus the 37c, equals 98¼c. If to this is added the loss of the ends, which is unavoidable, in most cases, it would increase the loss at least 10c more; thus the total loss would be $1.08½, or just 28½c more than cost.

With the modern slicing machines now on the market the grocer can save a great deal in slicing ham. The old butcher knife cannot be depended upon to prevent waste.

The grocer surely is not to be blamed for the high cost of living when he makes such profits as these.

It is good storekeeping to sell only goods which you know to be reliable and to keep only such goods on your shelves.

All grocers should carry a full stock of Royal Baking Powder.

It gives the greatest satisfaction to customers and pays the grocer a greater profit, pound for pound, than any other baking powder he sells

TRADE MARK.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

1300 Varieties of Tea

Of the 1300 kinds of tea, some must be better than others. Among these better teas "Salada" towers high as the sunny mountain slopes on which it is grown.

The plantations of "Salada" have the best advantages of soil and climate. The tea plants are the choicest, and only the tender leaves and buds are used. "Salada" comes to you in sealed air-tight packages, preserving its delicacy and excluding all outside taint of dust and dirt.

Instead of carrying a large stock of Bulk Tea, is it not much better to carry a small well-assorted stock of "SALADA"? There is no loss in weighing—no exposure to dust and air. There is no freight to pay—no capital locked up. The tea is always fresh. Selling "SALADA" is convenient and profitable.

Purposes of Secret Commissions Act Explained

The Rights of Manufacturers, Wholesalers and Retailers as Expounded by E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., at Convention of Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange—Evolution of Business Conditions and Why Present Conditions were Brought About —Legal Combines and Those That are Illegal.

There was once in my native country a very old and very rheumatic and very testy Presbyterian minister, and one thing he objected to was draughts in the kirk. One cold, raw day, by some unaccountable means, the officials had left the four doors of the church open. He spoke for half an hour or longer upon the elementary principles and the cardinal points of his discourse, and he suddenly discovered the draught was too much for him. Leaving the academic, he at once imported into his sermon more vigor than usual. Thumping the pulpit, and turning in wrath to the congregation, he said: "Elders and deacons, shut the north door, and see that ye shut the east door; dinna forget to shut the south door and the west door." And, dropping his voice, he went on with his discourse. Two old gossips were coming out when the service was over. One of them said to the other: "Maggie, how did ye like the minister to-day?" "Well," she said, "I didna quite follow him through his cardinal points and his elementary principles, but, my, he was grand on the subject of shutting the doors!"

If I am grand on that subject, if I can help you in any way to shut the doors against the enemy I shall feel that what labor I have spent in regard to what I have done will not have been spent in vain. I do not think I can say much to you on the subject of how to make larger profits—a subject I would like to talk to you about, and give you some information upon if I were qualified. But, you see, my position is the converse of yours; I am for small profits. I am for cheap food: I am, from the personal standpoint, for cutting prices, so as to get my goods cheap; and looking at it from that standpoint I have endeavored to see, being a consumer—not a very large one, it is true—I have looked to see how it would affect the general community and the prosperity of the trade and commerce of this country if I, a consumer, had my way. Therefore, we have to look at it from both sides.

Specific Reasons Desirable.

If, however, you give the consumer the absolute control of the trade and business of this country, you are out of existence. If you give the wholesale dealer, or the manufacturer, the absolute control of the business of this country, and it happens to fall into the hands of men who are not, perhaps, over-scrupulous—occasionally we do get these men—then you destroy the rights of the consumer; and therefore what I have endeavored to see for myself, without knowing the price of sugar, or the price of tea (the only thing I know the price of is tobacco), without knowing any of these things I do not want to say, as did the old magistrate who was accused of partiality in the disposal of a case. He said: "I resent the imputation, and I deny all allegations of improper conduct. I have been on the Bench for thirty years, and throughout the whole of that time I have invariably taken the middle course between right and wrong!"

Now let me say a few words of a general character. A few ideas will lead up to what I am going to say finally in regard to the matters that I have to deal with to-day. In this rapid age, we all think too generally. We draw too many general conclusions. The man who can sit down and work out concrete principles, who can give the specific reasons for the specific act, is the man whose opinion is worth more than the man who casts the whole thing aside upon a general assumption, and says it is good for this or bad for that. The general principles of all business are manifest to the minds of those who are engaged in them, excepting in my own profession. There you never know where you are at, because judges will say one day that the principle is so and so, and that is reversed next week by another set of judges. I think it would be wise to rather crystallize some ideas that I have upon the subject, and I assume that my invitation to address as large a jury as this is, is due to the fact that myself and my friends, Mr. Armour and Mr. Ambrose, were able to do some service in the interests of a depressed trade, in the interests, I may say of, to some extent, a persecuted trade during the last ten or fifteen years.

In order to understand the exact position of matters, and in order to see just exactly where we are at in dealing with a subject of this kind, it is as well to ascertain what combines mean, what the Secret Commissions Act was intended to prevent, what indeed the criminal law of this country prevents, as I shall show you later on. I hope to your satisfaction. In dealing with that we have to see for a moment (I shall not detain you upon that point) what the origin of just such an organization as is represented here to-day meant.

These bodies were called "guilds," an honest old name, but one which in the minds of some people who did not understand the position, savored somewhat of a combine. But it is exactly what you and every other trade and business and profession are striving for to-day, and what you must strive for if you desire to retain your individuality and your concrete existence. It was founded upon common brotherhood, upon loyalty to each other, it was founded upon a system of faith and confidence that perhaps the world has never seen or experienced in these later days of trading and barter and exchange; and more than that, it was based upon the highest principles of morality and religion.

Early History of Guilds.

The very first guild that was organized was as far back as the days of King Canute, and that was purely a religious and moral guild. It was for the support and maintenance and assistance of all the infirm members, it was a looking after of those who were unable to look after themselves; it went so far as to provide for the burial of the dead. The first business guild was at Cambridge in England, a guild that to some extent dealt with trade relations. And just let me tell you from an eminent author what the principle underlying that guild was, and let us apply it to the present day concerns:

"If one misdo, let all bear it. Let all share the same lot." That was the motto on the flag of that guild. It was a banding together not for the purpose of injuring a human being, a banding together of men engaged in the same class of business for their self-protection, for the self-existence of their own trade or calling and for the protection of each other. That implied a very high moral rectitude; that implied the greatest amount of loyalty you would expect one human being to exhibit towards another; that implied absolute confidence in each other.

The old German guilds were based upon somewhat of a similar foundation. They were national to some extent, at the same time they were bodies that did deal incidentally with some matters of trade, but it is when we come to the London guilds that we find the ends of the trade and business of the country being taken care of. These guilds were originally formed for the maintenance of peace, for the protection of property, the suppression of violence and matters of that kind, and I am citing now from a well-known author upon the subject. As trade began to change, with various interests cropping up, so did the guilds assume greater control over trade relations until they became actually the municipal government of such towns as Berwick-upon-Tweed, taking charge of the municipal administration, controlling the markets and the police—taking practically the position—well, not quite the position of the Board of Control in the City of Toronto, because they did better than that—they managed things so well that they continued to flourish for hundreds of years along exactly the same lines until they became what were called the Crafts Unions—where you had the capital on the one side in the guilds as they originally started, and the craftsmen on the other side looking after the details and doing the work which led to the establishment of the modern day trades unions.

I am not going to take up any further time upon that, excepting to read an extract to show the high character of the guilds in those days. The same foundation ought to underlie any body of men who seek to assume for themselves the rights and privileges which you have a right to assume and seek in protection of your trade.

"The guild stood like a loving mother providing and assisting at the side of her sons in every circumstance of life, and cared for her children even after death; and the ordinances as to this last act breathe the same spirt of equality among her sons on which all her regulations were founded and which constituted her strength."

Having given you an outline of that, let us see what the conditions of trade are to-day, and how it is necessary that something — modernized, it is true — something along these lines must take place to-day; not to hurt your fellow man, nor to prevent your fellow tradesman from getting on in the world, not to prevent his buying and selling goods as freely as he can breathe the air of Heaven, but to so regulate and control trade and commerce and business along these lines that instead of being what some of you gentlemen were charged with being—violators of the law—you ought to have been credited with being protectors and defenders of honest law and honest administration.

Evolution of Changed Conditions.

Look at it for a moment. We cannot trade individually; that, of course, is out of the question. We have reached an artificial stage in the history of business, not only in this country but in all civilized countries, where the individual trader is out of the question. You start first with the mere exchange of one product for another. You have no division of classes, no division of responsibility; it is simply one man with the other. By and by, as our wants increase—and they are increasing very rapidly all the time—and as the supply becomes larger, you create a totally different condition of things, a complex position. Let me illustrate. I can recollect things that happened over forty years ago, and I can recollect what was the condition of the country longer than that. And what was it? In the original days of Canada the settlement was small, and confined to a very narrow area. I can remember the time when the shoemaker came round and made the boots for the family. He was the producer, the manufacturer. I can remember the time when the woman used to come round and make the dresses for the womenfolk of the family. I can also remember the days when it was no uncommon thing for the bagman to come round with his wares, to be followed, as the area increased, by the peddler.

Then you have the origin of the departmental store; the four corners—namely, the blacksmith's shop, the tavern, the general store and the other complement. That was caused by what? The general store was brought about not because the man wanted to take the whole business of the neighborhood, but by necessity, the demands of the people. Then you go on until the merchant came in with his specific line, the grocer, the dry-goods man as the case might be. Thus has the country expanded, and we have to consider not only the expansion, but let us look at it from the closer standpoint. It was not the expansion of the country so much as it was that the demands, the wants, and the tastes of the people were becoming more varied and had to be supplied in some way or another. They could not be supplied by the general store or the man peddling his goods about the country.

Thus you create a different state of affairs. There was thus created a purely artificial condition. In all business, we have an artificial condition; we have an artificial condition at Ottawa. What have we got? We have got the revenue, the system of protection, and various other policies—but take protective principles, free trade principles, anything you like; they may be perfectly good under certain conditions, but when you come to a certain complex, artificial condition in the affairs of any country, to say nothing of the individual community, you have to devise something to meet the requirements of that condition, and that is how you get the wholesaler. Why? Because we have, as I said, a sparsely settled country. You had to reach the consumer through certain media. What was the best? It was not that the wholesaler arrogated to himself the right to charge what he pleased. He did not desire to cut in on the privileges of the re-

GETTING AROUND THE SECRET COMMISSIONS ACT.

Incompetent salesmen have unique methods of dodging the law. The above represents a traveler who cannot secure an order at regular prices. He bets the retailer that it is not 11 o'clock when he knows it is nearly one. The surprised retailer takes him up and wins what is virtually a rebate—and the traveler gets the order. This is known by The Grocer to have actually occurred recently in a Canadian town.

tailer. He was the product of his times, and he came through a system of evolution; just as you find in the common life of the country to-day that the man who had his oxen and took his grist to the mill, to-day has his carriages and perhaps an automobile.

The man who had his home-made shoes fifty or sixty years ago, to-day has the finest patent leather the manufacturer can produce. Conditions have changed and in that change has grown up the body of men I see before me. In other words, your body is the result of evolution. It is not the creation of any corporation or any body of men to interfere with trade or commerce at all. The condition of trade has brought you into existence, and if conditions were changed, you would be without a calling.

Now you will bear in mind, as I said before—and let us get down to the concrete principles—you always had the producer, whether it was the home-made shoemaker, or the man who made the axe handle does not make any difference. You always had the producer. To reach the consumer in the early days was a very simple matter, but when you come to the condition of things you have in Canada to-day, and have had for the last forty years, the reaching of the consumer becomes a very complicated problem. You cannot compare London, or any of the big English cities, with Canada, because within an area of a few miles they have more consumers than we have in the whole Dominion of Canada. You had to reach the consumer in some way. You did it originally through the retailer. Then came the necessity for the wholesaler. Here is where a misconception has taken place in all the prosecutions that we have had in the courts in this country; an entire misconception.

The object and the very reason why the wholesaler came into existence was not that he should make money and increase the prices or eliminate competition, but to reach the consumer in a more direct and cheaper way than ever had been done before. He was created by the condition of things as they developed and as the process of evolution went on. The result is to-day we are dealing with the three classes. We are dealing with the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer, and I am not going to argue for a moment on what has been declared by the highest court in the province and some of the highest courts in England, and which appeals to our common sense, namely, that our present system has been found to be, as an absolute fact, the best and cheapest method of connecting the bank of the manufacturer with the bank on the other side of the stream, the consumer.

The manufacturer—let me say this in order that we may clear the way from a legal standpoint—the manufacturer has the absolute right to fix his price. It was argued in the cases I have referred to that by fixing his own price, and perhaps enhancing it, he was violating the Act. Not so. For instance, we have seen again and again, the result in argument by taking the case of Sir William Macdonald and, his tobacco. He produces a certain article. He is the only man who knows what the cost of that article is to him; he is the only man who knows how much the cost should be to enable him to make a living profit. He fixes that price. If he fixes it too high he has got the American Tobacco Co. coming in with perhaps as good an article at a less rate. He has got other manufacturers coming in in the same way. The same with the sugar refiners and canned-goods people. You may combine, but the moment you increase the price beyond the living profit, that moment instead of destroying competition (and the economic history of this country tells it) that moment you actually increase competition, because you encourage others to go into the business. We had the evidence of Mr. Robertson, who said the fault he had to find with the guild was that it increased competition, and there was a great deal of truth in the suggestion he made.

When you come to work it out, the moment you combine, or do anything that tends to enhance the price at all materially, that moment you find thousands of others ready to come into the market and supply the demand. So there is first of all the interest of the manufacturer, to have his profit; and he alone can tell, if he is an honest man he will tell, what the living profit should be. If he fixes it too high, he is met at once by opposition, and I care not what the merger may be, what the combination may be in even such an important body as the wholesale grocers of this country —controlling as you do a very large amount of the retail trade of this country—even you cannot control a situation so as to prevent competition.

These things must, however, be worked out in good faith. The manufacturer must depend upon the honesty of his agents. You are his agents. If he makes an agreement with you, he has the right to see that the argeement is carried out. Not only so; he has the right to so carry on his business that he may rely absolutely upon the fact that that agreement will be carried out—because according to the agreements he makes, so he cuts his cloth.

Now it is a matter of you gentlemen acting either individually or in combination. It is a matter of you handling certain products of this country. And to the extent to which you are able to make your trade relations perfectly honest in the observance of the contracts and all the rest of it, to that extent you are not only benefiting yourselves, you are not only benefiting the manufacturer, but you are reaching out towards the benefit of the consumer.

Wholesaler's Position.

The wholesaler, as I said, comes next to the manufacturer in the ordinary course of proceedings. The wholesale trade has been in existence for years in this country. It is no new thing to control the sale of goods of any particular manufacturer. It is needless for me to say where the wholesale trade is of benefit, because it is apparent to everybody. You save money, you save time, you put your retail customers in a better position, you form local distributing centres, you carry many of these men along from year to year who would otherwise perhaps go into liquidation; and if the wholesale trade is carried out according to the practices and regulations of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild, with which I may say I am familiar, you are not only conferring upon yourselves the dignity of an honest calling, but you are protecting the retailer, and you are also reaching out to protect the consumer.

But, like all other agents, it is necessary we should be honest among ourselves, and in saying that I speak as if I represented to some extent, at any rate, the wholesale people for the time being. When we make our contracts, having regard, as I said, to the complicated economic conditions of to-day, these contracts must be rigidly observed. The moment you break the smallest pinwheel of a machine, the machine is out of order. The moment you get grit—I don't mean political grit—into the delicate part of your machinery in a factory, that moment your machine becomes more or less affected. So here. The moment you get any misunderstanding, the moment you have any difficulty arising from the non-observance of a contract or otherwise, that moment your machinery is not perfect and something will go wrong. In a guild, or in a body of men such as I see before me, an organization such as you have here—I should say one dishonest man will upset the calculations and the working out of the scheme of all the other members of the institution.

Effect of Retailers Cutting Prices.

Now about the retailers I shall say very little. That is a subject that, I understand, has been dealth with. But I will point out that the same principles should apply in the minds of the retailers to the wholesale man, as should apply in the mind of the wholesale man to the manufacturer. The retailer is everywhere in touch with the consumer. He is the man that has the last stage in the distribution of the goods, from Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg, or elsewhere, wherever they may be produced, and each one of these men is more or less dependent on the honesty of his fellows. Take two men in the village. What is the result? They begin cutting prices. They begin struggling for trade not upon an open and honest living profit basis. And what is the result? It does not need me to tell you that one and perhaps both of these men will go under.

Now to keep this state of affairs in check, generally, I may say before I go to the legal aspect of the matter, to keep these in check, it is necessary that you should have regulations, and I shall tell you later on how far you are entitled to regulate without violating the law. But you have to regulate for several reasons, and I have noted them here in a very simple and itemized manner. You have to regulate this body, and not only this body but trade conditions. First, as I have said, to prevent any dishonesty being carried on, to stop the unfair dealing, to see that your system is carried out in its entirety and in every way to deal fairly and properly, to see that all your contracts are kept, and the contracts of your fellows, and to see after the cutting of prices, which has always been a sore spot with the wholesale man. To see that this is put a stop to, and in order to effect these matters you have a perfect right, as I shall show you in a moment, to pass your regulations and to impose your penalties. If you cannot carry out your system because your rules are not regarded, then you have a perfect right to say, "We will exclude so and so from our exchange," or guild as the case may be.

By reason of many of these violations happening, I am told by some of my friends among the wholesale grocers, the wholesale grocery trade became bad, profits were reduced below a living price, the whole system was disorganized and demoralized. They were carrying a lot of lines at a loss. Even the manufacturers were selling to the retailers over their heads at the same price as they were selling to you. They were depriving you of your market, the only market that was open to you, just as it would not be right for you to sell to the consumer at the same price as the retailer can buy his goods. In other words, they were selling your customers and wrecking your existence, taking away from you the only means of living you had, and as I put it to the court on more than one occasion, the fight you had to make was not for fair trade, the fight you had to make was not for high profits, the fight you had to make, gentlemen, was for your very existence. Hence the organization. Then you had your Guild, or Exchange, or combination. I like the name Guild, because the meaning of that word is plain. It signifies "payment." If you say "guild" it means your word is as good as your bond; that is the underlying principle of the whole transaction—honest, fair dealing.

What was the aim, as evidenced by many witnesses at the trial, the aim of the guild? First, it was to stop the cutting of prices; second, it was to try and make men, some men, live up to their agreements, and let me pay you the highest compliment any man in Canada can pay to a body of men. Perhaps it has not occurred to you in this concrete form, but let me say as a truth, and take it home to yourselves as a compliment coming from, I may safely say, one who knows from the best evidence that was given: For twenty years this body of wholesale grocers stood upon their rights, and on that twenty years' record they were put upon their trial. The old, dusty letter books that were almost obliterated by age, the old letters where the ink had faded out, the documents and papers and books of account, where you could write what you pleased on the covers—all these things were raked up against the Wholesale Grocers' Guild in the case of the King against Beckett and others; and in all the evidence, with all the force the Crown had at its back; with all the money that they could expend, with the assistance of able counsel and I don't know how many detectives besides, with ways that were dark and tricks that were vain, seeking to unearth evidence which had been left by a dead man; with all that in the whole twenty years' record we only found three dishonest men in the wholesale grocery business of this country! And yet they say "We are afraid the wholesale grocers will combine to the injury of the retailer and the injury of the consumer."

You have to build trade up, you are the gentlemen who have a great deal to do in the building of trade in this country. You have an example set you by two governments at Ottawa, by a system of protection, you have the theory of not cutting prices. Protection was passed for the purpose of doing what? To prevent the prices being slaughtered by foreign manufacturers with their surplus stock.

You, in endeavoring to stop the cutting of prices in your own land, are charged with crime. Fortunately the judge did not look at it quite in that light. This is important to know, and I shall briefly notice it. When this organization was formed you took the precaution, and a very wise one, to say "We will not exclude any wholesaler. We shall not determine who shall be members, the trade or business of the man shall determine that. If he is a wholesaler, he shall come with us; if he doesn't choose to come he can stay outside; he shall receive exactly the same benefits as we have, without perhaps any of the responsibility." That was the distinguishing feature of your Wholesale Association. No man was prevented from getting his goods. The only test was this: If you gentlement in Toronto, and Montreal, and elesewhere, you producers, employ us to act as your distributing agents you must not sell to our customers at the same rate as you sell to us.

It doesn't need any argument to convince anybody that that was commonsense and fair play and the honest way of doing business, and whether a wholesaler belongs to the association or not he would be entitled to get his goods at the same rebate, royalty, or otherwise, as you were able to as members of the guild, and he would save his admission fee and his charges for lawyer's fees.

What do we find with all this cry against the wholesale people? We find this singular fact. Not only were you generous enough, not only was the wholesale trade generous enough to say, "We won't exact membership as a test; the test shall be a wholesaler or not a wholesaler." Men who never saw the inside of the Wholesale Grocers' Association room got their goods, got the same rebate and the same protection as you did. More than that, men like Mr. Eddy, like Sir William Macdonald and others, had old customers who had grown grey in their relations, and as a matter of sentiment you respected that and never objected to their selling to a few man who were old friends of theirs, and they have continued to sell to them as retailers at the same rate as they were selling to you. I ask, where you could find a body of men who were as generous as that? It would be a crying shame if there was a law upon our Statute Book that would hold them responsible for any kind of a reasonable and proper combination such as this was shown to be.

Case of Patented Articles.

There are some things, as I have said, in view of the general conditions of matters, I should like to point out to you as things that would be perfectly legal to do, and I have taken some little care to put them in a shape that cannot be objected to. In the first place, as I pointed out, it is perfectly legal for the manufacturer to fix his own price. If it is a patented article he must place it upon the market at a reasonable price, because he has been given a monopoly by the Crown to manufacture that patented article to the exclusion of everybody else, and the Crown says, having given you a seven year monopoly, with a renewal perhaps for seven years more, you must meet the public requirements. There can be no competition in that patented article, and we will so enact by legislation that you shall not be allowed to charge an extortionate price for that particular article.

But even with the patent you do not destroy competition. Why, look at the condition of things in regard to sewing machines and bicycles. I have never had much use for a sewing machine, but I know something about bicycles. Ten years ago you paid $125 to $150 for a bicycle you can get to-day for $40 or $50, although it may be in part patented. Thirty years ago, you would give $30, $40 or $50 for a hand sewing-machine that will cost you $10, $12 or $14 to-day. And why? Notwithstanding the protection by patent there was the striving by others to enter the field against the patent, and so successful were they in some cases that the patent was not worth the paper it was written on, commercially speaking.

When Combines are Legal.

But leaving the patent question out, you have the right to say to manufacturers;—"Fix your own price." And if the tobacco man, or the sugar man, or anybody else, charges more than a similar or a little inferior article can be bought for elsewhere, he will soon be out of business. Trade regulates itself. All we want is a good straight, stiff, honest backbone at the back of it. I say manufacturers have the right to fix the price. I say also the wholesale grocers have the right to combine honestly for self-preservation, and that is the very essence of the King and Beckett.

There is a sort of feeling generally amongst people that a combine is illegal. Nothing of the sort. A combine, as we understand the word ordinarily, is just as legal as anything else; but you must not so combine as to produce the injurious effects mentioned in the Statute. You must not do it for the purpose, bear in mind the expression, for the express purpose or even the incidental purpose, of enhancing prices. You must not do it for the purpose of limiting competition, or to interfere with the cheap and rapid transportation of goods. But for the protection of your own trade, for your self-preservation, a combine of the closest and most vigorous character is just as legal as anything else. This is one thing you can do. Another thing you can do. You can make your arrangements with the producers or the manufacturers to be their exclusive agents, and say to the manufacturer, "If you are going to employ people other than ourselves we won't act as your agents. Take the other people; leave us alone." That is perfectly legal. There is some hazy idea that this is preventing other people from trading. Not at all. I have a perfect right to go to the Massey-Harris people and say, "You appoint me, or myself and the chairman, as agents in the County of York for the sale of your goods exclusively." I have a perfect right to do it. The chairman and myself have a perfect right to say, "If you sell through anybody else, even if you yourselves sell in the County of York, we won't sell your goods." It is perfectly proper and perfectly legal.

The Breaking of Contracts.

Then you have this further right. You have the right to say, "You shall not deal with a man who is a contract-breaker." I am not bound to sell my goods to every man who comes in. I am not bound to produce goods for any man who chooses to come along and say: "I want so many goods, and I am willing to pay for them." I have a right to ascertain the character of the man I am dealing with, and I have a perfect right to say I shall not sell to a man who has red hair or black, as the case may be.

Why should not I? I control my own situation. No reason in the world why I should not. And if you find a man is not keeping up his contracts, if you find he is not an honest man in respect to his contracts, you have a perfect right to say: "We shall not deal with that man," You have a perfect right to see that the agreements upon which you shape and mould your business are kept; a perfect right to say these agreements are a part of the system. When you break any of the agreements you jar the whole system, it affects our business, our trade and our reputation, and you have a perfect right to see that these agreements are not broken. And you have the further right (keeping within the lines I have indicated) to regulate these by penalties. No company could live unless it had some power to impose penalties, either under its charter or under the general law of the land. Take any company, I don't care what it is. In dealing with certain stock—I am speaking of share stock—in that company, a man does something that is wrong. If you had no control over that man your company could not continue to exist. The general law of the land applies to him, but you have just as much right, so long as you keep within the limits I am indicating, to impose your penalties upon that man within your internal organization and your internal powers as you would have if the general law of the land did not apply to the case in point.

Must Act in Good Faith.

You have a further right—and this is perhaps the widest right you have—you have the right to do all things necessary to protect the interests of your business, provided they are done in good faith. Of course, if you once have malice against a man—say there is a man John Smith: "I have got my knife ready for him, and I am going to see he is cut off" —there you are actuated by an unlawful motive, a malicious motive, you have an ulterior object in view. But if you act in good faith, having the grounds for your action that for some reason or other it is necessary in the interests of your business—without exceeding the proper limit, without exceeding any legal rights at all, even if injury may come to a man through your act, that does not make your act illegal if it is done in good faith in the interests of the preservation of your business. I will illustrate what I say by reading an extract, to show you there is law upon the point. We have the law laid down by no less a Judge than Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, following the judgment of the late V. C. Strong:

> "It would be dangerous to accept as a settled doctrine of political economy or proposition of law, that under any and all conditions, and at all times, every man or corporation should be declared to have an absolute and inalienable right to buy and sell, trade or barter, with any other person or corporation, without restriction as to quantity or price."

We have such a man as Lord Herschell, in England, in the Court of Appeal, saying:

> "I do not doubt that everyone has a right to pursue his trade or employment without 'molestation' or 'obstruction' if those terms are used to imply some act in itself wrongful. This is only a branch of a much wider proposition, namely, that everyone has a right to do any lawful act he pleases without molestation or obstruction. If it be intended to assert that an act not otherwise wrongful always becomes so, if it interferes with another's trade or employment, I say that such a proposition in my opinion has no solid foundation in reason to rest upon."

That is the judgment of one of the highest courts in England.

A well known and authoritative author, Eddy on Combinations, says:

> "The right of a combination of dealers to advance their own interests by mutually agreeing to decline to deal with any manufacturer or wholesale dealer who should sell directly to their customers has been broadly upheld."

That is what I am contending for. So long as the objective point is the self-preservation of your business, is the interests of the business, although it may wipe other men out of existence, that is a matter of no consequence so long as it is done in good faith and not for any ulterior purpose.

And then we have the language of Chief Justice Falconbridge, who decided the case of the Guild. "The various cases of alleged oppression and 'driving out of trade' of persons who either openly, or by some ingenious device, aim to belong to the wholesale trade, and at the same time sell at retail, are thus easily understood. If this system were to be practised, it would injuriously affect and demoralize the trade, not only of the wholesaler, but of the retailer, and the consumer would certainly not be better off in the long run."

Things That are Illegal.

I have told you the things that you may do. I will tell you now the things you cannot do; and they are very few.

First, it is illegal to combine with manufacturers to fix prices. You leave the manufacturer alone, trusting to the tender mercies of your executive, Mr. Beckett, Mr. Blain, and a few others; their work showed up fairly well at the trial. Let your dealings not be with the manufacturer as to fixing prices, because that is an illegal combination. It is illegal to exclude wholesalers from your organization if they desire to join, because you would have no right to determine who should be members, except by the broad test of qualification. You would be taking upon yourselves to personally discriminate, a thing which is not permitted in law.

Another thing you cannot do primarily, although you may indirectly, or rather, it may be the result of what you have legally done. You cannot enhance prices by combinations or agreements or arrangements. The law positively says that is wrong. As I pointed out, you may do a great many things that may have the effect incidentally of increasing prices, but you cannot devise a scheme for this purpose. It must have the foundation of necessity and the saving merit of being in your own interests and in the interests of your own self-protection.

Another thing you cannot do. You cannot by any means known to the law, although I am afraid it is sometimes done—you cannot coerce any man into your belief or your system or your method. Every man has the right to his individual opinion, to exercise his individual act; and the moment you attempt anything that shows there is coercion against an individual, that moment you are within the scope of the law.

Expounds Secret Commissions.

Having said that much, perhaps more than I should have said, let me call your attention to an Act that was passed a short time ago, and let us see where that leads us. If I am right, in what I have pointed out in regard to the condition of trade, the necessary incidents of it and the necessity for the present division you have got of your three classes, then we find the law protecting that state of affairs if honestly carried out. There was a great deal of trouble in regard to many commercial matters as between agents and contracting parties, and Parliament passed an Act dealing with that very subject, and that is known as the Secret Commissions Act of 1909.

Under that Act an agent means any person employed by another. The first section or two does not apply to the case which I understand will happen even in a well-regulated family like the Grocers' Exchange. In the desire for business, and in the effort to make big returns, and sometimes perhaps if the agent is paid by commission, in his self-interest he will go to the retailer and will say, "Here are so many packages; they will cost you $12." The retail dealer says, "No, I won't buy them. I believe I can get them cheaper from another man." The agent says, "I will allow you a rebate," and he does it in this way. He says, "I will give you a dollar," or fifty cents, as the case may be, which would be a very high percentage upon a twelve-dollar lot of any particular article. He gives him the fifty cents, or the dollar, the man buys the goods, and gets his rebate in that surreptitious way. The agent, if his principal is honest, dare not return it to the principal, because he knows his principal is under a moral, if not a legal, obligation, not to sell at less than a fixed price. He returns it as his expenses, sends in the voucher and adds the fifty cents to the week's account. He has got the order, and thinks he has done an honest transaction. A great deal of wrongdoing may take place in that way, but when we come to the Act, whatever view may be taken of the earlier sections—I have some doubt myself as to how far they apply—but when we come to Section (c) of the Act you will find this, "Being an agent," that is, a person employed by another—"being an agent, knowingly uses, with intent to deceive his principal, any receipt, account or other document in respect of which the principal is interested and which contains any statement that is false or erroneous or defective in any material part, and which to his knowledge is intended to mislead the principal."

What the Penalties Are.

The man who does that is liable on conviction to two years' imprisonment, or to a fine not exceeding $2,500, or to both. The agent violates his principal's contract by selling below the fixed price; he is cutting the price. He is not doing it in the interest of his principal, because his principal loses the fifty cents or the dollar, as the case may be—I am only taking this small amount to illustrate. He is using his principal's money for a certain purpose that is not proper, and in addition to that he is returning his voucher to his employer, which is false and intended to mislead his employer, because he wants the employer to believe that the fifty cents was traveling expenses, or traveling allowance, instead of the rebate, which was an unlawful act.

It is well for the wholesale grocers to know this. But apart from that let us see what the statute says. We have a particular statute known as the Criminal Code, and I have summarized a section in order that it may read to you intelligently. Statutes are often passed which are not intended to read intelligently, because if they did and any man could understand them, my occupation would be gone.

This is Section 415 of the Criminal Code, which I have summarized, "Any person being a clerk or servant who falsifies any book, paper or writing, or makes any false entry in any book, paper or writing, belonging to his employer, or that has been received by him on behalf of his employer, or concurs in the same being done, is guilty of an indictable offence," and liable to maintenance, food and clothing at the expense of the state for seven years.

I say that the agent who goes out, without the knowledge of his principal, and does these things for the purpose of cutting prices, will find himself in grave difficulty some day, if not under the Secret Commissions Act, at any rate under Section 415 of the Criminal Code.

Now just a moment with regard to the Secret Commissions Act, and see what was intended to be covered by it. The Secret Commissions Act was intended primarily, no doubt, to prevent violation by agent under contracts of various kinds. The consideration, of course, to the agent that is mentioned in the Act would be the man buying the goods. It is to the personal advantage of the agent that he sell the goods, it is to the personal advantage of the agent that he extend the business of his employer, because so will he be rewarded, not only here, but hereafter. Under that condition of things, to begin with, the account he returns to his employer, is absolutely false; and let me say, if the wholesale grocer stands in with his agent in the deal and knows it, and authorizes it, either expressly or impliedly, the agent is not responsible. But I am taking a case where the agent does it on his own account, and for the purposes which I have mentioned.

To Bring About Honest Dealing.

The object of this Act was manifestly this: to keep the agents and all persons dealing with them, honest. That is the first proposition. The principal, the wholesaler, is not there; he has to trust his agent, he cannot go round and control every act of his traveler, he cannot see that the law is carried out or if his contracts are carried out; he must trust his agent, and it was important that some safeguard should be given to the employer in regard to the conduct of his agent, so that if he did that which was illegal he might be reached in some summary way.

The second object of the Act was to prevent the rules and contracts and regulations of the employer from being broken. Otherwise there would be no check. An agent could go about and break all the rules and regulations you could put in force. Then the third object was apparently to prevent collusion between the agent and the person he was dealing with, which was one of the most important elements of the Act.

Now you see how readily it could be done in the way I have indicated, and I am told that is the way it is done. I am advised that is the fact, and I am pointing out that that being the fact, such a man is liable under the section; and if he is not liable under that, he is clearly liable under the section of the Code.

I have just a few words to say about the cases which have been decided in our Canadian courts.

Decisions re Combines.

It is a matter I should like to speak to you about just for a moment. There is a great deal of misapprehension with regard to what has been decided by the courts in regard to combines. I am going to tell you briefly what has been decided in this country. In the Elliott case, the Ontario Coal Association, of Brantford, they had a list of members, and they refused to take in more members, although those seeking admission were on the same plane and belonged to the same class as the members who arrogated to themselves the right to control the coal situation. And the reason given on the by-laws was, they called them "eligibles"; and a man was only eligible up to the point when the company could not stand any more competition. In other words, as soon as they reached the high-pressure of competition the eligibles were shut out. They prevented other dealers from joining the association. The wholesaler couldn't get his coal, although he was in the same line of business as the members of the association.

The object was, under their articles and by-laws, to prevent anybody but the gentlemen who formed the combine, to prevent anybody, no matter how well qualified he might be, in the same line of business, and entitled to the same rights—to prevent these men getting the coal. The test of admission was not, "Is this man a wholesale coal dealer or a coal jobber?" The test of admission was this: if there were enough members to exclude competition nobody else, not even the proverbial Irishman, need apply; because he would be shut out. The whole object was to keep down competition, and therefore the court very properly said: This is the worst kind of combine. It is a combine to make money, pure and simple, and therefore it is illegal.

Take the Clark case; a Manitoba case. There the retail dealers were combining. It was only such retail dealers as the directors of the company determined by ballot or otherwise that could get into the association. Every retailer couldn't get in—only the favored few. A by-law fixed the prices, mark you. They combined to fix the price, combined to determine who shall and who shall not be members of this close corporation. They determined the price themselves, not as where the manufacturer determines it, in your case; or as where any wholesale man coming along with a clean record is welcome to join your association. Not that case at all. There the dealer was not joining as a retail dealer carrying on business. That was not the meaning of the word "dealer." The word "dealer" as declared by the by-laws of that association meant "member," and a man who was not a member was declared not to be a dealer.

These people were dealing directly with the consumer, and the result was immediate. You hadn't to go through two or three channels, the price was at once fixed by these men, and at once myself and the million other consumers, whoever they might be, had to pay that increased price.

In your record of business, matters are entirely different. Strange that with all this talk about combines, you can buy sugar to-day cheaper than you could twenty years ago. Singular thing that you can buy better tobacco to-day and cheaper than you could ten years ago, although I am told some of the producers are compelled to put it up a little lately owing to trade conditions.

Case Against the Plumbers.

You have made no attempt to enhance price. The effect, as I pointed out, might, under certain other conditions, have been to enhance, but the object was not to increase, and, as I say, the Clark case differed upon that particular point. Then there was another case—you will remember the plumbers' case. Well, we have no sympathy with the plumber. I tell you that much to start with. He did what was manifestly a very risky thing, not even the semblance of such a thing as was at any time done by or among the members of the Grocers' Exchange. I have no hesitation in saying of your combination, and I think it is a praiseworthy thing to say, that you have sense and honesty and courage enough to go out and say, "Yes, against all dishonest dealing, against the contract-breakers and the cutting of prices, we will combine."

But in the plumbers' case, when they got up steam, they got to this stage: that the dealers in exactly the same class as the association members could not buy from the producers or the middlemen; could not buy at all from them except at an advance. They could not even buy at the price the men in the association were buying at. But if the master plumbers, not being members (this is your case) had been able to go into the open market, being equally qualified with the members, and buy at the same price, there could have been no case against them. Instead of that, they formed a combination outside of that, and said: "Here is the supply house; you must get everything from that supply house, and at the end of that time nobody but members could get anything; and in the meantime there was this supply house enabling the members of the association to get their goods; and at the end of certain periods of time they would divide up the whole business and make the profits. And so the court properly held that this was an evil combination, and one which ought to be punished by law.

In this matter we find the same principles that governed and were approved of in the Gage case, the Ontario Salt case, Gibbons and Metcalf, and a number of other cases. The same principles as were adopted by the Wholesale Grocers of this country governed in these cases, either here or in England. The courts said: "You have not violated the law, you have acted within not only the letter but the spirit of the law, and you shall not be punished for any of these things; they are not a violation of any statute of the land." And that is the position; that is how the matter stands.

On Business Integrity.

Let me say a few words in conclusion upon the matter of business integrity which is always important. As I pointed out in the beginning, general remarks are sometimes not valuable, general reasoning is not of great value to the people who hear it nor to the man who reasons. We have to get down to something like fixed, concrete principles, and see just where the generalities lead us to.

It is very well to say that the combination, or that the general conditions, or the exchange of trade, or whatever it may be, require certain general things to be done, but we ought to inquire first of all what are the real objects of such a combination or of such an association as this.

As I have worked it out in my own mind there are four things to be sought. Each one laudable, each one praiseworthy, each one something we ought to be proud of if we attain to. The first great object of an association of this kind, or of any guild, call it by what name you will, is to preserve the sanctity of an agreement. I care not what means you employ, I care not how hard it may press upon some people or their business; remember that one of the great things to be sought for by any aggregation of men, whether in trade or commerce, or in the private walks of life, whether publicly, politically or otherwise,—the great thing is to preserve the sanctity of your agreements.

The second is, that in all organizations composed of honest men, doing an honest business, it is necessary to maintain loyalty to each other—no underhand dealing, no taking advantage in some concealed or surreptitious way, but that open, frank, outspoken loyalty, shown in words and in deeds; the confidence that one man must have in another, and in the loyalty which his fellows show to him and to the objects of the institution to which he belongs.

Considering the condition of matters, do not look upon your business as a mere money-making concern; because the man who spends his life gathering coppers together and storing them away and denying himself any little luxury he might otherwise have, that man is not pursuing the object of his life at all. That man is not living the life of a citizen. I say, therefore, that the third great cardinal principle is to look upon your business as a trust given to you to guard and watch and carefully protect.

In your hands lies the destiny to a great extent of a very large proportion of the trade and business of the Dominion of Canada, and as you carry on that business so you are stamping upon it the sacred character of a trust given into your hands; or by taking another course you will have the demerit of having abused the confidence that has been placed in your power.

The fourth is, that you should seek in all your regulations and all your rules to not only advance your own interests, which is the bounden duty of every man to do, but you should to the utmost extent protect the interests of your fellows in business.

Those four cardinal rules, take them as your charter, take them as the foundation of all proper, honest trade and business, and you won't go far astray no matter what means you adopt to carry out those principles. By accepting these, you at once raise the moral standard of trade and business in this country. You elevate the tone and character not only of your own business, but of the whole business of the community. By so doing, you purify the channels of commerce from one end of the country to the other, and even beyond the limits of this country. In your dealings with the English and German and American markets the same principles will hold good, no matter what the class of people may be you are dealing with. Purify the channels of commerce; you have nothing to dread and nothing to be ashamed of; and by these means you will become in fact as well as in name, the merchant princes of the land. Your own lives will be better and higher in their ideals by pursuing a course such as I have indicated; your citizenship will be loftier in its aims and purer in its objects, and your duty to the State will be more faithfully and more fully discharged. Private life is a reflex of our business dealings. Do not run away with the idea, do not let any of us run away with the idea that we can be pure in private life and impure in our public transactions.

And let me say that as you improve the character of your public calling, so will your political, religious and moral conduct add to the national reputation and integrity of the great Commonwealth under whose broad banner of liberty and fraternity you live in the enjoyment of all the benefits and privileges of free, individual right of thought and action.

To Confer with Manufacturers re Selling Plans

Wholesalers and Retailers Have Committees Selected to Wait on Them—Resolution Naming Travelers' Holidays — No More Christmas Presents—Sugar Arrangement Discussed and By-laws Approved of—Close of the Convention.

Toronto, May 6.—The closing stages of the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' convention last week saw among other things the election of the following officers:

President—F. T. Smye, Balfour, Smye & Co., Hamilton.

1st Vice-President—Jno. Dillon, A. M. Smith & Co., London.

2nd Vice-President—F. F. Telfer, Telfer Bros., Collingwood.

Secretary—H. C. Beckett, W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, (re-elected).

The last day was devoted to adoption of by-laws; appointment of committees, including a committee to interview and confer with manufacturers—particularly those of baking powders, canned goods, laundry soaps and condensed milk—with a view to obtaining better profits, etc.; and resolutions re travelers' holidays and Christmas presents.

It was provided in the by-laws that members should be expected to belong to the local, provincial and Dominion guilds. Membership in the Provincial guild is to be had through the local guild, and the Dominion through the Provincial guild. Any member defaulting or withdrawing from the guild will have all privileges withdrawn, and the other members of the trade are to be informed of the late member's withdrawal.

The by-laws were favorably received and passed on for adoption by the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Exchange convention, which meets in Montreal on June 22.

Wholesalers Not Prompt.

During the succeeding discussion there were many points touched upon and many important statements made. F. T. Smye referred to the attendance of so many retailers the previous day. They were there in their might with some 90 men, and wholesalers had a big lesson to learn from them in promptness. He deplored the carelessness of some wholesalers in not replying to communications and attending conventions. Manufacturers were being educated to see that wholesalers should have their rights and to see that prices shall be kept.

"Are we going to allow two per cent. of the wholesale trade to ruin us?" he asked. "We should grasp the first opportunity for we want a fair deal. The conviction of the retail trade is for a square deal; they came here yesterday with clear-cut resolutions; they do not want secret rebates and underhand work and they do not want to be antagonistic to us. More than one told us the proper plan was to support members of the exchange."

Uniform Travelers' Holiday.

Chas. Parsons, Parsons & Brown, Toronto, was delegated to draft a resolution regarding travelers' holidays. When this was presented it called forth much discussion, there being a difference of opinion. Some claimed that there should be no set time for these holidays; that travelers wanted them when they wanted them, and not at a certain time specified two months prior to the vacation period. This was the contention of A. H. Pafford, Davidson & Hay, Toronto, who agreed that if this were done his firm would not send out substitutes.

Others claimed that travelers had plenty of holidays—two every week. But this point was argued. Some maintained that their travelers worked just as hard on Saturday as on any other day.

W. G. CRAIG, KINGSTON,

H. C. Beckett, W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, said that retailers liked to see travelers get a holiday, and he found that grocers did not support houses who did not give them the usual holiday.

The resolution called for the holidays extending from July 23 to August 6. This does not apply to eastern houses, such as those at Kingston, in view of the competition from Ottawa and Montreal houses who do not belong to the exchange.

Personally, Hugh Blain thought as did Mr. Pafford. But that would render useless all attempts to give travelers holidays. Concerted action was necessary. On general principles, he did not agree with the stand of the Kingston trade, as he believed that retailers could be educated not to purchase from those who did not grant the holidays. If different firms have different terms there would not be concerted action. He did not propose to stand aside and see a representative of another firm out on a certain district when his traveler for that district was on a holiday. He would have to send a substitute. The following resolution, moved by Chas, Parsons and F. T. Smye, eventually carried:

> "That the travelers' holidays as in the past should consist of two weeks, commencing Saturday, July 23, and ending Saturday, August 6, this to apply to travelers within the same territory as last year."

The usual resolution to eliminate Christmas presents also carried. This was found to be the cause of much expense for little value received.

A Manufacturers' Committee.

The selection of a Manufacturers' Committee to confer with manufacturers regarding selling plans of the latter, was the next question considered. This committee is Jno. Dillon and T. B. Escott, London; H. C. Beckett and F. T. Smye, Hamilton; Hugh Blain and A. H. Pafford, Toronto; W. G. Craig, Kingston, and an Ottawa wholesaler to be selected later.

A resolution was then drafted to the effect "that this convention loyally support the Manufacturers' Committee and act in support of any suggestion made or arrangement decided upon."

Geo. E. Bristol wanted a standing vote. One wholesaler declined, maintaining that anything within reason would have his sanction. If the committee boycotted any manufacturer, he would not like to support it, because he thought it would be illegal.

H. C. Beckett—"That's not boycotting. I'll read you the law—we have the right to refuse to handle goods of a manufacturer; we can combine to do that."

He then quoted from the judgment of Justice Falconbridge in support of his claim.

"Manufacturers have always defeated us on account of petty jealousies of the trade," he added.

This satisfied the member who had held out, and the resolution was unanimously carried.

The committee of retailers, recommended by the R. M. A., with which the Manufacturers' Committee will confer, is composed of M. Moyer, (chairman), Toronto; F. W. Forde, Ottawa; Jno. O. Carpenter, Hamilton; T. Nappy, Brockville, and E. M. Trowern, Toronto.

One of the wholesalers asked if there was anything to be done with the suggestion that the Ontario Government reimburse the exchange for the expense in connection with the guild case. This, however, was not considered for a minute.

Changes in Sugar Arrangement.

The existing sugar arrangement was under discussion for a time. It was suggested by one member that sugar be sold at "open" prices—that is, at the prices existing when the order arrives at the office of the wholesale house. The handling of the second grade of granulated sugar also came up, but these questions, as well as alleged violations, were passed on to be discussed at the meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, which will be held in Montreal beginning June 22nd.

Cheers for the retiring president and for the secretary brought the convention to a close about 4.30 on Thursday afternoon, which, in view of the questions discussed and the frankness of speech was a memorable one in the history of the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange.

Plea for Unity Among the Three Trade Branches

Address in Part of E. M. Trowern Given at the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange Convention—What Retailers Were Objecting to and Some Remedies Suggested — Manufacturers and Wholesalers Selling to Consumers a Thorn in Retailers' Side.

The Retailers' Position.

The subject which I desire to present to you this morning, if covered completely, is one that cannot possibly be dealt with fully and justly in the very short space of time that has been allotted to me, generous and all as you have been in giving me so much of the valuable time of this convention, as its boundaries cover the entire commercial field and everything pertaining to the trade and commerce, not only of Canada, but of the British Empire, and also all the other nations of the earth.

These three factors, the manufacturers, the wholesalers and the retailers, represent the great commercial highway and its accessories, upon which our trade and commerce travel. They embrace the entire machinery for the transmission of raw product from the time it is taken from the field, the forest or the ocean, until it is placed into the homes of the consumers. In considering the extent of our commerce or the commerce of any country as a whole, the three interests are inseparable, and their relationship is as closely identified one with the other as is the body, soul and spirit of an individual. They represent, in fact, a trinity of interests, one in three and three in one. Before the producer can place his spade into the earth to dig the ground or plant the seed, the spade must be manufactured, and so around this manufacturing process the distribution must take place, either in large quantities or singly one by one. The first step in the great procession of commerce is taken by the manufacturer, the second the wholesaler, the third the retailer. Around all these interests and subsidiary to them, but not before they exist, comes our currency, our vessels, our railroads and our vehicles for transportation; our seats of Government, our educational institutions, our private and public buildings, our insurance, telegraph, cable and telephone systems, etc., all of which have come of necessity out of and been the result of the great advent of our commerce, which has always and will always lead the way to the opening up of the mighty march and advancement of our civilization.

The relationship, therefore, of the three interests, the manufacturers, the wholesalers and the retailers, has not been forced upon the community against its will. It has not arisen because some official tribunal has so willed it, or because we have become welded to it through custom or habit, and have been afraid to separate ourselves from it. It has come upon us, it has remained with us, and it will always be with us because it is the only natural, orderly, systematic development of a God-ordained natural law, that cannot be departed from without injuring the entire fabric and structure of our civilization. In fact, upon our commerce our entire civilization has been constructed.

"Having in our possession then as merchants and manufacturers, the instruments out of which has been created the fundamental principles upon which our civilization has been built, and upon which it is being built, are we sufficiently conscious of our responsibility? Are we directing and regulating them as we should? Are we using them properly? Are we allowing them to drift and regulate and control us? Are the three interests working in harmony? Or are we allowing the natural channels to be congested and their currents to be displaced? Is the body, soul and spirit of trade working harmoniously together as one unit, or is the body starved and sick, the soul in anguish, and the spirit depressed and downcast? It is for the purpose of considering this subject, I take it, that we have met here and I trust that in the discussion that will follow, as I believe it is your intention to so do after I have expressed a few thoughts upon it, that you will do so in the most fearless and open-minded manner possible having primarily in view the general welfare of the manufacturing, wholesale and retail grocery trade of Canada, and leaving any individual grievances that you may have, to be taken care of at some future time, and after we have established and agreed upon some common principles, that are apparent to all and only require our confirmation and active and united support to put them into operation.

"As a retail merchant, who has labored for many years and given considerable time and attention to association matters, I can assure you that the present meeting, where we are gathered together as manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, is to me one of the brightest signs in the commercial horizon. It is one that I have long wished to see materialize, and one that I hope will continue and be the first step towards building up a unity of interest that will not only help the grocery trade of Canada, but will point the way and create in the minds of all those engaged in commerce that they are filling no menial position in society, when they are standing up and declaring that they intend to take their part in operating the great machinery of commerce, and in directing the counsels of the grocery trade of Canada. They thereby co-operate in a practical way with their fellow manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers so that our trade and commerce will be placed upon a higher and better plane, and thus educating public opinion and direct the attention of our Governments to the fact that our motives in meeting together are not for the purpose of extracting unreasonable profits from our customers, the consumers, but to so regulate our trade affairs, through fair and honorable methods, that everyone engaged in it may occupy in the public mind as important a position in society as that accredited to the arts and professions which must of necessity follow, not lead, in any national progress that commerce may make.

"Having shown then that our relationship is closely allied and dependent one on the other, how can we best become associated so that the greatest welfare of the whole can be accomplished, which when accomplished will result in greater advantages to ourselves as well as to the consumers, who are our customers and friends. I do not intend here to refer to any reasons why what we desire now has not been brought about in the past, further than to say that we are now, I hope, entering upon a new era, and it is my hope and desire that we formulate as a beginning some plan whereby the three trade interests may co-operate more closely than they have done in the past, for their mutual benefit.

"To do so successfully there must be some recognized principles upon which we must all agree—not in the sense of limiting our capacity for business or laying down some hard and fast rules regulating the detail of our business, and in any sense taking away from us the power to develop our individualism, and thus endeavor to set us back into the age of serfdom or force us into the visionary age of modern socialism. If our organizations stand for anything they must stand for the preservation of individualism in trade and commerce, controlled only by rules agreed upon by all and which are for the best interests of all, or in other words "individual freedom under collective control."

Scope of Manufacturer.

"Let us take as an example of what we mean, the question that has often been asked in various conventions: "Should a manufacturer occupy the three-fold position, that of manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer?" or "Should the three interests be isolated, yet devoted, to their various functions?"

"In considering these subjects we must always bear in mind that there is a natural law underlying trade subjects, the same as the natural laws that govern and control our conduct, and we are well aware that if we violate them we suffer, or if we depart from them our reward is awaiting us without any possibility of escape. So it is in trade. If we depart from the natural order and do not recognize the natural channels we must pay the price and suffer the penalty.

"General experience, without any demanding edict from the trade, has shown the majority of intelligent manufacturers that if they want their product marketed in the cheapest, most expeditious and safest manner they must use the machinery provided by the wholesale trade, which amounts to several million dollars. They have found in addition to this enormous machinery that they have the good-will of the wholesale houses and the good fellowship of the vast multitude of commercial travelers, whose glad hand means a valuable asset to the manufacturer, to say nothing of the great saving in the expense of marketing an individual article.

"Then again, follow the cost of bookkeeping, the freight and express charges, the cost of bank drafts, the loss in failures and numerous other incidental expenses and the question settles itself in its natural order and according to natural law without having to have a hard and fast mandate from the trade. If the manufacturer pursues the field further and attempts to sell directly to the consuming public, his troubles are still further increased and so also are his expenses. Experience, therefore, has proven that the natural order and relationship of trade is from the manufacturer to the wholesaler, from the wholesaler to the retailer and from the retailer to the consumer.

Cutting Heart Out of Prices.

"Admitting however, that the above channels are the natural ones and the ones that are most profitable for the manufacturer to follow, there are some who have strayed away in some particulars from the narrow path that leads to joy and peace, and I am sorry to say they have been following the desires of their own selfish hearts. Perhaps it is because no one has been on the watch tower, no one guarding at the switch. But now those who have been slumbering are commencing to awaken, we hear this question asked: "Do you think it is fair that a manufacturer should load up the wholesale houses at a price and then sell on the same quantity terms to a few select retailers, who use the special discount given to them to cut the heart out of the prices of the legitimate dealers, who sell the same goods in the same locality and who are desirous of doing an honest trade, and being regarded as honest citizens in the eyes of their customers?"

"Our answer to this is: 'No it is not fair either to the wholesale trade or to the retail trade and it will eventually demoralize the manufacturer's goods, and the only difficulty just now is that the machinery of the natural trade law of compensation for violation of trade laws is out of order, and we hope soon that it will be in the hands of skilled experts and when it is made complete it will commence operations after due notice has been given and no mutual and fair understanding can be arrived at. We are quite aware that some manufacturers take the narrow view. They look at the sales of one given retail grocer in some special locality, and because that appears to be large he thinks that that retail grocer should have special discounts or special privileges, forgetting that the reason in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred why this particular retail grocer's sales in this particular line is large, is because he is not only giving away the illegitimate discount given to him by the manufacturer which should go to the wholesaler, but he is using this line of goods as bait to attract customers to buy other lines. By so doing he has discouraged the sale of these goods not only through the wholesale houses, but by all the legitimate retail dealers in his neighborhood, proving again that all laws that are violated carry with them a sure, if not an immediate, penalty. It is the continuation of this system of doing business that has forced hundreds of retailers to discontinue handling some lines of goods altogether, and thereby creating new markets for new goods and adding and multiplying competition in the same line.

"If trade was as it should be and if we had more cohesion between the three branches of the trade, a great many difficulties that now exist could be removed. Instead of the wholesale trade being looked upon by some manufacturers as a necessary evil, they should be welcomed and assisted and regarded as their best friends and as their legitimate distributing and financial agents.

"Take also the retail grocery trade of Ontario. As nearly as I can estimate it we have over four thousand five hundred retail grocers. Estimate that the average investment is one thousand dollars and we have the enormous sum of four million five hundred and sixty-seven thousand dollars ($4,567,000) represented. Add to this the value of the real estate they occupy, the number of horses they keep, the number of employes they have, the fire insurance and the taxes they pay and you have then only some slight idea of what this enormous selling force represents. Add the wholesale and the retail trade together and imagine for one moment that if the manufactured lines that this great selling force handles, had the real hearty good-will of these distributors behind them, what would this mean to the manufacturers that are now in business?

"You may ask me as a representative of the retail trade if I think that the retailers have any reason to doubt that they have not now got the hearty goodwill of the manufacturers, and I must frankly confess to you that while you may all express in pleasing words your good fellowship there remains yet a percentage of you who are not showing it, in my opinion, in a practical way. This may seem severe but in conferences of this kind if we want to accommaplish anything we must be above all other things openly frank and honest. It may seem unnecessary to remind you that in the affairs of life generally an underpaid servant who is forced to serve long hours and use some of his own money or borrow from others (it may be his wholesale friends) to eke out an existence and keep his family, is not as a rule an alert, bright and happy advocate of the cause of his master—and so it is with the retailer. When manufacturers think, which I am sorry to say a few of them do, that they can create a public demand for their goods and force the wholesalers and retailers to handle them on a starvation margin of profit, they are endeavoring to force unwilling servants and the said servants are commencing to rise in rebellion, and as long as I am elected to represent them and free to speak, as I am glad to say I am, I must frankly confess that I shall do all I can to encourage them to rebel, and not only rebel but strike, and strike good and hard as well.

"Now I am not saying this in any spirit of anger or idle boasting. I believe more, much more, can be accomplished by reason and negotiation than by warfare and strike, but I would be unfaithful to my duty as secretary and it would be against the inherent principles of my race to allow this subject to pass without telling you what the real feeling is, and how many feel it in their hearts, but do not express it with their tongue, but we have to face it sooner or later, then why not face it now? All this only points us to another reason why our relationship should be more closely welded together and when they are, these misunderstandings, these unpleasant conditions and these aching wounds, that are constantly being re-opened, will and can all be healed; and instead of the retailers wearing a scowl and a frown when certain goods are asked for, his face will reflect the radiance and good-will of the manufacturer, and his hand shake will mean more, much more, than the greedy grasping after earth's riches, it will be the hearty shake of appreciation and of practical good fellowship and goodwill.

"It was not my intention to confine my reflections entirely to the manufacturer as he is only one party to my subject, but I cannot close without again reassuring him that the retail trade desire closer relationships and they have just as much confidence as ever in the contract plan of selling goods as they had when they first advocated it seven or eight years ago. We trust that this subject will not be overlooked during the discussion of our relationships, as it is one that not only vitally affects us all, but one that must be initiated primarily by the manufacturer.

Selling Direct to Consumer.

"To our wholesale friends we may say that we have many things to say to them that I hope will be taken up in the future as a result of this meeting, and which time forbids us to enter into now, but among them, however, is that old time subject of their selling direct to the consumers. From the standpoint of the retailer we can see and we know of many other matters that should be mutually adjusted and which I trust will, the result of which will mean more trade comfort and more prosperity to us all.

"Having therefore, pointed out the need for closer co-operation among us all and pointed out some of the pitfalls that by consultation can be overcome, I would not like you to think for a moment that while I have been pointing out some of the evils that exist among manufacturers and wholesalers, and which we trust to have remedied very soon, that I am forgetting our own shortcomings and our own faults.

"To do this would be to cover up perhaps the most unsightly view of the picture, and the only regret I have is that space will not allow me to present it so that you will be able to see some of the evils that are being committed, and some say because they are being committed higher up they are being reflected on those lower down. But be this as it may, no remedy can be effectual until it is agreed upon mutually by all interests. The retail evils, however, like other matters should be taken up in the full consideration of how best to improve the entire grocery trade of Canada, and in it will be found food for thought that will occupy some of your best minds and your most active intellects, but it can only be accomplished by unity of action and unity of purpose and this will mean the active co-operation of the manufacturers, the wholesalers and the retailers.

"If from among these three great interests you can select men, which I am sure you can, who have the living interest of the trade at heart, who are big enough and broad enough to lay down principles and ethics of trade in which all who desire honest methods of trade to be conducted, can travel in, you have laid the foundation and taken the first step to point out to the other nations of the earth, that if Canada does lie in the north, if it is only a colony of the British Empire, and a thinly populated place at that, that the business population at least are determined that they shall have a voice in the administration of their commercial affairs, so that they can place the trade and commerce of Canada upon such a high plane that they will attract to our shores all those who feel that here at least trade is sustained on a fair, honorable basis, and the name "Canada" will be synonymous with "Fair Trade" and "Fair Commerce" and shine out more prominently than ever as the brightest gem in the British Crown."

Grocers at "Soo" Have Protective Association

Reforms of Vital Interest to the Trade Being Agitated—Want Lower Freight Rates and High Licenses on Peddlers — More Friendly Relations With Wholesalers.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., May 5.—The retail grocers of Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton, Ont., have an association, which although organized but three months ago, has already exerted an influence that is proving a benefit to the trade.

It boasts of twenty-five members, apparently a unit in their desire to increase the usefulness of their association, realizing that only by concerted effort can success be gained. Indications of the aggressiveness of the grocers of the "Soo" are found in the reforms that have been, or are being, brought about, and in the programme they have mapped out for future endeavors.

A credit information bureau has been established and the members have found it of real practical value on many occasions during the past three months.

After Lower Freight Rates.

A movement is being planned to secure lower freight rates, and the better handling of produce and goods coming in by freight. More satisfactory relations between the wholesaler and retailer is another item of general concern, and an attempt will be made to have a heavier license placed upon peddlers, whereby their operations within the city shall be restricted.

The association is planning to hold its first annual excursion on Civic Holiday and in various ways the members are uniting under a friendly spirit, which will be the keynote of their success.

Three months have satisfied them with what can be accomplished by a good association. They recommend it, in fact, to the grocers of any community as an effective method of solving many of the problems of the trade and of improving and rendering more pleasant the business relations between the members.

The president of the Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton association is E. J. Ewing, and W. F. Danskin is the secretary.

HAS LIVED 75 YEARS.

Toronto, May 5,—The oldest grocery establishment in Toronto—Michie & Co. —this week celebrates its 75th anniversary. It is in fact the oldest retail business in this city, having been established May 1, 1835, in the same spot on King street on which it stands to-day. The founder was the late Geo. Michie. After him came his nephew, James Michie, and following him was his nephew, J. F. Michie, who is at present head of Michie & Co.

The firm attribute the great success of their business to quality and service about which something will be said in The Grocer in the near future.

A TRAVELER'S DEATH.

After a short illness, Capt. A. F. Holmes, one of the old reliable "Knights of the Grip," passed away at his home in Napanee. For a number of years Capt. Holmes represented E. W. Gillett Co. Ltd., between Toronto and Montreal, and by his genial personality made a host of friends who will not soon forget him or his many good qualities. The Gillett Company lose a faithful employe, the boys on the road a genial wholesouled companion, and the trade will miss his good-natured face.

INDIGNATION AT PICKEREL LAW.

Montreal, May 5.—An error is said to have caused the law regarding the pickerel close season to read April 15th to May 15th, instead of May 16th to April 14th, one month, instead of eleven.

The Department of Fisheries at Quebec has had its attention called to the matter by J. R. Innes, secretary of the Fish and Game Protective Association. Fishermen are very indignant about the whole matter.

TRADE NOTES.

Charles Gurd has returned to Montreal from Europe.

C. F. Specht, grocer, 885 Dundas St., Toronto, has assigned.

Jas. Showers has opened a grocery store in St. Thomas, Ont.

Robert Heron, Montreal, with W. D. McLaren & Co., is out of the city on a business trip.

G. P. Johnston, manager of the Royal Polishes Company, has returned to Montreal, from Toronto.

John Fullerton, of Rowat & Co., who has been on a trip to the Pacific coast, has returned to Montreal.

Watt, Scott & Goodacre, Montreal, have removed to larger and more commodious quarters at 32 St. Sulpice St.

The grocers of West Toronto held their first Wednesday half holiday this week. The majority of the trade have decided to take the half day off.

Allan Clark, for more than three years and a half with D. Simpson & Co., general retail merchants, Pickering, Ont., has joined the selling staff of Wm. W. Brack, West Toronto.

An Ontario charter has been granted Mason's Limited to acquire the business of Mason Miller Co., manufacturing and dealing in sauces, relishes, soups, and similar goods. The company is capitalized at $40,000 with head offices in Toronto.

E. Tessier, grocer, located at the corner of Colborne and William Sts., Montreal, for many years, has moved to the northern part of the city and is now carrying on business in a newly equipped, modern store, corner St. Urbain street and Laurier avenue.

CANNED FRUITS ADVANCE.

Two weeks ago The Grocer stated in this column that canned fruits were about to advance. It was expected then that the final announcement would have been made last week, but the canners have just made it public this week.

A rise of from 2½ cents to 5 cents occurred, affecting Ontario, Quebec and Winnipeg markets.

Canned fruits are good holding, but, of course, they should not be held too long, although it is claimed that strong prices will prevail throughout the year.

The same is true of canned vegetables and best salmon.

RETAIL OFFENDERS LIABLE.

Judgment has been entered against Joseph F. Bellefeuille et al, defendants in a suit preferred against them by The Walker Bin Co., for damages and costs, and an injunction has been issued restraining them from further infringing Canadian patent No. 81723, and from using, manufacturing, vending or selling the plaintiffs' patented bins. This action was against both manufacturer and user and the judgment covers both.

This is important to retailers, as some have been led to believe that responsibility for infringement does not rest on the user of the infringed article.

Even if retailers are innocent offenders in such cases, that does not exempt them from incurring the penalties that may be imposed. It is best to know the law.

THE MONTHS OF WEDDINGS.

A home furnishing advertisement detailing a list of articles that could be purchased for $50 suggests an idea that might be acted upon to advantage by the average grocer.

Both May and June are months marked by many weddings and the grocer should not overlook this opportunity of providing his share of the home equipment. His own wisdom will tell him the list of goods he can furnish for a new home, and he can select the amount as he sees fit.

John Catto & Sons, of Toronto, arranged a good newspaper "ad." in this manner, and the grocer might find it to his advantage to attempt a similar plan.

WATCHING MARKET ADVANCES.

Retailers should profit by a statement made by one of the wholesale grocers in respect to the selling prices of goods.

During the closing day of the big convention last week, the prices of salmon were under discussion, when one of the wholesalers stated that he was basing his selling price on his stock. Salmon was good holding he said, and he purposed selling it for what it was worth at the time of sale.

Why do not retailers do this? There are retailers who on many occasions 'get in right' on some particular market. They know that their speculations will be good, and eventually find them to be. But they do not sell the goods at prices ruling at the time of sale. They do not keep in touch with the markets from jobber to retailer, and do not know when advances occur.

Sometimes they have this knowledge, but do not use it profitably. They sell at a few cents above cost, when their competitors who fared worse in buying would lose money if they sold at the same price—and they might just as well make a better profit.

This illustrates why retail grocers should study carefully the markets in their trade paper. It posts them on price advances and gives them an opportunity to profit where a better profit is made possible.

THE GROCER'S WIFE.

The wife of the grocer who is not prevented by too many home duties can, and often does, aid her husband in many ways connected with his business.

This is particularly the case with grocers doing a small or moderate-sized business. She can, and does, read the trade journals, and keeps herself and husband in touch with what other grocers are doing.

Her advice and suggestions are often of much value, as she sees things from the point of view of the outsider and possible customer as well as from the inside of the store. Numerous bright plans put into effect by grocers have been introduced at the suggestion of their wives, many of whom do a lot of good thinking.

The grocer's wife is often one of the best cooks in the town and locally famous for "trying all the new things." Her suggestion to her neighbors that they use such a brand is one of the most effective advertisements in the world.

SYSTEM IN THE STORE.

The grocery store that is without system courts disaster. It is like a ship without a compass. It may, for all the grocer knows, be heading straight for a rock. His day is so taken up with worry over his position that he has not time to plan for the future. He cannot leave the bridge to others. He must stay and see everything through himself.

System, like every other good thing, can be carried to excess. It can be made a burden on the clerks, a check to rapid business instead of a hastener, and it can develop into a strangle hold. Too much red tape is nearly as bad as no red tape at all, but a judicious amount is the saving of the store.

No business is so small that it does not need system, and rigid system too. A system that grows up with a business, that becomes improved as the experience of the merchant broadens, until the whole business of the store moves like clockwork, is the system that counts. Theoretical systems of experts cannot be applied to a store with impunity. They may upset things more than they improve them. The best system is the one that has been evolved by the merchant, and suits his trade. There can be no check upon the business, no prevention of leakages, no minimising of mistakes, no correct figuring of cost and selling prices without it.

System in all departments saves labor and therefore time. The rapid handling of orders impresses the customers, and gives the store a good reputation. But best of all, it enables the merchant to tell exactly where he stands. How much profit he has made, the value of the stock in hand and all those pointers which are so necessary in the carrying on of a business with the confidence born of the fact that the merchant knows exactly where he stands.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

Vegetable Fountains Used By Sherbrooke Retailers—Kingston Merchant Claims Some Wholesalers Sell to Consumer—a Method for Getting the Farmers to Town —Nelson Board of Trade Think Sugar Prices There are Too High—A Vancouver Merchant's Experience.

A Vegetable Fountain.

Sherbrooke, Que., May 5.—Two of Sherbrooke's retailers, May & Houlihan, and the Montreal Street Provision Co. are making use of window fountains for keeping their vegetables fresh.

The structure is simple, being trays of galvanized metal arranged in a pyramid form, and small, upright sprays to furnish the water. The trays are loaded with lettuce, celery, spinach, radishes, and in fact most vegetables are revived by placing them under a spray of this kind.

The entire cost of the affair is slight, and it pays for itself quickly. Spinach, badly wilted, placed in the fountain for a few hours will become as crisp as if freshly picked and other vegetables are benefited correspondingly.

Frank Hovey, of the Montreal Street Provision Co., has been using his for some time. His structure consists of one large bottom tray, which practically fills the window. On four uprights is a tray of about 1-3 the size. There are three sprays, one for the smaller tray and two for the larger.

That in use by May & Houlihan is rather more elaborate. In addition to the two trays mentioned, they have added a round tray on top, which enables better displays to be made. Two additional sprays are provided. They have found by experience that less sprays are needed, however, the single one for the top tray being usually sufficient. The water is drained by a waste pipe in the centre, which is connected with the sewer.

Any grocer, they claim, who likes to sell fresh, crisp looking vegetables should have something of this kind, as in no other way can they be both displayed and revived at one and the same time.

Grocers in Public Service.

St. John, N.B., May 5.—As a result of the civic elections held in St John last week, two retail grocers and a man closely allied with the grocery trade will sit at the council board for the year commencing May 3. Alderman John W. Vanwart, retail grocer, Charlotte St., was opposed this year, but beat his opponent by a majority of nearly 2,000 votes. Alderman Vanwart has presided over the department of public safety for the past three years, and he will probably continue in charge of that work during the coming term. Harry G. Smith, the west side grocer, who opposed Ald. Belyea in Guy's ward, was successful in downing his opponent by a lead of over 500. Rupert W. Wigmore, manager of the Sussex Milk & Cream Co., was elected as one of the representatives of the city at large. All three are capable business men.

Hard on Some Wholesalers.

Kingston, Ont., April 28.—In referring to the letter which appeared in The Grocer a few weeks ago from the Hamilton retailer on the grocer's profits, one of the Kingston merchants thinks there is a good deal in it.

"The wholesaler goes into the territory of the retailer too often," he declared. "He supplies consumers, caters to hotels, restaurants, boarding houses, directly and indirectly. Employes in wholesale houses often buy in quantities and distribute to their friends and relatives, causing no end of trouble. Many people know wholesale prices better than some retailers.

"The worst enemy of the retail trade is often the wholesale and retail man. He will sell the consumer a bag of sugar as low as he will sell the trade. I am looking at the question from the retail standpoint. No doubt the wholesaler has troubles to point out such as carrying retailers on their backs and against this I might say that wholesalers as a rule establish a bad system of encouraging 'any old fool' to start in business if they see his pockets bulging out with one or two hundred dollars.

"A few years ago wholesalers put a limit on their sales by selling to a few. They wouldn't break packages. This kept the number of stores from increasing and there was a living. But the situation to-day is different. Other injuries received by the trade might be mentioned, such as 5 and 10c stores. A big sale was put on here recently by one firm sell-brooms costing $3.25 per doz. for 15c each. I think 40 doz. was disposed of making a loss of about $58, and see the injury to the poor grocers. A branch of a wholesale meat firm cuts price of butter, eggs, cheese, lard, pickles, apples, etc., just to draw trade. They have big sheets on the side of their delivery rigs telling the people of bargains they are offering.

"Yes, it certainly costs a lot to do business now and discounting notes is the order of the day. We hope the big joint meeting will burst some of the clouds, and that the sunshine will pour in upon us and make the bank accounts grow like wild mustard."

Getting the Farmers Into Town.

Salina, Kansas, May 5.—In order to get the farmers into this town as often as possible and to encourage them to deal here the Merchants' Association have hit upon a novel idea.

The association has made arrangements to give a number of prizes to the parties bringing to the city the largest number of eggs during the month of April. A first prize of $15 will be awarded, a second prize of $10 and a third prize of $5.

Parties may sell their eggs to any dealer in the city, who will give them a receipt which must be sent to the secretary of the association. Of course, all eggs sold must come from the poultry yards of those who enter the contest. There has been a great scarcity of eggs the last few months and it is thought that the contest will stimulate more interest in the industry.

Protest Against Sugar Prices.

Nelson, B.C., May 5.—The board of trade of this city is making a protest against the high price of sugar. At the meeting held this week, Mr. Horswill said that the sugar combine charged $6.20 in Nelson, compared with $6 in the Crow's Nest Pass district and $5.80 in Winnipeg. A committee was appointed to take this matter up with the company and, failing redress, with the minister of trade and commerce.

Educating the Consumer.

Vancouver, B. C., May 5.—That a prophet has no honor in his own country is further shown by the remark of a retail grocer. "Look at this spaghetti," he said. "Time was when I could sell very little of it, because the name of the manufacturer was on the package, and it was a local firm. After investigation, it was found where the trouble lay. A new package was got out, leaving out the place and by whom it was manufactured, and labelled 'fine Italian spaghetti.' Now there is no difficulty in selling it, and the same customers who before declared it was inferior are loud in their praises of the quality of the goods. The consumer has to be educated, but it is often far better to adopt this course rather than try to remove a mistaken notion from a person's mind."

Prince Rupert's Business Grocers.

Prince Rupert, B.C., May 4.—Among the candidates who are seeking honors in the first municipal election, which will be held next month are several grocerymen. Three are running for aldermen. One of them is H. H. Clarke, Clarke & Ives, wholesale grocers, who was born in Truro, N.S., traveled in Manitoba and British Columbia for years, and established his business in Prince Rupert, with Mr. Ives, last June. He is president of the Publicity Club, on the board of trade council, government appointee on the hospital board, and secretary of the Skeena river Conservative Association.

F. H. Mobley, another candidate for alderman, is of Stewart & Mobley, who before conducting a wholesale business here, was in the retail grocery business in Atlin for ten years and still holds his connection with that business. He is a J. P.

Wm. P. Lynch, of Lynch Bros., department stores, is from New Brunswick. For six of the nine years that he was in the Yukon, he conducted a general store. He started in his present business with his brother two years ago.

To Enforce Peddlers' License.

Kingston, Ont., May 6.—Merchants of this city have demanded that the license law affecting peddlars be enforced. It has been given out at the city hall that there has not been a license taken out by a peddlar this year and that they have been allowed their own free will on the streets. A deputation from the Retail Merchants' Association complained to the Chief of Police that the by-law was not being carried out and asked that immediate action be taken.

A Convincing Advertisement.

Brampton, Ont., May 7.—A recent newspaper advertisement of the R. F. Dale & Co., was as follows under the display heading "The Star Grocery":

"Every day we have more satisfied customers, who, until they had tried our groceries, fruit, etc., did not know what they had missed both in cash and quality.

"We have some maple syrup left, which we are selling at reduced prices. Guaranteed pure.

"Try a cake of our pure maple sugar.

"We sell the best bread and pastry flour on the market.

"We will pay highest cash prices for any quantities of butter and eggs.

"Orders delivered promptly."

Had prices been used in connection with the various articles the "ad" would possibly have brought even better returns.

Want Early Closing in Lindsay.

Lindsay, Ont., May 5.—Although there is not a local retail Merchants' Association in Lindsay, nevertheless there is a strong feeling of co-operation and from time to time the grocers hold meetings for the discussion of paramount questions. Much can be accomplished by co-operation and the Lindsay grocers recognize this fact. In fact they recognize that by "pulling" together instead of "cutting prices," is the wise policy to follow.

It is understood that an effort is being made to bring about early closing during the summer months, and a petition is being circulated to this effect. The grocers may also hold a "half-holiday" picnic some time this summer, similar to the one held in London, and in other places. In fact the Lindsay grocers are beginning to awaken to the fact that "All work, no play makes Jack a dull boy." The early closing, and the half holiday would be a boon, not only to the clerks, but also to the grocers, and would tend to establish an easier feeling and a more confidential feeling between the employer and his clerks.

Lindsay grocers were pleased to hear that the wholesalers had invited the retailers to meet with them in convention to discuss grocery matters. Three town grocers, T. A. Fisher, J. R. O'Neill and Jos. Staples attended. In conversation with some of the grocers they gave it as their opinion that there should be a closer relationship between the retailers and the wholesalers.

Killing Flies in Show Cases.

Ottawa, May 5.—An Ottawa grocer claims to have discovered an easy method of removing flies from a showcase. He uses formaldehyde, which can be procured from any druggist for a few cents and which can be used without any effects to the stock. The formaldehyde is placed in a glass container or even on a saucer and put in the show case in the evening. The grocer states that in the morning all he has to do is to brush out the dead flies with a whisk. The amount of the formaldehyde depends upon the size of the show case, about two ounces being sufficient for a case six feet long. The case must be opened in the morning to let the gas escape. It is claimed that the gas will not damage the goods. The method is said to be, simple and cheap and the flies can be killed off during a night without any trouble. This grocer uses formaldehyde in ridding more than a few show cases of flies and has found it to work most satisfactorily.

Sells Brazil Nuts Now.

St. John, N.B., May 3.—In line with the advice contained in a recent issue of The Grocer, one of the retailers is making a special display of new Brazil nuts. A sack of the nuts has been emptied into the window with an attractive price-card attached and an announcement that 'now is the time to buy Brazil nuts to get them good and fresh.' As a result there has been a good demand for them. The stock shown is exceptionally clean and bright, and the dealer expressed the opinion that even if he had to pay three cents more for them they were well worth it, as he had found scarcely any bad ones, whereas in other years the stock had to be thoroughly gone over, and a great deal of waste was found.

Thinks Profits are too Small.

Trenton, Ont., May 5.—It is the opinion of E. T. Marsh that the retail grocery business is not in extra good shape. He states that some manufacturers do not take into consideration the retailer's profits when they fix their prices and cites one case where the grocer makes only a gross profit of 14 per cent.—scarcely more than enough he maintains to cover the expense of doing business.

Something in the line of conferences he thinks should be held with the wholesalers and retailers as he does not see much money in the business at present.

SOME LUCKY EMPLOYES.

Montreal, May 5.—Employes of the Montreal factory of Chase & Sanborn have each been presented with a cheque for $200 by the Montreal partners in the firm—Senator D. Gillmor and John Anderson.

The reason for this gift lay in the fact that, under the will of the late Caleb Chase, senior partner of the firm, left bequests to all the Boston employes, varying in amount from $200 to $2,000. It is generally considered that he meant these amounts to go to Chicago and Montreal men as well as Boston, but the court held that only Boston was included, according to the strict wording of the will, which read: "Chase & Sanborn, Boston."

As a result of Judge Morton's decision, the local partners decided to open their purses to the extent above stated. fourteen employes benefit by it.

NOT ENOUGH PRODUCED.

Bracebridge, Ont., May 5.—At the Canadian Club dinner held here in honor of Prof. James, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, some reasons for high cost of living were given in his after-dinner speech.

The call of the west to the farmer from Ontario and the increasing activity of our manufacturing centres were, he said, expanding the consumption of the necessities of life, while the number of producers was decreasing. Giving an illustration, he pointed out the value of Canadian hens. Ten years ago eggs in large quantities were shipped from Ontario to the United States cities, and now we are actually importing eggs from China and Russia to supply the home demand. What applies to eggs applies to other products, he stated, and it was time in his opinion that Ontario people took notice of this or prices would soar beyond the ordinary man's reach.

FISH COMPANY'S OFFICERS.

The officers of the newly-organized Maritime Fish Co. are as follows:

President—Lieut.-Col. Chas. A. Smart.

Vice-Pres.—C. E. Archibald.

General Sales Manager—A. H. Brittain.

The company is capitalized at $1,000,000.

ANOTHER OUT OF BUSINESS.

Geo. R. Ashwell & Son, wholesale and retail merchants, Chilliwack, B.C., have purchased the business of the Chilliwack Co-operative store. The purchasers intend reducing the stock and to close the store in a week or ten days.

THE KINGSTON CONVENTION.

Kingston, Ont., May 5.—The retail merchants of Kingston are making preparations for the convention of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, to be held here on June 16, 17 and 18. They are sending out their invitations through the wholesale houses, and they expect to make it one of the best conventions ever held by the association.

A WHOLESALER'S DEATH.

Lieut.-Col. John I. Davidson, Davidson & Hay, Toronto, Passes Away.

Toronto, May 5.—The death of Lieut.-Col. John Irvine Davidson, which occurred on Thursday night, April 28, removed from the grocery trade of Canada an outstanding figure. He had been in poor health for many months and recently underwent an operation for a serious internal trouble. Following the operation he temporarily recovered, but last week suffered a relapse and passed away on Thursday night.

Col. Davidson was born on November 17, 1854, at the village of Wartle, Aberdeenshire. He was educated at Aberdeen, and as a young man began his business career in London, Eng. Coming to Canada at the age of eighteen, he rose rapidly in business, obtaining a position with Geo. Michie & Co. Subsequently he went to Montreal, where he obtained additional experience in the grocery business with James Jack & Co. Returning to Toronto, he entered the employment of J. C. Fitch and was later taken into partnership, the business thereafter being conducted under the name of Fitch & Davidson for some years. Then he bought the interest of Mr. Fitch and took his brother-in-law, Major John D. Hay, as a partner. The firm has continued under the name of Davidson & Hay.

Col. Davidson took an active part among the wholesale grocers before and since the formation of the Guild. The older members of the trade will recollect the fight which he and Hugh Blain—as representatives of the Toronto wholesalers—waged in Montreal as far back as 1883 when they induced the Montreal wholesale trade to conform to the old tobacco agreement which is still in force.

There was cutting in those days as well as at the present time; and Col. Davidson and Hugh Blain went down to Montreal to confer with the trade there regarding fixed prices on tobacco to the retail trade. The conference was held in the office of Tees, Costigan & Wilson. Col. Davidson having worked in Montreal before was well acquainted with the trade while Hugh Blain was a comparative stranger. The meeting began at 10 o'clock in the morning but it was no easy task for the visitors, despite the strong personality of Col. Davidson and the logic of his colleague, to convince the eastern men that such a step to prevent price cutting was legal. However, at one o'clock, or shortly after, an agreement was arrived at and an adjournment made for luncheon. But in the meantime the Montreal men held a conference among themselves and decided not to abide by the decision reached earlier in the day. This fact was communicated to the visitors and during the afternoon another meeting was held. The question was again thoroughly discussed and again was an agreement arrived at.

After dinner in the evening Col. Davidson and Mr. Blain were entertained by one of the sugar refiners to a drive around the mountain before they were to leave again for Toronto.

But in the midst of this, word reached them that for a second time the Montreal trade had changed their minds. For a third time the visitors had to get down to business and a third time did they convince their eastern competitors.

The train left shortly after for Toronto with Col. Davidson and Hugh Blain—glad that they had been able to get away before another change of mind occurred.

It is interesting to note that that tobacco agreement made in Montreal, in 1883, is still in effect, although now it is according to the tobacco manufacturers' contract price list.

Col. Davidson was also one of the founders of the Guild. Old records show that he attended the meeting on Aug. 31, 1883, in the Board of Trade building, Toronto, when the wholesalers first talked over the proposition and decided to organize.

LT.-COL. JOHN IRVINE DAVIDSON.

Whose Death Occurred Last Week After a Lingering Illness.

He was a past president of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild, prior to which time he was vice-president. He also held the position of chairman of the Toronto Guild.

The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon, when his remains were laid to rest with military honors. Among the floral tributes was a wreath of red Richmond roses—The Colonel's favorite flower — presented by the Hamilton wholesale trade which was represented by Alex. Turner and G. E. Bristol. Among the other outside houses represented was Hudon, Hebert & Co., Montreal, G. W. Prescott being present.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE LT.-COL. DAVIDSON.

By C. L. Marshall.

Though other and more able writers have paid their tributes to the late Lt.-Col. John I. Davidson, and have in a small measure expressed all he was in social and military circles, I feel that it devolves on some one who knew him intimately in business life to add a few words that will, howver faintly, express the sentiment of his business associates in the grocery trade.

It was my very great privilege, and never were privilege and pleasure more closely knit together, to work under Colonel Davidson in the Western Brokerage Co., and in consequence I had the opportunity of knowing him perhaps more intimately than any one not actually connected with his company, The Davidson & Hay Limited.

It is often written of business men, that in private life they were beloved; in business circles, respected—of Colonel Davidson it can truly be said that he was beloved by all who came in contact with him. There were no two sides to his nature, no artificiality, he was ever the man and natural. The same genial smile, the same courtesy and chivalry which won for him such a warm affection from friends in his private life, were carried into his every day business and dispensed to all alike from his humblest employe up.

The Colonel was no Napoleon of finance—he was the ideal man of business. Himself the soul of honor, he abhorred double dealing, and the turning of sharp corners. Always a busy man he was never too busy to sacrifice his time to others, and in this, as in all other things, he showed the largeness of his heart. In granting a favor—and he was forever granting favors—it was always "with pleasure." I attribute the loyal devotion of his employes to the fact that he made them feel the responsibility of their positions—made them stand on their own feet. He ever encouraged, rarely found fault, and was rewarded by getting the best out of his men. His advice when asked for was always "if you are sure you are right, go ahead, I will stand by you," and how much these last words meant none but those who needed his support can appreciate.

He was quick in forming decisions; he did not waste words in giving an opinion. The Colonel carried an atmosphere to his office full of life and brightness and a visit to it dispelled worry and care. No man was ever more cheerful, and his cheerfulness was infectious—an optimist, he made optimists of those around him.

Little wonder that he had hosts of friends; in business, some few failed him; when they did, he was deeply grieved, but his nature was too fine to feel any resentment. To no man was he an enemy, it is doubtful if any man was his enemy.

John I. Davidson has passed to the Beyond. Our loss is beyond mere calculation: some mourn him as they would a father, or an older brother, or a very dear friend; to all of us it is a personal loss; to the grocery business an irreparable loss and yet we have not lost all that was gained, for his memory will live, and his influence, as a great, a good and a true man, will ever be felt.

POINTERS—

Tarragona Almonds—½c higher.
Filberts—½-1c lower.
Tapioca—Firm at the advance.
Canned Fruits—5c higher.

Montreal, May 5, 1910.

The feature of this week's market is the advance in the price of canned fruits and some of the principal vegetables. This change has been looked for during the past few days, as a strong and increasing demand had been the order of the day for some time past. The recent consolidation of canning interests is claimed to have had its effect, and for some time, at least, higher prices in most lines of canned goods may be looked for.

Sugar seems to show few signs of retiring from present high quotations, and buyers are beginning to fill their immediate requirements.

Spices are still in heavy demand—a somewhat unusual demand for this time of year.

May 1st saw the water back in the canal again as usual, and navigation season is now on in earnest. Already two fruit boats from European ports have landed cargoes here.

Roads are improving rapidly, enabling country buyers to come in more freely. Collections are very good, considering the time of year, and prospects seem good for a summer trade of larger proportions than usual.

Sugar—The situation in sugar is much the same as last week except that an increased demand is reported. It is probably only temporary at present prices, though the situation looks strong on account of the falling off of the Cuban crop from what was expected.

Syrup and Molasses—The opening of navigation and better roads has had a healthy effect on the molasses market. Still importers report jobbers slow in laying in stocks at present prices. A further improvement in demand will undoubtedly cause a better first hand demand and it does not seem to be far off. Syrups are having a fair sale at former prices.

Dried Fruits—All lines of raisins are being pushed and show a fair amount of activity as a result. Prunes are somewhat of a dead weight at present. The currant outlook depends largely on what action the Greek growers take with regard to their government's offer to compensate for the uprooting of 25 per cent. of the vines. At present prices are firm and demand fair.

Nuts—A good increase in demand has been noted, owing probably to the passing of the Jewish holiday. Walnuts and filberts have felt the effect most. In spite of increased demand for Sicily filberts, the price has weakened slightly, showing that the recent reports of a damaged crop were probably exaggerated. Brazils have improved in recent demand.

TORONTO—An indication of the firmness of canned goods particularly fruits is offered by recent advances. Two and a half cents a dozen was reported as the increase in canned fruits and the demand is stronger. Home preserved fruits have become exhausted and the retailers' shelves are being raided to fill the gap that extends between the present and the new fruit. Best sockeye salmon has been advanced 60 cents a case by packers on the coast and a firmer tinge has been added to the local market with indications directed further in that direction.

POINTERS—

Canned Fruit—Advanced.
Sugar—Higher prices expected.
Teas—Very firm.

Toronto, May 6th, 1910.

Some departments of the wholesale grocery trade have felt the dampening effect of the recent weather.

General reports indicate encouraging conditions. As far as it could be learned there have been no disappointing features in connection with the markets which should be healthy at this season.

Sugar—The sugar market in the United States received quite a bolstering at the middle of the week by a general increase of 10 cents a cwt. The result was that local jobbers added to their holdings with the expectation of an immediate influence on the home prices. The market is firm and an advance is looked for at any time. The period is approaching when consumption of sugar reaches a maximum and added to this is the fact that production has fallen off to a certain extent. Brokers and wholesalers look for an advance.

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS—

Canned Fruits—Advanced.
Sugar—Market firm.
Beans—Market weakening.
Butter—Firm.

Winnipeg, May 5, 1910.

The feature of the western market situation is the scarcity of goods and the consequent advancing prices. The output has reached tremendous proportions and wholesalers are too busy to talk about the trade. Travelers have no difficulty in getting good business at every call and although retailers are not visited often just now by the farmers, yet they are bound to get a good trade and are preparing to land all possible business. The construction camp trade is the heaviest that local jobbers ever experienced, several hundred camps have been supplied with a quantity as large as a retail stock. The lines of goods, however, are not of a wide range and the quantity of prunes, syrup and flour is enormous in all such camps.

The population of every district is growing by leaps and bounds and many of the new arrivals are investing their fortunes in retail stocks everywhere in the west.

The opening of navigation relieved the situation by bringing to the market many lines which were greatly in demand. Canned goods have come in abundance and transportation from Fort William has been almost blockaded.

Sugar—The sugar market in Europe is firm and an advance took place in New York on April 28. It is likely to follow suit in Canada. The advance will be slight in any case.

Foreign Dried Fruits—The raisin output has been exceptionally large and the 3-crown sultanas are scarce. The demand continues for the high grades and the strong market does not affect the trade. The supply of prunes to railway construction camps is heavy and the supply is getting small. Firmer prices on all lines are sure to result from the present demand.

Evaporated Apples—The market is weak and 7½ cents will buy anything in stock. The goods are not worth the handling at a smaller figure.

Eggs—Manitoba can supply all the eggs required and the trade is good. The jobbing price is 19 to 20 cents. A shipment of 4,000 cases left Winnipeg for the west last week.

Butter—A high price is maintained for all butter. Local creameries are advancing prices and it is rumored that they are about to quote 43 cents to the retailers. At present jobbers are asking 41 cents for No. 1 creamery and 30 to 35 cents for dairy. Jobbers succeeded in getting a small supply from the eastern townships but it went off quickly. A rapid decline will take place as soon as the grass butter comes on the market.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, May 5, 1910.

A little flurry took place in eggs this week. Locals are up from 30c to 33c, while Californias, which were 28c. are back to 30c. An arrival from the Northwest this week brought 400 dozen with him, in the hopes of selling at a profit. He figured on the price here, but he forgot that the Manitoba eggs, gathered at random intervals, are always two or three cents lower, with a poor demand at that. It is doubtful, with such good eggs from California on the market, that he will make much on his deal. The eggs from California are worthy of remark. They are invariably of uniform size, cleaner in most instances than local eggs, and on the average as good in quality. The best are exported here, and it has been found that this pays.

Local creamery butter is 35c, while eastern of the best grade is 36c.

Halifax, May 5, 1910.

General conditions in the grocery trade are considered good, despite the high prices that are quoted for many lines. Butter is now one of the leaders in the price movement, and there is a good demand for all the first-class stock that is offered. The cause of the scarcity is said to be due to the heavy demand from the west, Recently a large quantity was sent from Halifax to Montreal and that cleaned up nearly all the surplus stock that was on the market. Some of the jobbers are now asking 32 cents for the best creamery, and dairy is also up two cents per pound. A short time ago it was thought that there would be lots of new butter coming on the market by this time, but the weather is backward and the cattle cannot be placed on pasture.

There is a fairly good demand for eggs, and the price is firmer. They are now quoted at 20 cents per dozen. There is not much doing in the fruit business just at present, the unseasonable weather having had a bad effect on trade. The trade in flour and feeds is also quiet, the high prices keeping the dealers from ordering any large stocks.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., May 5, 1910.

About the only feature of interest in the local markets last week was the decline in the price of flours. Ontarios dropped 20c Wednesday morning, and a little later in the day Manitobas declined a like amount. The quotation now is $5.55 to $5.85 for the former and $6.35 to $645 for the latter.

With the advent of warmer weather, fish are coming in more plentiful, and the prices are beginning to drop. The quotations on eggs and butter are unchanged.

The Retail Merchant and His Show Window

The Best Advertising Medium the Retailer Has—Large Stores Have Proved That Window Displays Sell Goods — Night the Most Effective Time—Windows Must be Changed Frequently and Kept Clean.

By H. L. Hall.

The properly used show window is the best advertising medium withir the reach of the retail merchant, and yet curiously enough, it seems to be the least appreciated of all the means he uses. His show window is his best medium, because it will sell goods for him at a less percentage of cost than any other means at his command. I say that it is the least appreciated because of the fact that it is so very generally neglected. Most retail merchants have not yet learned its true value. Many of them seem to think that it is merely a space which must be filled up with something—it does not really matter what or how. All this is wrong.

The department store manager appreciates his window space and makes good use of it. If you do not believe that he considers window space valuable, go to him and try to rent one of those he is using. You will soon get a larger idea of its value. The big store even employs an artist who spends all his time and thought in getting up and executing attractive window displays. And these window displays sell goods enough to make the window dresser and his big salary a good investment. It is not enough that a display shall please the eye. It must sell goods or it is not successful. The big store demands that there shall be a material increase in the sale of a displayed article while it is in the window, and if the increase does not come the fact is chalked up against the window dresser in the records of the manager.

The advertising agent of your local opera house knows the value of show windows, for he is willing to exchange seats worth money for the privilege of hanging his lithographs in your window, and I cannot conceive of him doing it unless your window has a real value to him—and if to him, why not to you?

The real potential value of a show window lies in the number of people who will pass it within a given space of time. Its value may be computed on the same basis as that used for the computation of any other means of publicity. Magazines charge so much a line per thousand of circulation. If you buy space in the pages of a magazine you pay for the privilege of exhibiting your announcement in a place where a given number of people will pass. It is up to you to make your announcement in such a manner that these people, or a goodly number of them, will stop to see what you have to say. It is just the same with your show window. No matter what your location, there will be about so many people pass your window each day, and it is your task to make that window catch and hold their attention to such an extent that some of them will feel a want of what you there offer.

Night Displays Most Effective.

Of course the average retail merchant cannot afford to pay a big salary to an exclusive window trimmer, but the chances are that there is some one within reach who can do many times better than he is now doing with the means at his command. It may be his clerk or porter. It may be his wife or daughter. The proper thing to do is to experiment till he finds the right one, and then let that one do his best. Window trimming is an art, but like the most other arts it can be studied and acquired. Get out on the street and study other windows. Analyze the ones which appeal to you as being above the average. Learn what it is which makes them better than most of the others. Pick out the good points and emulate them. Pick out the faults and avoid them. I do not mean to advise copying, but we can learn from the mistakes and successes of others without copying.

It is at night when the outside world is dark that your window will look the most attractive. Hence the best time for window display is in the fall and winter, when the evenings are longest. For this reason, too, it follows that one of the first things to be seen to is that the window must be well illuminated. Nothing so surely kills off a window display as poor lights. And at the same time it may be stated that there is no other investment which will pay a merchant so well as good lights throughout the store as well as in the window, but if the lights must be cut down anywhere, let it not be in the windows.

The chief fault of the ordinary window display is crowding. Don't try to to put your entire stock in your windows, but leave room for an effective arrangement of what you do put there. Too much stuff will defeat your purpose, which is to call attention to the items displayed with enough force to make the gazer want to buy. The handsomest and most effective window the writer has seen in a long time was at the same time the simplest. It was in the window of a shoe store. The back and sides of the window were finished in plain wood of a dark shade, and in the window were three pedestals about fourteen inches high. Over these pedestals were draped three skins, one white, one red and one blue. On the top of each was a single slipper, matching in color the skin under it. In the centre of the window, on a white mat, was placed a single shoe, one of a new pattern. This shoe was marked "Our Marquise Shoe—$3.50." I'll warrant that the display sold that brand of shoes and sold plenty of them.

Hindrances to a Larger Consumption of Coffee

According to the View of a Scientist—The Valuable Constituents of Coffee and How They May be Extracted — Ideas for Grocers in Selling this Beverage.

By A. McGill.

I have long been impressed with the easily demonstrable superiority of coffee, among available domestic beverages, and have been surprised that its consumption is not at least ten times what statistics prove it to be. In seeking for an explanation, I am forced to recognize that the greatest hindrances to a larger use of coffee are capable of being overcome, by the exercise of a little of what Scotchmen call gumption.

Coffee, as usually prepared, when well prepared, is an expensive beverage. A really good cup of coffee costs us, to-day, at least one-third more than it need do, simply because we do not exercise scientific precautions in brewing it. Let me explain:

Two things are necessary to a satisfactory cup of coffee, viz.: (1) body, (2) aroma. The "body" is due to the effective solution of the sugars, gums, caffeo-tannates, and other fixed soluble matters of the roasted berry. I call these matters fixed because, when dissolved, you may continue to boil the solution without losing them by volatilization. If you boil to dryness, you will find these matters as a dry residue in the pot.

The "aroma" is due chiefly to a substance known as caffeol. This is easily got into solution; but it is also easily lost from solution. Being volatile, it escapes with the steam and a few minutes' boiling causes its total loss when the beverage becomes odorless, tasteless, flat and insipid.

But the caffeol is not only necessary to give a pleasant and characteristic aroma to the drink. It possesses well marked physiological properties, is a cardiac stimulant, and is absolutely needed to balance the caffeine, which, in boiled coffee, produces a disagreeable after effect with most people.

A Difference in Tea.

In making a cup of tea in which very little "body" is wanted and in which there is danger of having too much tannin dissolved from the leaves, it is only necessary to pour boiling water on the leaves, allow to draw for a few minutes, and then pour it off again. In this way we get all the theine and volatile oil of the tea into solution, and quite as much of the tannins as is good for us. But you can't economically make a cup of coffee that way! The average amount of tannin in tea is 15.32 per cent.; that of roasted coffee is only 4.63 per cent. It follows that in order to get necessary "body" in coffee we must actually boil the coffee. But if we do that, we lose the caffeol (aroma), which we also need to give a good beverage. How shall we proceed in order to fulfil both requirements?

One way is to use a great excess of coffee; put this in a sieve (or percolator) and pour boiling water through it. We thus extract all the aroma, and about half of the body-giving components of the coffee, and by using plenty of it, we get an excellent beverage. But it is a wasteful and extravagant way of brewing coffee.

To Get Both Requisites.

Common sense suggests that we should recognize the quite different character of the body-giving constituents of coffee, from the aroma-giving constituents, and proceed somewhat as follows:

From a quantum of coffee which we shall call A, extract the whole of its soluble matter by actual boiling for five or ten minutes. Of course, the caffeol (aroma) will boil away and be lost. Take another quantum of coffee (which we shall call B), equal to A, and, placing this in a sieve or percolator, pour over it the boiling solution from A. This will rapidly filter through B, and will dissolve out the caffeol (aroma) from B, together with a small quantity of the body giving material; but not more than one-fourth or one-fifth of this, if the sieve, or strainer, be properly constructed. The finished beverage is now a perfect drink, containing full "body" (obtained from quantum A) and full "aroma" (obtained from quantum B). The dregs from A may be thrown away, as completely exhausted. But the dregs from B still contain by far the larger part of their total extractive matters. This residue must be boiled for the next brew, just exactly as was done with quantum A for this brew. The hot solution will be poured through a fresh quantum C for the second brew, and this residue (C) will be used, in turn, for a third brew, while residue (B) will be thrown away as waste.

If I have made this clear it will be seen that no coffee dregs are thrown away until fully exhausted. Hence, a maximum economy is practised. Further, the finished beverage, in every case, is perfect, both as regards body-giving and aroma-giving components. And, still further, the finished beverage contains the physiologically active caffeol, as well as caffeine, tannin, sugars, etc., and is a properly balanced drink, healthful, invigorating and delicious.

You Can Beat Out the Peddler

YOUR OPPORTUNITY

There are three reasons why the peddlers get so large a share of the tea trade. They sell a customer more at a time than the merchant does; they sell a larger percentage of 40c. tea than the average merchant; and they sell blended teas in preference to straight tea.

A tea peddler will sell as much as 400 lbs. of tea in a day from a single wagon. I know of one man who boasts that he sold 50,000 lbs. of tea from a single wagon last season. He is operating in Central Ontario.

There is no inducement in 25c tea to bring yourcustomer back for more of it. Nine out of every ten customers will buy better tea on your recommendation. When you sell them Red Rose Tea, and especially the 40c grade or better, they will be back for "more of that tea." You can be sure the peddler will not offer them anything so good at the price.

To sell in quantity you can get the 30c and 40c grades of Red Rose Tea in three, five and ten pound tins. The surest way to get back a customer who is buying from a peddler is to sell her a tin of the 40c grade of Red Rose Tea. The chances are she is buying 40c tea from the peddler.

You can beat out the peddler, get back your own customers, and get other new ones if you will push Red Rose Tea. You will find it will pay you to display it on your counter and in your windows and recommend it to your customers.

BUTTER WEIGHTS.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—When will the retail grocers wake up to the fact that they are paying for more butter than they really get? How often do you get a print of butter that only weighs fourteen ounces? It doesn't seem much by the one print, does it? But take on a hundred-pound lot and you will find you have only received eighty-seven and a half pounds for every hundred you have paid for. Twelve and a half pounds short isn't much, is it?—enough to open the merchant's eyes.

Why not get right after the farmers and make them weigh every print of butter they bring in off the farm, and see that you get 16 oz. for every pound. Little things like these count.

GEO. NICHOLSON.

Winnipeg, May 4, 1910.

MIXING GOOD AND BAD BUTTER.

This is an Accusation Made Against British Columbia Creameries.

Vancouver, B.C., May 5.—The peculiar condition exists in the butter market just now that local creamery is lower in price than choice eastern. Generally, the local has such a good call that the price is about five cents more, and at times even higher, but this week, local creamery is 35 cents, while eastern of the best grade is 36 cents, with a special figure of 34 cents in ton lots.

One of the large commission men stated that he was selling considerable quantities of eastern butter to the creameries, and the only assumption is that it is made over and sold under a local name. In fact, this practice has been declared before. Since the creameries buy at 34 and 36 cents and sell at 35 cents, it seems probable that if it is made over an inferior grade of butter is mixed in, else there would be no room for profit. When the customer finds fault, and sees a streak of white butter in the brick he has bought for the locally-produced article, it is the retailer who has to bear the brunt of the objections.

It does not improve eastern butter to mix it with inferior, but the strong demand gives a ready sale, and it has not time to get bad. The result of this will be that eastern butter will be coming through in some convenient shape that will keep good, and will be sold for what it is, and during the winter, it will compare exceedingly favorably with local creamery in quality, and is much cheaper in price.

EXTRACTS EXAMINED.

A report from the laboratory of the Inland Revenue Department of the Dominion Government on the examination of flavoring extracts of vanilla gives an idea of the standard of some of the samples found on the market. Vanillin, the substance from which the extract in its purest form is prepared, is replaced in many cases by coumarin, which resembles, states Chief Analyst A. McGill, vanillin in its flavor, but is quite distinct chemically. The odor of coumarin is more pungent, he says, and penetrating than that of vanillin, and in mixtures is apt to predominate over the milder and more delicate odor of vanillin.

Live and Dressed Hogs Dropped Still Further—Lard has Become Easier in its Figures—Butter and Eggs Continue Firm but can Scarcely Maintain Present Prices—Spring Broilers Coming in and at High Figure.

There is a noticeable feeling of expectancy for lower prices in the provision markets in regard to butter and eggs particularly. The receipts in both cases have been large, but there has been a counteracting demand that has enlivened the market and held the prices in spite of the influences which have been uniting for a break. The production of eggs continues far in advance of last year's report for the same period. An instance is offered from Montreal where the number of cases received numbered 16,731, as compared with 9,931 for the same week last year. Those who are in close touch with the conditions express the belief that easier prices are not far distant. At present a large percentage of the production is finding its way into storage.

Easier quotations are about due in butter lists. The weather although wet has been good for the grass and points to a heavy output.

The cheese market is showing the first indications of a rejuvenation. The new make is a fodder cheese but is reported of good quality. Grass cheese should be received at an early date. The market is easy at present.

In both live and dressed hogs prices are a little easier and lard also has loosened slightly. Receipts have been fairly large.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—Owing to an increase in the price of cotton seed oil, the price of compound lards has gone up ½c. Most other lines including pure lards (down ½c) and porks are easier. A ½c advance is reported in boned hams and one brand of bacon. Live hogs are from 25c to 50c cheaper, selling now for $9.50 to $9.75. Dressed prices ranges from $13.75 to $14. Trade is reported rather slack.

Butter.—It is thought that the remedy for cream exportation has been found in a campaign of education, showing the farmers that, while they seem to make a larger profit by exporting, the actual fact is that a loss is incurred. The situation is slightly weaker this week. Supplies are coming in more freely and a 2c drop is looked for this week. Receipts for the week are 2,580 packages, as against 3,473 same week last year. Butter.—A prominent provision merchant referring to the butter market stated that it had never been known to be as high for this season of the year as it is at present. There has been but little relaxation during the past week. The make at the factories is increasing, but there is a strong demand for creamery butter with the result that the market has remained steady. Stored creamery solids is done for this season. With ideal weather conditions reported on every side, and with the western provinces preparing to practically supply their own demands, everything indicates easier prices in the immediate future.

The market has continued firm due to the fact that there are no surplus supplies as large quantities are being put in storage. CONSUMPTION OF NUT BUTTER.

Nut butter, as a substitute to the milk butter, has many points in its favor, according to repofts from European countries, where it is in gerenal use. It is made principally from cocoanuts and peanuts. The cocoanut process was discovered fifteen years ago by a Frenchman. It has the appearance of lard and is tasteless and odorless. It is claimed to be absolutely pure where butter is adulterated with water and salt. It is easily digested by the weakest stomach and can be marketed at a price far below that of either butter or lard.

The original manufacturing firm in France is now turning out twenty million pounds monthly. While it is an innovation in America, European countries, including France, Belgium, Germany, England and Russia, are consuming four hundred million pounds annually. The field of supply is unlimited. There are twenty million cocoanut trees, it is claimed, planted every year, and if the demand justified it, that number could be easily increased.

Phillip Rive, merchant, of Caraquet, Gloucester County, N.B., died last week, aged 72 years.

HANDLING B. C. BERRIES.

Vancouver, B.C., May 3.—An important convention was held at Kamloops, B.C., which was attended by fruit growers and representatives of the wholesale fruit trade and transportation companies. It was called by the provincial department of agriculture, with a view of discussing the many points bearing on the fruit industry, so that the best possible results could be obtained. One of the principal results was the reorganization of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association.

Regarding the marketing of strawberries, a special conference was held between a number of the representatives of jobbing houses of the northwest and the small fruit growers. The jobbers sought to secure the control of the whole of the export strawberry crop of the province, thus eliminating the shipment of berries by growers to retailers. The statement was made that all of the British Columbia strawberry crop could be sold in competition with berries from the States at $4 per crate retail, but to secure a permanent market at this price, the jobbers maintained that they only pay $2 per crate cash f.o.b. at point of shipment. Though no definite arrangement was reached, it is probable that an agreement will be arrived at whereby growers will secure a minimum rate of $2.50 a crate f.o.b.

AN ERROR.

A typographical error occurred in the advertisement of W. B. Stringer in The Grocer of April 29. One paragraph read: "The growers in Texas have succeeded in placing on our market a first-class onion—packed in the square slat crate, 50c net." This should have been 50 "pound" net.

THE MAN WHO DOES.

To-day the man who does is the only one who is recognized.

What he has been or what he has done—

What he expects to do in the future—all these make a pretty story.

But we like the sound of the footsteps of the man with red blood in his veins—

The man with fire in his eyes, energy in his movements.

Not a man who expects to do—some day.

But the man who is doing things—now.

Effects of Expected Drop in the Price of Wheat

Various Grades of Flour Have Declined—Next Movement Can Only be Surmised—Cereals Have Also Been Touched—Business Reported Satisfactory—Export Trade Quiet.

In both Ontario and Quebec there has been an appreciable decline in the prices of flour and cereals. The drop did not come as a great surprise and it is further believed by some that the bottom price has not yet been reached. While quotations have slumped, business has apparently been sustained and it is reported in some quarters that the decline is acting on the market as a spring tonic.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—A drop of 20c in flour has taken place, owing to the present dull state of the market. It is thought this reduction will prove the necessary stimulus for increased buying. The drop was almost a necessity under existing market conditions. Export demand is so far light.

TORONTO.

Flour.—Since last week's drop of 20 cents a barrel in the price of flour interest has been centred as to whether the decline will continue or whether the decrease will be recovered to any extent. Prices are easier as the result of the drop in the price of wheat, a fact recalling the Grocer's predictions to that effect. Opinion is divided as to the direction of the next jump. One prominent miller stated that it would not surprise him to see a little further decline. In that respect the market is rather unsettled at present.

CHARACTER IN NEWSPAPERS.

Dr. Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton University, at the annual meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, said:—

"There has been an unmistakable falling off in the influence of printed opinion. The power of the editorial is certainly not what it once was.

"A very interesting thing has happened involving an entirely new assessment of what we read. We are beginning to judge what we read, as we judge what we hear, by the character of the person who utters it. It is becoming a matter of common knowledge who own certain journals, for example, and that the opinions of those journals are the opinions of the owners, that they may not be at all the individual opinions of the editor who penned them."

FRESH BERRIES IN WINTER.

Experiments Show That They Can be Kept for Many Months.

Chicago, May 5.—One of the latest triumphs of the cold storage warehouses in this city is the keeping of red raspberries fresh all through the winter and spring. They were stored away last July by a produce merchant as an experiment. When taken out a few days ago they were found to be in a perfect condition.

They are frozen solid and stored in rooms maintained at a steady temperature of several degrees below freezing. When taken from storage they are spread out and sugared so they can thaw without washing. When thawed they are ready to eat and will keep in good condition for two or three days.

Of course retailers, who handled these berries would have some difficulty in keeping them from thawing once they passed into their hands. It would mean the installation of modern cold storage facilities.

The experiment marks another great advance in the development of cold storage refrigerators.

Strength Comes Next

WHEN a woman has six or seven dollars to spend on flour, she doesn't want to see the bottom of that barrel too soon.

So you see, Brother Grocer, that STRENGTH is a great big selling point.

And strength means power of absorption.

Strength means what the bakers call "bounce" in the oven—

Strength means retention of moisture during the baking and after—

It means delaying staleness and dryness—

Strength means that where Madam expected ten loaves she gets twelve—It means increased yield, according to her ability.

For she gets loftier loaves, lighter loaves, healthier loaves.

When she gets a flour like that, she gets more than her money's worth. She's forced to duplicate the brand.

Next to reliable uniformity, Brother Grocer, FIVE ROSES flour claims its UNUSUAL STRENGTH for its strongest selling feature.

Hard to get this strength, Brother Grocer.

Easier to tell you why FIVE ROSES has it.

Over 80 elevators belong to the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, studding the best sections of the Manitoba Spring Wheat belt sifting the cream of the crop.

And FIVE ROSES contains the pure unadulterated extract of the ripe berries, the quality gluten which makes Manitoba wheat the strongest and sturdiest under the sun.

There isn't a grain of soft wheat gluten or soft wheat constituent in FIVE ROSES flour which might reduce in the least this strength.

FIVE ROSES isn't a blend, it's a pure Manitoba flour, you see.

Now, Brother Grocer, you know why FIVE ROSES flour is so strong.

Let your trade prove that it is strongest of all family flours.

Strong enough to lift the burden of bad business from your shoulders for good and all.

Strong enough to increase your trade, your profits, your bank account.

Give yourself a chance, Brother Grocer.

Grocer Has Booth Ready for Food Demonstrators

When Not in Use for This Purpose He Utilizes it for Displaying Goods—Interior Fixtures and Arrangement of Stock to Make it Attractive—A Unique Lighting System.

Winnipeg, May 5.—One need not be a particularly observant person to note the negligence on the part of many merchants in the matter of interior display and arrangement of goods. This neglect goes further back than merely the arrangement of goods in stock. It is evident that too many do not take the proper care in laying out the plan of the store, and in arranging the architectural design, in order that the store might always have a comely appearance.

A good store plan is half the display of the goods. When either one of these features is lacking the whole effect is weakened. The statement that "capital is usually too small for the prospective grocer to consider the perfection of a plan" is no argument. A good plan is as easy to secure as a poor one, and the merchant who rushes into business without taking precaution as to the character of his premises is making an inexcusable mistake.

In order that the beginner with a moderate capital may be assured that an admirable store plan is feasible, reference is made here to a new store opened on Portage Avenue, Winnipeg, last month. Just what the store cost to equip has not been made known, and that is not the important thing. One kind of paint costs as much as another, and the woodwork in every store is practically the same price. Lighting fixtures vary little in cost.

The main things are the color of the paint used, the design of the woodwork, and the characteristics of the lighting fixtures, etc.

What Interior Fixtures Are.

That every grocer would exactly agree with J. W. Jones, the proprietor of the Colonial Grocery Store, in the matter of design, is a question; but he would be a crude artist indeed who would not be pleased with the impression which the whole place presents.

The outstanding features of the plan are, that the store is painted in white enamel—nothing, states Mr. Jones, is better than this—a large booth of Colonial architecture projects from the left wall; a circular meat counter, about five feet in diameter, sits in the centre of the store, and "eye-comfort" electric lights hang from the ceiling. These lights are something unique in that they cast the light upwards and at right angles and not down.

The clear finish of the store reflects the light and the whole interior is brilliantly illuminated. Another feature which might be mentioned is that at the rear of the store, at a separate small counter constructed for the purpose, is the telephone, and there is room for two or more, should necessity demand them.

As already intimated, the store plan lays the basis for the arrangement of goods in order that the best possible attraction might be secured. Mr. Jones in this matter it would appear has not "fallen down." He may be an exceptional artist, but there is no doubt that the average grocer could make his goods look just as neat if he took the pains to do so.

Yet it is not pains, it is pleasure, as experience will also show..

Special Shelf for Canned Goods.

The high bank of canned goods at the rear, resting on specially prepared shelves, with the individual colors massed, is certainly much better than having the same goods scattered unsystematically over the store.

The booth for traveling demonstrators is an idea worthy of consideration. It serves also to "set off" the large stock of teas and coffees in the rear, and is too attractive to be in the way. The show cases, in which there is a tendency to mass too much stuff. contains only a few, well-arranged delicacies and novelty goods.

One feature of the display which may not be commended by all, and the same criticism applies to the average grocer in western Canada, (for travelers say it is not so noticeable in Ontario or the east) is the piling of goods on the floor. Dogs and men with unscrupulous habits are sure to enter the store some time, and in that case it seems better to have the goods off the floor. An open floor space takes away the appearance of over-crowding. There are, apparently other much better ways to display biscuits, fruits and vegetables than on the floor.

Interior of The Colonial Grocery Store in Winnipeg, Showing New Ideas.

Some System Needed in the Pricing of Goods

The Importance of a Simple, Expeditious System of Making and Recording Prices—A Loose-Leaf Book Recommended—Will Mean an Important Saving of Time.

By D. F. Barker.

The proper pricing of goods is so necessary that it needs no apology or argument. It is done, however, in many instances in a slipshod manner that does not reflect credit upon merchants, and is often not as progressive as the general condition of the establishment would seem to warrant.

We have seen, in some otherwise splendid stores, clerks having to take down slovenly looking books or lists which strongly reminded one of a poorly kept scrap book or list of little value; and, furthermore, took a good deal of valuable time of customer and clerk trying to find the proper price.

I say valuable time, for while the time of any merchant or clerk is valuable, the time of the customer is valuable indeed, as you can well understand that when the customer is not looking at goods, but has to wait while you or the clerk is trying to find something apparently unfamiliar, his thoughts are probably something like this, "That man doesn't know the price, and doesn't know where to find it, and I am going to get stuck."

Anything that will lead a customer to such a conclusion is not conducive to increased business, which is the goal toward which we are all striving.

I maintain that even if the store is so small that only one clerk is needed to attend to the business, the pricing should be done at the office—that is, the proprietor should have the new or corrected prices in his office price book, and the store price list or lists should be corrected from that. Too generally the price is made on the box, or on the article, and no attention is paid to correcting the office price book.

No one, even the storekeeper with one clerk, can afford to spend time running about the store to gather up prices scattered about on shelves or goods, as with such a hap-hazard way of doing things there can be no regularity, and customers soon find out this fact, and will prefer to do their trading where there is more system and attention paid to this important matter. Where they find there is close attention paid to this work and lists present a clean and attractive appearance it shows on its face that the matter is looked after closely, and therefore the prices must be right.

We think, therefore, first, we should aim for the best result with the least amount of work.

Second, we wish to find the most expeditious and exact way of pricing and finding the price.

Third, we wish to find some way of duplicating these price lists with the least amount of time and energy.

Some time ago we gave this matter a good deal of attention, and with the assistance of some friends, the jobbers and others, we were able to find a loose leaf price list which seemed of suitable size, and after a rough draft of the pages had been made, these were given to the stenographer, who made duplicates. As many copies can be made as are necessary, and one page is inserted in the store list, which is hung on brackets and protected on both sides by celluloid face.

Of course, only one side of the sheet is used, but as we have a number of duplicates this is not an item to be considered. We can therefore make as many price lists for salesmen as may be needed, and we are sure that they are all alike, so that if corrections have to be made, they are made so that all the lists are exactly alike.

Even if the store is too small to have a typewriter, or the duplicating machines, this plan may be adopted by using the carbon sheet and a hard pencil or stylus; but, of course, it would be necessary to hold the sheets firmly. This is done by pins or screws inserted in the perforations wherever they occur. When we have done this we have taken two boards having a brass screw inserted from the back, and, after the sheets were in, putting on the nuts which hold them firmly in place. It is necessary to have two boards, so as to use both sides of the sheet.

R.M.A. BILL PASSES.

Federal Charter Granted to the Merchants After Strong Opposition.

Ottawa, May 5.—There has been considerable opposition in the House of Commons to the bill of the Retail Merchants Association asking for incorporation under a Federal charter. It was discussed last week but finally left over until Monday. On Monday the bill passed after a vigorous stand from its opponents who regarded it as a move against the principle of co-operative stores embodied in the measure which was defeated earlier in the session. The bill was strongly opposed by Messrs. Emmerson, Neely, Best, Ralph Smith, and Boyce and as strongly supported by Messrs. Gervais and Bickerdike. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the other ministers supported it with the exception of Hon. Mackenzie King.

WESTERN RETAILERS INDIGNANT.

Winnipeg, May 5.—Following the report from Ottawa a few days ago that the Retail Merchants' Association bill of incorporation was opposed in the House of Commons, The Grocer got in touch with W. T. Devlin, President of the Western Retail Association. He said:

"The opposition to the bill on the grounds that it was in the same class with the Co-operative Societies Bill presented a short time ago, was an absurd argument and such opposition was unworthy of any Member of the House. The facts are that there is no similarity whatever, and no censure should be passed until the facts are known. The Co-operative Society bill was a foolish scheme, and an act to incorporate the retail merchants would be well advised."

Secretary Hyndman was much annoyed to think that the retail merchants were classed with the promotors of the unfair Co-operative Societies bill, but was optimistic regarding the future of the retail association, and thought the desired end was fast approaching through the organization of provincial associations.

FOLEY BROS., LARSON & CO. FIRE.

Winnipeg, May 5.—Fire broke out in the wholesale grocery house of Foley Bros., Larson & Company, Winnipeg, on the evening of April 29, and it is conservatively estimated that the damage amounted to $250,000. The fire chief was of the opinion that the flame began on the third floor in the spice grinding department, and shot up by way of the elevator shaft. The two floors above were rapidly consumed. No damage was done to the confectionery department at the east end of the building but the grocery department was a complete loss. It was the most spectacular blaze which has been witnessed in Winnipeg for some time.

ELECTED NEW OFFICERS.

Ottawa R. G. A. in a Sound Financial Condition—Arrangements for Picnic.

Ottawa, Ont., May 4.—At the annual meeting of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association held recently the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, A. G. Johnson; Vice-presidents, C. B. McLean and Wm. Farmer; Secretary, T. W. Collins; Treasurer, Duncan Bell; Executive, E. Souliere, Wm. York, F. W. Forde, A. Cochrane, R. B. Younghusband; Auditors, W. J. Eastcott and A. P. Johnson.

It was decided to hold a picnic on Civic Holiday, and also it was proposed to run an excursion to New York in the fall.

The association is in a good financial position, having to its credit the sum of $600.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—The arrival of the Fremona this week with a cargo of lemons, oranges, etc., from Spain, has given an impetus to trade in those lines, and other lines have materially gained on account of the renewed buying. Prices are somewhat higher and firm. Some fine Valencia oranges are on the market, quoted at $4.50 per case. Pineapples are 25—75c weaker.

Fish—The brook trout season is now open and some good lots are expected. Whitefish and trout are also procurable now. Frogs will start shortly. Haddock is still scarce, also lobsters. This is due to rough weather on the fishing grounds. Trade in general is picking up, higher prices are in order and prospects are brighter.

Green Fruits—The season is not far distant when fruits will have their greatest demand. The weather of the past two weeks is delaying the opening of the season, which will put new vigor into the greeen fruit market. However, the conditions are healthy and there have been no discouraging features. Oranges are showing an upward tendency, and it is stated that there is a possibility of them further increasing. Navels in the smaller sizes are in good demand. Strawberries are quoted at from 16 to 18 cents and are moving easily. Pineapples are also selling freely; in fact, the market has no sluggard features. Cranberries, Almeria grapes, Sicily oranges are worn out and have been dropped. The price of lemons is firm and is inclined upward. The demand for fruits has been steady and is expected to expand in a short time.

Vegetables—The Canadian market in green vegetables is largely dependent upon the early garden states to the south. New peas, potatoes, lettuce, beans, tomatoes, cabbage, etc., are arriving daily and are sold in hampers and crates. The demand is strong and all the lines are moving easily. Tomatoes are one of the best, as there is a more general sale of them. There is no improvement in the potato market.

Montreal Grocer Makes Good Profit in Fresh Fish

From 25 to 30 Per Cent., he Says—His Methods for Keeping Fresh Fish in Good Condition—How he Attracts Buyers in Summer—The Varieties he Handles.

During the summer months the sale of fish is rarely undertaken by the average grocer, on account of the danger of loss incurred by the hot weather, and the difficulty of preserving them. Yet it is stated by men in a position to know that there are few more profitable lines for summer trade.

The average grocer who has not made a study of methods of keeping his fish stock is afraid of it. He fears that the possibility of making a few dollars is rather a probability of losing them.

The kernel of the whole business lies in the man himself. There is no doubt about the demand for fresh fish at all seasons of the year, summer included, and this demand, if fostered properly, would be much larger in summer than it is, owing to the fact that meats are considered heavy for hot weather, while there is almost, if not quite equal food value in the much lighter fish.

To handle such trade there are several requirements. First—a live and wide-awake grocer who is not afraid to invest a few dollars to make a few more. Second—a complete knowledge of the most modern and up-to-date methods of handling his fresh fish and displaying them to the best advantage. Third—a sufficient study of his customers to enable him to stock only enough fish at one time to fill their requirements. These requisites may seem simple, but in them may be found the secret of the successful grocer of to-day so far as fresh fish is concerned.

As to the methods of buying, storing and displaying of fresh fish in summer, one of Montreal's largest retail fish merchants gives his experience.

"Fish must be brought in fresh every day if possible, and must not be kept over two days," he said.

"This fact brings out the necessity for studying your trade so that you know, almost to a pound, how much fish can be sold in a given time. Undoubtedly you will make mistakes at first, but experience is the best of teachers, and a gain is often preceded by a necessary loss, in the average business man's education.

"A thorough study of your customers will teach you what fish to buy for summer consumption. Speaking for myself, I find that whitefish, salmon and halibut are my three best lines. Others may have a different experience. My best halibut come from the west, while the east furnishes the best salmon.

To Prevent Decay.

"As to keeping fish; they must, of course, be shipped to you in ice, and, if necessary, repacked on the trip. Western fish often need two relays, so to speak, of ice, on the way. In the store they must be immediately placed in some refrigerating apparatus. There are many of these, and it is hard to specify just which would be best for another man's purpose.

"I have also a show case outside my store, in which I can display fish. Its construction is such that ice can be placed in the bottom and covered by a sheet metal tray, in which the fish are placed. This keeps them fully as well as the regular refrigerator and, at the same time, allows the customer to see what I have.

"My counters are also of special construction, that is, those for fish. They have a false bottom, under which is an ice compartment. I place chipped ice over and around the fish themselves.

"As to profits, I find that 25 to 30 per cent. can readily be made, as there is very little competition, and in summer fish is a form of food very acceptable to the consumer in place of the heavier meats.

"With good judgment in buying, there is no reason at all why every grocer who has railway connection, may not make a handsome profit from handling fish during the hot summer months.

Keeping the Grocer's Name Before the Public

Methods at Hand to Aid the Newspaper Advertising Campaign —Handling of Brands That are Distinctive —'Suggestions on Increasing Business With Seasonable Side-lines—The Name on Paper Bags.

By Wm. Bryans.

Any merchant can, by simple methods and at small expense, advertise well his store and business and thus secure a larger patronage if he will but put forth a little extra energy.

Especially is this true in the towns and villages where the merchant draws his customers from the whole town and also from the surrounding farming district. Of course a merchant may secure considerable prominence by extensive advertising in the local papers, but this can be helped out a great deal by simple methods that will repay, if correctly done, many times over the investment.

With every business of importance, there is a name connected that helps one to remember that business and the goods sold. Bringing this rule of memory down to the retail business and we find in order that the business may be successfully advertised, the proprietor's name must have prominence, so that the customers will link that name with the business carried on.

We find many retail establishments without a name on the window, building or awning to denote who owns or operates that particular store. This is a serious mistake. Every merchant should have his name placed on the awning or on some other prominent spot. It is not a good plan to have it on the window unless neatly placed to one side in small lettering, as it is a nuisance in washing and also in dressing a window. But it is better there than not at all. A large sign extending across the front of the store above the window is a good name exhibitor; another good plan is to have name boards just below the windows. The business carried on, should also be placed on these signs. Where one side of the building is open to public view, a catchy name and business sign can be painted on it.

Another thing a person wonders at when driving through many farming communities, is the lack of merchant's sign boards. Few merchants realize their advertising power especially on a road that is traveled a great deal. A good country advertisement is the mile board with such advertisements as: "One mile to Busyman's, dealer in high-grade groceries," and "Two miles to—Busyman's—for best family flour," and other like phrases. A merchant can prepare the sign boards himself easily in spare time, out of ordinary boxes. The signs should be large enough so that the printing may be easily deciphered. White letters on a black background or black on white are the easiest to read. When mile boards are used, care should be taken that the miles are carefully measured off, for if the people know that the mile boards are not in exact position, they will not put the same confidence in you, your advertisements or your goods.

Another scheme to keep your name before your customers is by placing it on the paper bags. A common rubber stamp may be used for the purpose. It is greatly improved by the addition of a short catchy motto or inscription such as "Our store is your store," "Good goods at low prices," "We want your trade," etc.

Your name should also occupy a prominent place on your delivery waggon, and also on your horse cover. Use any way possible to keep your name before the public.

The Selling of Specialties.

Another way of drawing attention to your name and also drawing customers to your store is by handling and advertising special goods that no one else in your town or neighborhood sell. Some merchants handle a special outstanding brand of some article or some extra quality of butter or bread and find that it brings customers to their stores.

More trade may be secured by handling a full stock of fish during the winter season and vegetables during the summer, provided you are the only merchant in that neighborhood that does so.

A drawing card for the farmer's trade is a good brand of flour that no other merchant in the town handles. Another line that, besides its advertising power, yields a good profit if properly handled is the sale of tomato, cabbage and flower plants in the spring of the year. During the summer and fall, this may be replaced by the sale of fruit.

A great deal of trade may be secured during the summer months by running an ice cream parlor in connection with your store, provided you have the necessary room and assistance. If you make your own cream there is a considerable work connected with this line but it sells a large quantity of goods and also yields a good profit when given the proper attention. Of course, an ice cream parlor requires considerable advertising on the start to get the people into the habit of buying it.

You will generally find that the buying public follow the crowd. A person likes to deal with a store that appears busy. Keep your clerks busy by all means, as there is always plenty of work. Customers hate to go into a store and be greeted in a drowsy manner by a sleepy clerk who has just awakened from a little nap, or tore himself away from an interesting conversation on the latest baseball match. A customer makes a mental note of the true facts as she finds them and you may be assured her future trade will depend on the decision she passes on the service received.

Motto in Newspaper Space.

In advertising, merchants will find it much better to have either a name or motto for their store, as a good motto is easily remembered by the people and helps them to single out your advertisement in the paper and also to remember your store.

Care should be taken in newspaper advertising in order to procure best results. Suecial attention should be taken in preparing copy for the printer. Do not try to say too much and overcrowd the space alloted to your advertising. Prepare your copy in the exact style in which you wish the printer to set it. Remember that your advertisement in order to be read, must be attractive. When many advertisements are crowded together in a newspaper, unless there is some special feature to distinguish one from the others, it is liable to go unnoticed.

A grocer might attract attention to his advertisement by publishing a cooking recipe. Of course these recipes in order to attract the housewife's notice must always be seasonable. Weather predictions will also attract many readers.

In order that your advertising will be successful, you must have full confidence of your readers. Do not allow the imagination to work too freely in writing copy for the paper, for if the people find that goods are not exactly as advertised, there is small chance of the advertisement interesting them again.

Many merchants profit well by using special sales and contests for advertising purposes, but in all such cases it is best to have something original as it is much more liable to catch the public eye. Do not conduct a certain line of contest or special sale because some other merchant in your town has done so. The world hates imitators. Break away from the ordinary. Do something that will start the press and public commenting on your store.

The GROCER'S Big Spring Number

¶ Every Dealer in Canada will take an unusual interest in THE GROCER'S BIG SPRING NUMBER, to be issued May 27th. There are few of them who will not make money by reading and studying it closely. There are few of them who will not keep it for reference for a considerable time.

¶ In the Spring Number we will get right down to facts and figures in showing retailers how they may improve their methods of buying, stock-keeping, handling credits, store arrangement, assorting, display, advertising, stopping leaks, cost accounting, delivery, salesmanship, etc.

¶ The Spring Number will be given over almost entirely to "Scientific Methods of Retailing." Each one of the series of articles coming under this heading will be founded on definite information gathered first-hand from the best sources.

Few persons would purchase plain Lime Juice if they once tried a bottle of STOWER'S LIME JUICE CORDIAL, which is all ready for use, blended just right to suit the taste of the most fastidious, and so convenient.

LIME JUICE CORDIAL is one of the most popular drinks. It is delicious—quenching thirst—keeps the blood and digestive organs in an excellent state.

STOWER'S LIME JUICE CORDIAL is prepared from the freshly squeezed juice of the Lime Fruit, with every impurity carefully removed. It will not ferment and is sweetened with the best refined loaf sugar.

GOOD TEA Draws Trade AND Holds Trade

As all good Dealers know

Dealers are often judged by the Tea they sell.
If the Tea is good, other things sold are likewise good.

The Buyer asks for such tea

This is why "Blue Ribbon Tea" wins trade and holds it for the dealer.

Do you know this for a fact?

It will pay you to sell your trade this high-grade tea.

Things That Shouldn't Be

Fruits and Vegetables Left on the Sidewalks in Boxes Invite Microbes and Dust from the Air.

The cartoon as above appeared in last week's Grocer.

It is a very strong argument in favor of using Canned Fruits and Vegetables instead of fresh.

Canned Fruits and Vegetables as put up by the Dominion Canners, Limited, are guaranteed to be absolutely pure. They are packed practically the same day as picked, when at their best for table use, and are thoroughly sterilized. It is absolutely impossible to have any microbes or germs in them.

Show this cartoon to your lady customers and with the arguments we have given you, you will be able to largely increase your sales of canned goods.

"Increased our Cash Business 50%"

Any proposition that can do that for a dealer is worth instant and serious attention. We want to help you to combat the increasing competition of the DEPARTMENT STORE OCTOPUS, and to get back to your store a large volume of the trade that rightfully belongs there. We aim at encouraging QUICK Cash Sales, and our proposal has nothing of the 'experiment' about it,—it's rational, sensible and feasible. Don't imagine that we ask you to make a big outlay,—the expense is trifling compared with the benefit that must accrue to your store. Will you give our plan a trial?

Read what one delighted dealer says.

Cut Your Ice Bill!

You can do it with a McCray Refrigerator

HUNDREDS of grocers who use McCray Refrigerators have told us they are not only able to preserve perishable goods perfectly but to do so with less ice. If we said to you "McCray Refrigerators use less ice than any other kinds," you might reply "That's only an advertising claim," but when other grocers say it you know it's a fact. Facts of this kind affect your pocket-book. You're wasting money on ice now and losing money by having goods spoil in spite of the big ice bills. The "ice eater" refrigerator is a "profit eater." Find out about the McCray Refrigerator by sending us a postal with your name and address. Ask us for "Catalog No. 66," because it tells especially about our refrigerators for Retail Grocers.

It will pay you to attract to your store the sales we are creating. We'll help you do this. We'll supply you with window-dressing material, attractive banners, and display cards. Dear Mr. Grocer—

Your main idea is to eliminate dead timber—"poor sellers"—from your shelves.

Every month that your money stays in bank it earns something—credit or interest.

Every month a brand of goods remains on your shelves without a sale it costs you something. Because the money you have invested in it is not earning you anything.

SHOE POLISH

Damp, cold and heat alike have no effect on this polish. It does not clog the brush nor soil the clothes, but it lengthens the life of the shoe, and produces a quick, lasting POLISH.

There is more demand for it now than ever before. You are losing a profitable trade if you have been so short-sighted as not to stock it hitherto.

The old method of handling oil by gravity or any kind of pressure was very dangerous, as a leak in a joint or elsewhere was most apt to result in an explosion.

Every feature of the Bowser Long Distance Underground Storage System meets the requirements of Insurance Companies and Fire Underwriters.

The tank is made of best heavy sheet steel riveted and soldered, tested and guaranteed leak and evaporation proof. It is painted with three coats of asphaltum, which absolutely prevents the damp earth from acting upon the metal. The pump is the latest improved, all metal, and measures accurately gallons, half-gallons, quarts or pints at a stroke. The nozzle is fitted with a lever shut-off that absolutely prevents evaporation.

THE SYSTEM HAS NEVER CAUSED A FIRE, nor has an explosion of aBowser Tank ever occurred. One hundred aud eighteen outfits passed through the San Francisco Fire--not one explosion resulted. Some of the pumos were warped and melted by the heat, but the oil remained in good condition in the tank. The Bowser System is safe in every way.

The Quickest Trip from Plantation to Purchaser

There is a fresh picking of "SALADA" every week and all the year round. The climate of Ceylon makes this possible. Ten weeks after being gathered it reaches you. It is packed in lead packages to ensure uniform goodness.

It is protected every step of the way from plantation to purchaser. Bulk Tea grows old and stale rapidly—being unprotected, it cannot escape deterioration. It soon loses freshness.

We have always advocated the supreme importance of fresh tea—of buying in small quantities and buying often. It does not pay a grocer to buy heavily and keep tea in stock so that it reaches the consumer in impaired condition.

We back up our belief in the paramount importance of fresh tea by unconditionally guaranteeing to refund the full purchase price—to pay the freight both ways—to any merchant who has any "SALADA" in stock that is over six months old.

We do our utmost to have "SALADA" reach the consumer in all its garden freshness and fine flavor. We ask your co-operation in our efforts to serve the public with fresh tea.

Retail Grocer's System of Getting Tourist Trade

Methods Employed by Percy Udy, of Bridgenorth, Ont.—Establishes Exclusive Service for the Accommodation of Summer Visitors to Chemong Park, Nearby —Stocked His Store With General Goods Required by Visitors—Muskoka Men Suffer From Wholesalers Selling to Hotels.

Bridgenorth, Ont., May 12.—Within another month or six week the tourist season will be opening for the summer of 1910 and few localities will fail to benefit by the pleasure-seekers who seem to have located every attractive body of water that boasts a fringe of forest or a school of game fish.

Within easy reach of Bridgenorth is Chemong Park, possessing all the natural beauties that make it an ideal summer resort, and which explains the popularity it has enjoyed for years.

Percy T. Udy, one of Bridgenorth's grocers, has taken advantage of Chemong's increased summer population and has successfully endeavored to secure a large portion of the trade. He is fully prepared for the tourist season prior to its opening and has stocked his shelves with those goods which are in greatest demand by the summer visitors. General groceries of the best quality are always carried, but his stock is increased along such lines as canned fruits. olives, jams, jelly powders, salmon, sardines, fresh fruit, bread and many other items.

A complete stock of provisions is kept throughout the season. He also carries tinware, some hardware, fishing tackle, fresh candy, wire screen, mosquito netting, hammocks, lacrosse shoes, paints, flags, camping hats and other goods unheard of in a grocery store except during the summer months.

Special Delivery for Cottagers.

In order to ensure satisfaction in point of delivery Mr. Udy secured a special horse and wagon which he uses exclusively in delivering orders to Chemong Park.

Orders are taken early in the morning and are delivered before noon. Orders are also taken during the afternoon and are delivered before evening. On the latter trip is delivered fresh fruit, fresh bread and laundry, Mr. Udy being the agent for a laundry company in a neighboring city. In this manner the summer residents of the park are given prompt service which they appreciate and the trips are arranged with a view to delivering goods just before they are required for use.

Has Been Profitable.

Catering to the tourists has necessitated securing an extra horse which is only used in that work three months in the year while it must be kept the entire 12 months. Extra help must also be obtained for two months when wages are highest and assistants are not easily secured, says Mr. Udy.

However, the profits warrant the extra efforts put forward, and particularly if the summer is warmer than usual.

The season is growing longer every year, he says. The first tourist arrived at Chemong for 1910 on Saturday, April 30th. All the regulars are in their cottages by July 1st. The season is at its zenith about the first of August and breaking up begins around Labor Day. Only a few remain until the snow flies.

The hotel at Chemong Park Mr. Udy declares purchases its supplies directly from the wholesale houses and not a few of Bridgenorth's inhabitants buy from the large mail order houses in Toronto.

Mr. Udy is preparing for a good season this year and is looking forward for the weather that practically drives humanity to summer resorts.

Send to Mail Order Houses.

Smith's Falls, Ont., May 11.—The Rideau River in the vicinity of this town is but beginning to come forward as a summer resort. The result has been, W. Hyndman, grocer, states, that the regular trade is not appreciably affected and scarcely calls for extra efforts.

Mr. Hyndman carries his regular stock which is sufficient for those summer visitors who settle near the town. He points out that considerable business is done with the large mail ordering houses by many of the families as well as the larger buyers in Smith's Falls.

Selling Over Retailers' Heads.

Bracebridge, Ont., May 12.—Retailers here and in other tourist centres in Muskoka make special efforts to look after the tourist trade which every summer amounts to much. They make it a point to carry in stock such goods as are particularly required for summer cottagers and hotels. Among these are canned fruits and vegetables, preserved fruits, cheese, pickles, confectionery of high grades, and, of course, fishing tackle.

The tourist trade is certainly worth catering to, according to one grocer who reaches out for his share. This is true in spite of the fact that retail grocers lose considerable business because some wholesale houses often sell over their heads to hotels, supply boats, and large boarding houses.

This naturally makes them feel "sore," to use a colloquial expression, but they hope that the recent big convention will be the means of effecting a change for the better. They claim that when they support the wholesalers twelve months in the year that the wholesalers should sell through them the whole time.

"The jobbers gets a big order from a hotel or supply boat and leaves the smaller orders for us to take care of," said one grocer.

"This, I think, is a contemptible trick and one for which we should not stand. If we are to sell a part of the wholesaler's goods to the consuming public let us sell them all. But if the wholesaler is going to sell to a few consumers let him sell to them all and see where he will land at. We are his agents; we exist for his special benefit as well as our own and it is not fair that he does not give us a fair show. An ordinary hotel will probably purchase $500 worth of groceries in three months. At a gross profit of 25 per cent. that account would mean $125 to one of us. The larger hotels would be much more valuable and we would, in view of a bigger turnover, be better able to handle the wholesaler's goods the rest of the year if we were to get all these accounts."

This is quite a thorn in the sides of retailers in Muskoka and they are anxiously waiting for the turn of the tide in this respect.

HAVE SUSPENDED PAYMENT.

Union Blend Tea Co. In Financial Difficulties.

St. John, N.B., May 11.—Quite a stir was caused in local grocery circles last week by the announcement that Harry W. deForest, Ltd., tea importers and blenders and packers of Union Blend Tea, had suspended payment. A meeting of the creditors was held last week but no statement has yet been issued. Another meeting will be held on Thursday, May 19th, in the office of L. P. D. Tilley. It is stated that the heaviest creditors are the Union Bank of Halifax and United States concerns.

The firm within the past year or two opened an office in Boston and it is believed that the business there was not as good as was anticipated. One estimate places the liabilities at about one hundred thousand dollars.

Brandon Merchants Systematize Deliveries

Take the Orders in the Morning and Deliver in the Afternoon—Grocers There Carry a Good Assortment—Stocks are Large—Some Think Organization is Needed.

By L. C. Harkness.

Brandon is pre-eminently a retail business centre. It is one of the oldest cities in Western Canada, and has long been known as the nucleus of the greatest wheat growing district in the world. This means that it is a place of wealth and a centre of attractions for immigrants who come to our country. The city is fast developing as a manufacturing and distributing centre, and its future is bright and promising. The fact that it is surrounded by a rich agricultural district and also internally prosperous, gives the retailers a splendid opportunity to develop good trades.

On visiting this place for the first time one is struck by the spacious and well equipped stores, the excellent facilities to look after trade, and a feature which may not be so creditable as the others, the carrying by retail grocers of very large stocks of goods, though well assorted and of a wide range.

Have Large Assortment.

Retailers have made their stores attractive to all customers from the country and from the city. The wide range of goods is warranted by the wide range in taste among the customers. Stores are built large, with good equipments and excellent lighting facilities. The picture reproduced here of Dowling & Reid's store is an example of the many that are neat and well equipped. Another feature of Brandon's stores is that each finds it profitable to handle a good stock of confectionery.

Unlike Winnipeg merchants who are deprived to a considerable extent of this trade by the exclusive candy and fruit stores they pay strict attention to this department of the business.

Delivery is Systematized.

The fact that grocers have their customers educated to order their goods in the morning, thereby leaving the afternoon free for delivery, is a new phase of business met with in Brandon. Telephones are busy from eight until eleven in the morning and clerks are busy the rest of the day packing up and delivering. In conversation with a few grocers, it was revealed that this was an unconscious development, and it proves that a merchant can change and systematize his methods no matter what they may have been.

These are a few of the features of the trade in the Wheat City. The overstocking principle is questionable. There was a time in the history of the city when this was more necessary than at present, but goods can be delivered promptly from wholesalers at present and retailers would possibly find it more to their advantage to control their stocks better by buying in smaller lots and more frequently. As it is, they turn over the stock about three times a year, whereas under the local conditions the turn over should occur at least six times a year. It is believed that grocers realize this fact more as time goes on, but force of habit seems to be working against them. Grocers, too, are disposed to grant long terms of credit to all customers.

Thinks Association is Needed.

The need of a strong association is evident among the retailers of Brandon. Some years ago an attempt was made to organize among the grocers, but it was not a success due to the unfair price-cutting tendency of a few of the merchants. This price cutting is still carried on much to the grief of the grocers.

Interior View of Dowling & Reid's Gro cery Store, Brandon, Man., Showing a L arge Show-Case, a Coffee Grinder. Meat Slicer and Cash Register.

A. Grant, who has been in the business for over twenty-five years in the city, was secretary of the association while it existed, and did much to put the trade on a stronger footing. He said recently that the salvation of the business depended upon an association of grocers, since the continued price-cutting was hurtful to the trade. There are many lines, he said, that were being handled at present without a profit.

E. Bolton, a grocer in the east end of the city, is much impressed with the collection systems in vogue in Guelph and Chatham, Ont. He believes that steps should be taken to have a similar system brought into operation in Brandon.

How the Law of Garnishment Affects Grocers

Wages of Mechanic, Laborer, Etc., Cannot be Garnisheed Unless They Amount to More Than $25 — Retailer States That Cost of the Law's Machinery is Practically Prohibitive Under Present Conditions.

Toronto, May 12. — Grocers are few and fortunate who have not during the course of their business careers had occasion to make the acquaintance of the law of garnishment, or in other words who have not garnisheed the wages of a customer who has failed to pay for the goods he has received.

For the benefit of these grocers, if they really exist, it may be stated that the law in this respect does not offer them any particular favors. In Ontario for instance a garnishee order may be issued either before or after judgment from a clerk of the Division Court, but money in the hands of a third party due a mechanic, workman, laborer, servant, clerk or employe for wages, which includes the permanent employes of the Provincial Government, cannot be garnisheed unless the sum due the mechanic, etc., exceeds $25, and then only to the extent of the excess.

If, however, the debt was contracted for board or lodging, and in the opinion of the Judge the exemption of $25 is not necessary for the maintenance of the debtor's family, then the amount to be secured by the garnishee will be in the option of the Judge.

A single man with no one depending on him for support has no amount reserved to him by law against garnishment. Neither have the other classes of people who are not wage earners. The garnishee summons costs $2 on sums up to $10 and $4 is required on amounts from $10 to $20.

How the Law Works Out.

In other words, if a laborer, mechanic, etc., receiving wages of $20 in one week or two weeks and never has more than that amount coming to him is indebted to a grocer, be it for $35 or $135, or any sum, such laborer does not come within the jurisdiction of the law.

It may be that the customer's wages are paid weekly, fortnightly or monthly; at any rate if at the end of any of those periods there is coming to him $25 or less, the grocer cannot according to the written law have the wages garnisheed.

If, however, the man were receiving $28 a week, a month or for two weeks, his wages could be garnished for $3 only. While there are some men who are paid monthly and a greater number receive their remuneration every two weeks, the great majority are probably paid weekly, and the law thus protects the mechanic or laborer at the expense of the grocer who has likely tided him through a crisis of some kind. That there should be a feeling of dissatisfaction among the trade might be reasonably expected, inasmuch as the grocer, having been "bitten" by a customer, is even thwarted by a law which was apparently devised to protect the laboring man.

A Grocer's Opinion.

To a representative of The Grocer one of the members of R. Higgins & Sons, grocers Yonge St., Toronto, said regarding this question.

"I do not know very much about the law in this regard for I do not believe it is worth the trouble of trying to collect from a defaulting customer if you have suffered by meeting one. I have found that the cost of trying to collect a bad debt will almost amount to the debt itself and I have, therefore, tried to keep only safe customers on my credit list."

Mr. Higgins did not think it fair to the trade that an exemption of $25 should be allowed mechanics, etc., and also considered the present method of applying the law too costly.

It would be interesting to know how other grocers view this and other questions respecting the Criminal Code. Exact instances where merchants have tried to collect would prove of much benefit.

Things That Shouldn't Be

What is commonly called "butting in" is too frequently observed in Retail Stores. Travelers ought to await their turns to talk to Grocers.

Designing a Holiday Window for Victoria Day

Background Ought to be of a Patriotic Character as Suggested by Illustration—Foreground Can be Filled in With Appropriate Holiday Goods—A Good Opportunity For Originality.

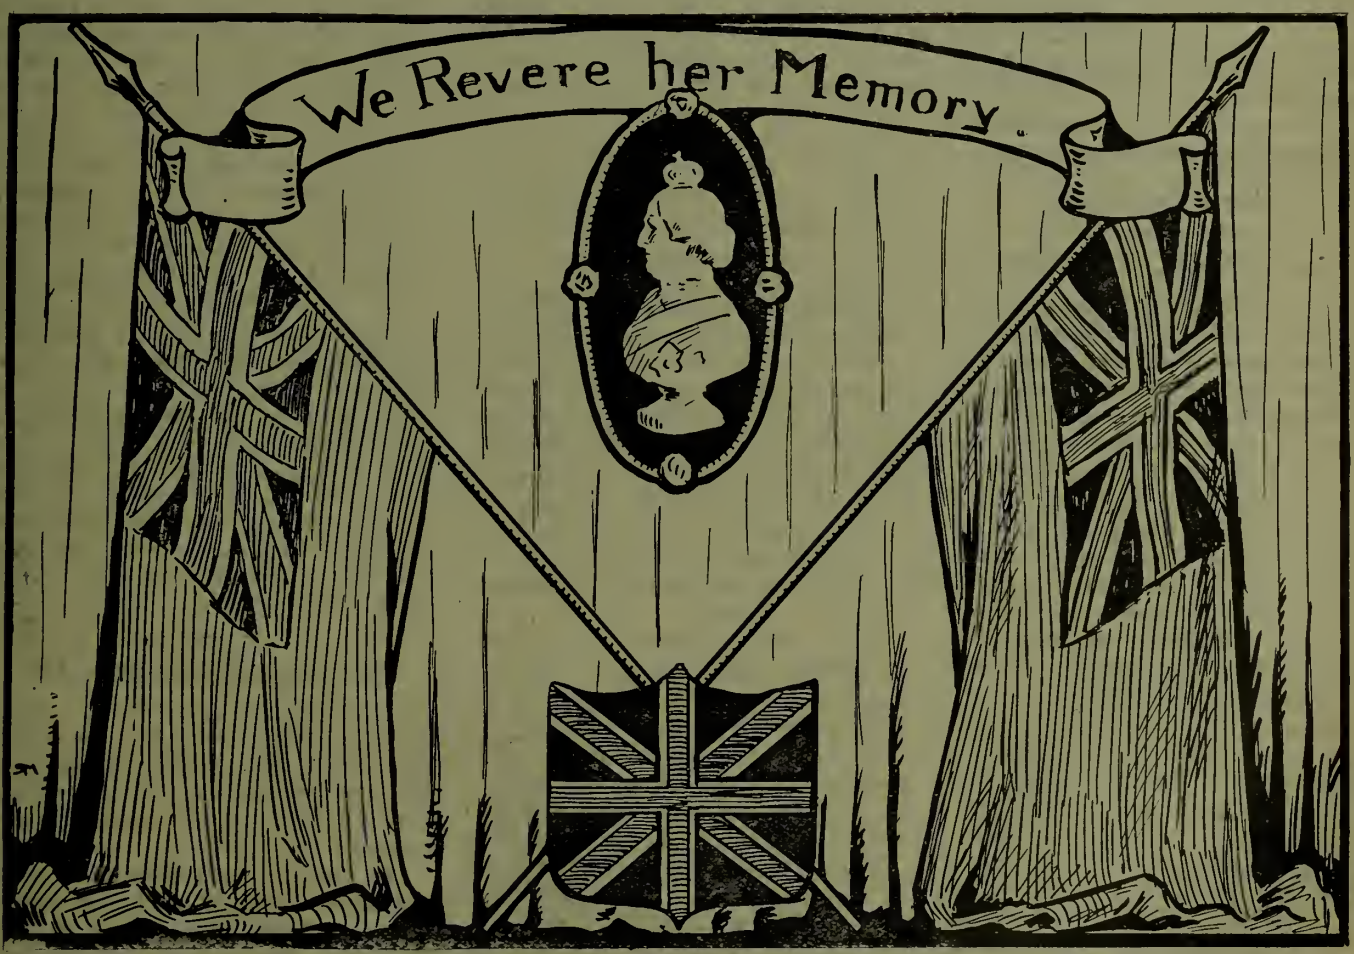
Victoria Day, Tuesday, May 24th, sacred to the memory of our late beloved Queen Victoria, affords grocers the opportunity of assisting in perpetuating her memory, of keeping aglow that spirit of true patriotism, stirred up by recollections of the golden years of her reign and also enables him to prepare a background for his windows that will be attrative and appropriate.

Each grocer should exercise his individual ideas in preparing the background. The accompanying cut displays one suggestion which occurred to the Grocer's artist. A Victoria Day window calls forth the grocer's artistic sense, although he need not aim at an extravagant setting to obtain the most effective appearance.

The window should be prepared early in the week of Monday, May 16th, and should be removed on the 25th. Grocers know that this holiday always results in family reunions and articles of the highest quality are purchased. It is also, if the weather is fine, a day on which the first excursions of the year are made, and pickles, fancy biscuits, condensed milk, bottled preserves, canned goods, and those articles which experience has taught are in greatest demand on occasions of this kind should be displayed.

Quality ought to be a feature of the goods placed in the window and the effect of the background should not be destroyed by an attempt to make a big display. Rather let good taste characterize the whole by first securing an appropriate setting and using the various articles, merely as if they were filling in here and there to relieve a blank.

The result should be that they will be more prominent than if the arrangement of the goods were vieing with the background as to which was the more attractive.



A Suggestion For a Background For a Victoria Day Window Display.

Making the Background.

Almost every family has a picture of Queen Victoria and if possible only a good likeness should be used. It is customary to drape the picture, lightly, with black. In the accompanying suggestion a background of red is called for with a banner inscribed with "We Revere Her Memory," and also a large medallion bearing the late Queen's likeness in bust form. These are really not necessary. The two Union Jacks could be utilized with a picture and a neat card properly inscribed like the banner in the accompanying illustration. Countless ideas can be worked out and for various reasons the grocer should not be remiss in this case as his fellow merchants will likely have attractive windows.

STORE WITH LARGE STOCKS.

"Many stores," remarked a traveler the other day, "especially in the smaller cities and towns, are carrying more stock than in necessary.

"It is all because of the quantity-buying fever.

"The other day I heard of a little store doing an annual business of about $15,000, groceries and meats, the proprietor of which seemed to devote most of his time to watching out for five and ten case deals, the result being that he had twice as many goods of many kinds as he needed and enough canned goods for two or three stores of the size.

"Buy as you need," he added, "and not otherwise. I have repeated this many times, and those who are following this rule I find are getting along well, while those who have the quantity-buying craze are often hard up and without reasonable cause.

"A traveler can usually sell a man one case pretty nearly as low as the five-case price.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

THE LATE COL. DAVIDSON.

The late Colonel Davidson, of Davidson & Hay, was the son of an Aberdeen physician. A reader of The Grocer says the doctor was not only a distinguished practitioner, but made a name for himself by his common-sense methods. Our reader, who in his boyhood days was among his patients, like other youngsters, he sometimes suffered from indiscretions of diet. During a very severe attack his mother sent for Dr. Davidson, who soon diagnosed the trouble—too many green apples. Instead of sympathizing and giving remedies, he gave him a sound spanking and left him with the threat of a worse one if he ever ate unripe fruit again. The spanking was remembered when the stomach ache was forgotten, and there was never any further need for Dr. Davidson's services.

Colonel Davidson had few equals in his capacity for handling men. Magnetic, absolutely just and firm, he always commanded profound respect. When he took a decided stand on any important question, no one ever arose to oppose him.

Marvellously human, genial, always considerate, an injustice was the only thing that ever seemed to arouse him. If he disliked anyone it was a religious hyprocrite. There are not so many of them in business these days.

He was so modest, that he never attained the distinction in public life or the success in the business world his capacity entitled him to. His handling of the greatest industrial strike in Toronto nearly twenty-five years ago was so fair, effective and satisfactory and secured such a reputation for him that he could have obtained an overwhelming popular vote for any position, but he always refused to be a candidate for anything.

While, as was mentioned last week, Colonel Davidson was instrumental in laying the foundation of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild with the tobacco selling agreement, yet his support of and loyalty to the Guild was a serious, perhaps fatal, handicap to him. At this time his firm was rapidly securing one of the leading places in the trade. It was attracting attention for the way it was getting and holding the best retailers, for its freedom from bad debts, and its knowledge of markets and good buying. It was at this time, too, Colonel Davidson created a sensation by placing the largest sugar order ever given in Canada—25,000 bbls. Under the protecting wings of the Guild, smaller and less aggressive houses, and more of them, were enabled to grow up at the expense of the leaders of those days. Business is now less strenuous, profits greater, but more evenly distributed.

CREAM OF TARTAR SCARCITY.

Cream of tartar is scarce in the primary markets—in fact, practically unobtainable at the present time. Reports from France state that there are two reasons for this condition of affairs. The most important was the heavy frosts of this year, which destroyed a large acreage of vineyards. Cream of tartar is, as many know, produced from the lees formed in wine-making, and is a direct product of the grape.

The second cause was the short supply left over from last year. Last year the crop was none too large, and the greater part has been used already.

The statement was at first made that the farmers had plenty of the raw material on hand, but refused to part with it at current quotations. There is no doubt that to a certain extent this is true, but the shortage is there, nevertheless, and as France is practically our only supplier of this article, the situation may be considered a serious one for Canadian manufacturers.

During the last few days the situation has eased slightly, and it may be that the reports are exaggerated. If not, it is difficult to see where our manufacturers, who have not contracted ahead, will go for their supplies. The United States uses all her own and much more, and France has almost a monopoly otherwise. The outcome will be watched with interest by the trade.

The advance in price amounted to four cents in the primary market. Manufacturers, however, usually contract about January 1st for their year's supplies, and those who have done so will not have difficulty in supplying their demand.

SELLING GRAPEFRUIT.

Does the average grocer realize that the grapefruit is rapidly gaining ground as one of the staple articles on the breakfast table?

A decade or more ago it was practically unknown and the quality was not inviting. The demand has increased in the United States from a few paltry thousands of fifteen years ago to four million boxes in 1909 and this is believed to be but the beginning. The grapefruit's other name is pomelo or the shaddock or chadec and "grapefruit" is derived from the fact that they grow in clusters of a dozen or so like enormous yellow grapes. Florida produces one-fourth of the world's total output and has become one of the grapefruit gardens. In the United States the grapefruit is particularly popular and especially as a breakfast eye-opener—and it is rapidly growing in favor in Canada.

To handle them properly the grocer should acquaint himself with their properties and by actual personal trials should find out their qualities as a table favorite. The grapefruit is pleasing to the palate and possesses medicinal values peculiar to itself.

Persons pass by the grapefruit in stores, because, perhaps, they do not wish to display the fact that they have not tasted it. This affords the grocer an opportunity to do a little educational work. If he does not boost new goods the chances are that his sales will not reach a high figure.

GETTING AROUND THE ACT.

Travelers were much interested in last week's cartoon showing how one of them got around the Secret Commission's Act and one has called the attention of The Grocer to still another "smart" scheme.

The salesman finds difficulty in selling the retailer a bill of goods. In fact the latter declines to buy unless he gets a cut price. The traveler knows he cannot do this on restricted goods and he is aware that if he gives a secret rebate he may be implicated in a criminal suit.

His salesmanship does not carry him through so he bets the retailer five dollars that he (the retailer) will not give him the order. Of course the latter takes him up, gives him the order and gets the money which is virtually a rebate.

This is another case of getting around the Act which has actually occurred in a Canadian town.

What do travelers and retailers think of it?

A CONSUL-AT-LARGE.

None will regret more than the commercial and financial interests of the country the expiration of the term of office of Earl Grey.

He has been an ideal Governor-General. Besides those qualities of geniality, grace and tact so essential in the occupant of the high office, Earl Grey possesses a keen appreciation of the practical, in both the political and commercial affairs of the Dominion. He knows when and how to do the right thing, and is always on the alert for opportunities to do it. Had he been born and bred in this country he could not easily have exhibited and practised more the traits of the patriot. He has been zealous at all times for the welfare of the country.

No one recognizes more fully than he the richness and vastness of the great natural resources of the country. Abroad, as well as at home, has he descanted upon their possibilities and urged their judicious development. His farewell words to the members of the House of Commons and the Senate the other day will not soon be forgotten and the following extract deserves to become a classic:

"When I reflect on the vastness of your area, on the fertility of your soil, on the unlimited wealth of your natural resources—which, I rejoice, you are determined scientifically to conserve as well as vigorously to develop; when I reflect upon the invigorating nature of your climate, and on the sturdy character of your people; when I reflect on all these great advantages which you possess in such abundant and exceptional degree, then, gentlemen, I feel convinced as I am that to-morrow's sun will rise, that if you keep true to the highest ideals of duty and disinterested service, nothing can prevent you from becoming, perhaps before the close of the present century, not only the granary, but the heart and soul and rudder of the empire."

Earl Grey has reason for the faith that is in him. Since he came into the office in 1904 he has seen the foreign trade of the country increase by over $190,000,000; the rapid expansion of the northwestern provinces; the grain output of the Canadian farms swell in value to the respectable sum of $533,000,000, and that of the mines to $90,000,000, and the railway mileage increase by several thousand miles. In fact, he has seen enormous development in all the country's commercial, industrial and financial ramifications.

A true friend is a candid friend. Earl Grey has been both; and he is valued all the more for it. He has counselled as well as praised, for he knows from a world-wide experience that character is even more essential to national greatness than is material wealth.

We are told by Emerson that there is compensation in everything. Canada's compensation when Earl Grey leaves our shores will be in the fact that he will be a sort of counsel-at-large, zealous for this country's best interests and advancing them always as opportunity affords.

CAUSE OF COST OF LIVING.

One usually has to dig down below the surface in order to get at the real causes of existing conditions.

When the "high cost of living" cry was in the air everybody pointed their fingers at the "greedy" retailer or middleman and at the "exorbitant" prices he had been charging for the necessaries of life. But here comes a commission appointed by the State of Massachusetts and says that the trouble is caused principally by "the increase in the world's gold supply" and "extravagance of individuals."

This makes quite a difference and sheds new light on the question; but there will still remain those who are firmly convinced that the retailer is to blame for making undue percentages of profit.

They look upon the surface of things and do not stop to think.

There is an agitation all over Canada now among the retail trade for higher percentages of profit. If retailers were obtaining exorbitant prices it is not likely they would care to expose themselves to further criticism by demanding still larger profits.

THE SUMMER HALF HOLIDAY.

As the years go by retailers all over the Dominion show greater tendency to enjoy their businesses. They are making their work a pleasure instead of a drudge.

The early closing movement has done much to bring this about. Grocers have discovered that to do business on scientific principles they must confine their selling hours to shorter periods in place of letting things drag along from daylight to midnight for six days in the week.

They have discovered that the gross profit of 75 cents or $1 made from 7 o'clock in the evening until 11 o'clock does not pay them for the expense of running the business, their own and their salesmen's time.

Now comes the midweek half holiday which provides a little necessary recreation for the body and mind. This movement is also spreading with great rapidity. All that it needs in every village, town or city is co-operation to make it successful.

It is quite possible to educate the public to concentrate their buying to Wednesday or Thursday morning and if all retailers do this none will lose custom.

PROGRESS OF CANADIAN TRADE.

Since Confederation to date the statistics of Canadian trade have indicated the curious fact that the crests of each marked wave of trade expansion have followed each other in cycles of almost ten years.

Commencing in 1873, all previous records were broken with a total trade of a little over $131,000,000. In 1883 a new high record of over $230,000,000 was established; and in 1893, the third marked expansion and new high record of over $247 600,000 was attained. No halt in the trade followed until the new high record of over $472,700,000 was reached in 1904. A temporary halt was experienced in 1905 and again in 1909, but 1910, when the figures for that fiscal year are announced will show it to have been the greatest in the history of Canada.

KNOWING THE GOODS FOR SALE.

A large manufacturing house in the United States with a view to interesting retail grocers in their goods demonstrated to 500 guests the methods by which their articles were prepared for the market. The main idea of the affair was to give the retailer an insight into the sanitary methods employed and also to familiarize him with the various articles manufactured.

It was an educational idea pure and simple, the manufacturers acting upon the belief that to get the best results the retail grocer should know everything about the goods he was selling. Having seen them in preparation he would be more interested in them and would take greater pains to sell them, calling particular attention to the fact that he had seen them himself and could vouch for the excellence of the articles used in manufacture.

It is the proprietor not the people who makes the store.

Every time a man borrows trouble he gets the worst of the transaction.

The dull summer months may be made profitable if one uses them in preparing for his fall trade.

It's all right to say just what you think, but there are times when it is prudent to say it to yourself.

Opportunity is represented as having long hair in front and being bald behind. He may be grasped when he meets you, but not after he passes.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

Wheatley Has Early Closing Friday Afternoon — How Regina Merchant Locates Manufacturers of Food Products—Unique Method of a Halifax Grocer in Getting Standing Orders—Guelph Retail Association Has Question Box—Money Made From Old Sprouted Onions.

Will Rest For Saturday.

Wheatley, Ont., May 10.—Wheatley is the latest place in western Ontario to adopt the weekly half holiday idea for the coming summer. The merchants and professional men of the village have got together, and an agreement with thirty-one signatures, representing practically every business man in Wheatley, has been promulgated this week. The agreement is to close all places of business on the afternoon of Friday of each week during the summer months of June, July and August. Hitherto, it has been usual to choose a mid-week afternoon, but Wheatley has chosen Friday largely with a view to resting up for the heavy Saturday business.

Makes Use of Trade Paper.

Regina, Sask., May 11.—A practical method of getting in touch with manufacturers and of satisfying himself in regard to the quality of certain goods is followed by a local grocer. If a customer asks for a particular article which he does not happen to have in stock he turns to The Canadian Grocer to find whether it is therein advertised.

He considers this means a reliable method of judging the class of the goods and it is an easy way to get into communication with the manufacturer. He has not yet been disappointed.

Boosts His Own Town.

Smith's Falls, Ont., May 12.—H. H. Layng, grocer, is a member of the Smith's Falls board of trade and he quite naturally believes in boosting the town.

One method is this: He has printed a neat little business card with his name, business, address and phone number on one side and a half dozen short pithy facts about Smith's Falls and its possibilities on the other. These cards are not only distributed among his customers, but go out of the town as well.

He recognizes that anything he can do to attract new industries or even new families to the town will be not only to his business interests but to the best interests of the whole municipality.

Solicits Standing Orders.

Halifax, N.S., May 11.—A local grocer follows the idea of soliciting standing orders for new fruits and vegetables and the plan possesses features that may appeal to grocers in general.

For instance, one woman will want two boxes of strawberries every other day or every day, as the case may be. Another may want asparagus, lettuce, etc., in the same way. Women like to feel that such things are pre-arranged and left to the grocer's care. The latter can figure better what he requires daily when he knows what is wanted outside of the transient trade. It is an idea that appeals to customers and increases the number of sales.

Modern Fixtures Installed.

Brandon, Man., May 12.—F. W. Hughes, who is conducting a grocery business on 12th Street has recently overhauled the interior of his store and has equipped it with modern improvements that lend to his place a bright appearance. Among the new fixtures installed were several show cases built according to the latest ideas, silent salesmen and new shelving.

Mr. Hughes is carrying a large stock, specializing in English goods and the quality is emphasized by the handsome fixtures. He has also installed a school supplies department in charge of a lady clerk. Mr. Hughes recently purchased a lively horse with a view to ensuring rapid delivery.

Retailers Have Question Box.

Guelph, Ont., May 5.—At the last meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association the question box discussion was the feature, as it brought out some valuable information. J. A. McCrea, grocer, and Jas. Ramsey, dry goods merchant, opened the talks on the questions, which included: "Does Newspaper Advertising Pay?" "The Co-operative Delivery," "The relation of the employer to the clerk, both at work and after hours." "What constitutes a good salesman?"

Some fifteen questions in all were brought out. It was thought advisable to bring these questions up again and this will be done at the next meeting. The question of the Thursday afternoon closing was not taken up at the meeting, but it was discussed privately afterwards. The merchants are of the same opinion that they were before. That is, that as an association they would not take any stand upon it, but that each individual member could act privately. This practically means that the half holiday will be given as usual.

Money From Sprouted Onions.

Peterboro, Ont., May 12.—J. M. Donovan, a local grocer, claims to have a good method for growing green onions under his own roof from the old sprouted ones that are not salable. He usually lays in a few boxes of garden earth every autumn for this purpose but did not do so last year so used sifted coal ashes instead. These were used early before the frost left the ground, and he found them to be as good as garden earth.

"The onions grew from this much easier," he says, "and most everyone has coal ashes. As to the boxes, almost any shallow box will do, sardine packing boxes being very good. This year I am using corn meal boxes; they are about 17x22 inches and 6 inches deep, and hold a peck of onions nicely placed close together.

"I fill the boxes within about 2 inches of the top with the coal ashes or earth, place them in the window and then put in the long sprouted onions (which are always yellow, but which turn green in a day or two) then fill in between the onions with ashes or earth to the top of the box. That being done I thoroughly wet the whole. Long sprouted onions are always drooped, and I place the droop towards me and away from the light, as the sun draws the top towards it. If this is done, when the onions are fit to pull they are as straight as an arrow."

Mr. Donovan states that this is a simple method to make a clear gain and doesn't think that money can be made much easier.

SOME PERTINENT QUESTIONS.

This is the season when the housewife wants to know how the grocer keeps his foodstuffs. Does he sweep his store out while fresh fruits and sticky substances and other articles which collect dust as fly paper does flies, are fully exposed to the product of his broom? Does he keep his milk, butter and other perishables in iced chambers? Does he preserve his fruits and sweets from the flies? Does he banish the "typhoid fly" from his shop? Does he make the fine street display at the cost of exposing much food, which is afterwards sold and eaten, to the dust storms and automobile wraek? Are his clerks careful in handling foods which they are parcelling up? Are these foods well covered for the journey through the streets in the delivery carts?

Why the Average Corner Grocer Fails to Succeed

Necessary Pains Not Always Taken When a Site is Chosen—Advisable Sometimes to Begin With Competition—Selling Above the Man on the Main Street—Losses Through Credits and Bad Bookkeeping.

By Victor Lauriston.

The corner grocery—it's famous.

But with all the song and story in which it is enshrined, and all the great men who date their careers remotely back to it, the business possibilities of the corner grocery are scarcely appreciated by a host of men whose minds are centred upon the big returns certain to flow from a location on the main street.

By the term "corner grocery," I mean primarily the grocery which, instead of joining in the general rush to the business centre of the city, has lingered in a residential or factory section of the community. And the community is that very common and representative community in Canada—the village, town or small sized city, in which the population is somewhat under 20,000, and where the daily or weekly newspaper does not circulate much beyond the territorial limits from which a business man may hope to draw his trade.

If the corner grocery in places of this size is sometimes regarded as a joke, it is largely because the corner grocer has usually failed to take himself and his business seriously. In many cases the glittering allurements of Main Street have drawn to the business centre of the town or city the men of ideas, leaving the groceries on the side streets largely run by men who regarded business as a sort of semi-retirement from actual life—who had, possibly, accumulated a sort of competence and looked upon the running of a small grocery business as a pleasant connecting link with the activities of other days, from which, without too much expenditure of their monetary mental or physical capital they could draw sufficient returns to provide a comfortable livelihood for an inexpensive and quiet old age. But this is not always true, for we have bright men in the corner grocery.

But usually his business training was limited, or else he had no longer that incentive to hustle which youth invariably gives. With cash behind him, he was not hard pressed; or else he regarded the business as scarcely worth more than a casual struggle.

On the contrary, the man on Main Street couldn't afford to stagnate. He was face to face with a big rent, for one thing. His running expenses were large. He simply had to forge ahead or else drop out of the race. He was always on the alert for new methods of business building. Ingenious schemes of advertising, displaying goods, selling groceries, catching the public eye, cutting down expenses—all these he sought for because he found that, without them, he would lose ground and be eliminated from the game.

If moss back methods are often associated with the corner grocery, it is not because the corner grocery refuses to repay the energetic hustler who prefers to be modern and up-to-date. This is a fact which hustlers with a keen eye for the main chance are proving every day.

Expenses are Less.

The magnet which has in the past drawn so many enterprising men to Main St. is the lure of larger returns. To do a big business has seemed synonymous with the reaping of large profits. As a matter of fact, the extra expense involved not infrequently eats up the extra profits. Where big fortunes are made, it is good generalship rather than a good location that is responsible.

If the field from which the corner grocery is likely to draw trade is apparently smaller, so, too, are the fixed charges which must be met. A good store on a side street in a city of 10,000 people can be rented at $10 a month. There are stores more expensive, and there are cheaper stores, but I have known good stores in good locations at this price. Here, at the outset, is a difference in fixed expenses of from $30 up. Furthermore, if the merchant has some capital behind him, he can buy outright in many cases—which is something financially impossible for the beginner on Main St.

Items to Consider Carefully.

Whether he rent or buy, he should be reasonably discreet in selecting his location. If the adjoining population is an industrial one, it would pay him to make some investigation into the running of the factories where they work. A factory which makes a practice of running overtime for one season of the year and shutting down entirely during another is a less desirable adjunct than a factory which employs a smaller number of hands all the year round. Again, where there is a large foreign element, it is hard for a man, unless he can speak their tongue, to compete with a rival business man in the same locality, who is bound to them by every tie of blood relationship.

In fact, there are a multitude of local conditions which may affect the new business man favorably or otherwise. He should carefully examine them: for he must, at the outset, depend largely upon merely local trade.

Establishing a new business in a new locality is usually a rather precarious step, and the merchant should feel pretty sure of his ground before he puts foot upon it. Residential sections, particularly those with some social pretensions, are apt to resent the intrusion of mere commerce, despite the attendant convenience. In every city there are to be found on odd street corners little, abandoned stores with shuttered windows, that tell of misplaced confidence in the patronage of a certain locality.

Strange as it may seem to the uninitiated, it is frequently a better venture to establish a new business in close proximity to an old one, than to go far afield. The reason simply is, that the first business has started a current of trade in that direction which to a certain extent will help the second. At the same time, there is no tragedy like that of two blades of grass trying to grow where there is only room for one. Be sure your territory will justify your venture before you go ahead.

Usually, it is better to buy an established business; and as a rule it is better to buy a business that is considerably run down than one that has been worked up to its full limits of possibility. That is, provided both buyer and seller are perfectly aware the business is run down, and fix the price accordingly.

Some Things to Forget.

The wisest move the new proprietor of the corner grocery can take right at the outset is to forget some things.

He should forget that old, perennial belief that he is justified in charging more than the man on the main street.

He should forget that equally old, equally perennial belief that his business possibilities are limited to the territory immediately adjoining his store.

He should forget that even older, even more perennial belief that two birds on the wing apparently flying in his direction are worth a single bird safely ensconsced in a cage—or, in other words, he must drop the idea that a big credit business is the equivalent of prosperity.

The prevailing superstition (for, after all, it is largely a superstition), that things are more expensive at the corner grocery than they are on Main Street, is one of the main reasons why Main Street commands the bulk of the business while the corner grocery has to be content with little odds and ends that dribble in anywhere from 5 p.m. till midnight.

What Careful Buying Means.

Before the corner grocer can sell, he must know how to buy. It is careful buying and a keen watch on running expenses that will enable him to sell without adopting the expedient of tacking an extra cent on butter, or selling a trifle less sugar for a dollar. Here is where cash, if he can command it, will prove of inestimable advantage. He can buy cheaper from the big grocer in his own town; he can buy cheaper abroad. He should aim, as soon as possible, to put the buying end of his business on a strictly cash basis. He does not need to carry a large stock, and a careful eye to demand will save him from stocking up unnecessarily with slow moving lines.

Here is where the maintenance of good feeling betwixt himself and his fellow merchant on Main Street proves advantageous very often. The big grocer often finds himself overstocked with a certain line, which he is anxious to reduce. At such junctures the little grocer can frequently buy to advantage. It is worth while to maintain that good feeling which will prompt the Main Street man to call up 1999 Riverside over the phone and put him wise to a snap in canned goods, or something equally a bargain.

Losses Through Poor Pays.

But if buying carefully means much, so does selling carefully. The corner grocer suffers far more from bad credits than does the Main Street man. The latther can reject a great deal of suspicious business; but the former, as a rule, has often a harrowing experience with long credits and slow pays.

The grocer should educate his customers to the practice of making monthly settlements. He should keep his books carefully; and should render monthly accounts.

Bad bookkeeping is the bane of many businesses on the side streets. Not infreuently books are kept in such shape that collection of accounts by process of law is actually impossible. That such slipshod methods are the death of business goes without saying. The first thing for a business man is to be businesslike.

Hence, he must keep careful accounts, render them regularly, and be watchful of those to whom he extends credit. As long as he does business on the credit basis he is bound to lose money. But care will reduce this loss to a minimum.

If there is a grocers' association or a merchants' association in his town with a "credit list" of slow pay people he should join.

FIRMS IN THE FISH MERGER.

What the Company Proposes to do—The Capitalization, Etc.

Montreal, May 12.—Four eastern concerns and a Montreal house, with a Toronto branch, are in the new merger recently incorporated, as the Maritime Fish Corporation, Ltd., with an authorized capital of $1,000,000. They are: The Whitman Fish Co., Canso; The Canso Cold Storage Co., Short & Ellis, Digby; Howard Anderson, Digby; A. H. Brittain & Co., Montreal and Toronto.

The Whitman Fish Company's business includes smoke houses, canning and oil factories, and modern accommodation for fresh and frozen fish; The Canso Cold Storage Co. was organized six years ago, and owns a plant with a capacity of 10,000 barrels; Short & Ellis, formerly managed by H. B. Short, and Howard Anderson, both of Digby, did a business in smoked finnan haddies, while A. H. Brittain & Co. are known as selling agents for Atlantic fish houses, and as brokers.

Objects of the concern as stated by them are, "to carry on business in Canada and elsewhere as producers and dealers in fresh, smoked and canned fish, from the Atlantic ocean; to operate cold storage plants, curing and canning factories, and to produce, buy, and sell bait and other merchandise commonly used by fishermen."

Authorized issue of bonds is $250,000; 7 per cent. preferred stock, $500,000; common stock, $500,000. Actually issued: bonds, $125,000; 7 per cent. preferred stock, $100,000; common stock, $300,000.

The head office will be in Montreal, with branches at Canso, Halifax, Digby and Toronto.

It is the intention of the concern to retain the services of the majority of those identified with the firms entering into the merger.

Directors are: Lt.-Col. C. A. Smart, of the Smart Bag Co.; Jas. W. Pyke, of the Phoenix Bridge & Iron Works; C. E. Archibald, of the Terminal Warehouse & Cartage Co.; A. H. Brittain, C. W. Maclean, H. B. Short, E. C. Whitman, L. E. Geoffrion of L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., and W. B. Converse, of National Securities Limited.

Attention will be given by the new concern to bait and to waste material. They claim that fishermen have constant trouble in securing a steady bait supply, which hampers them in their fishing.

A. H. BRITTAIN, MONTREAL,
Who was Instrumental in Bringing About the Fish Company Merger.

The merger proposes to utilize their freezing and storage plants at Digby and Canso to get over this difficulty as far as is possible. From waste material glue, fish oils and a fertilizer will be secured through the instalation of a factory and a refining plant to be operated for the stated purpose of economizing and earning along these lines.

A. H. Brittain, Montreal, is chiefly responsible for the amalgamation of the various companies. Some five years ago he opened a brokerage office in Montreal, which he has conducted since, acting as selling agent for different fish concerns and doing a brokerage business. Mr. Brittain will be sales manager for the new corporation.

SMYRNA FIG CROP ALL SOLD.

Writing from Smyrna, Turkey, E. L. Harris says that the average crop of Smyrna figs amounts to about 25,000 tons, and this quantity was exported in the 1908-9 season to nearly all parts of the world, the home consumption being insignificant.

"Prices were $4.50 to $7.50 per cwt., f.o.b., for layer figs, actual tare. The 1909-10 crop amounted to about 22,000 tons, contrary to previous estimates. The reasons that prices during the season ruled high and steadily advanced were the weakness of the crop, the small stocks in consuming markets, and the large contracts for goods to be shipped. At the end of March, 1910, not a fig can be found either in Smyrna or in the interior."

WHAT DOMINION CHARTER WILL DO.

Ottawa, May 11.—At the last meeting of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association addresses were given by E. M. Trowern, Toronto, and Mr. Watson, Montreal, on the effect of the recent granting of a Dominion charter to the Retail Merchants' Association. They expect that it will greatly add to the influence and strength of that body and place all trade on a better basis.

A. G. Johnson, Duncan Bell, F. W. Forde and William York, delegates to the recent wholesale grocers' convention at Toronto, presented their reports.

Arrangements for the grocers' picnic on Civic holiday are progressing. The place has not yet been decided upon but it will be soon. A. G. Johnson, the new president of the association, occupied the chair.

TRADE NOTES.

E. A. Gross, Surrey, N.B., has sold to W. A. Beatty.

Jno. Macnab, a general merchant in Claremont, Ont., for many years, died recently. He was 74 years of age.

The Guelph, Ont., Clerks' Association have now about 200 members in good standing and practically all of them show enthusiasm in the educational work they wish to accomplish. During July and August the Thursday half-holiday will again be in vogue. This question was recently taken up by the clerks.

Sixteen apiary inspectors are being sent through Ontario by the department of agriculture for the purpose of inspecting all beehives, in order to ascertain if there has been any foul breeding during the year. This action is taken under the foul brood act, and is for the purpose of preventing the sale of impure honey.

Cowen & Hall, grocers, Saskatoon, Sask., have been working a novel advertising idea which works in a double capacity as both an ad. and in keeping the windows cool, clear and free from flies and dust. It is a water connection all across the top of the window inside, which when turned on causes a continual stream to flow down the glass, all the way across, and yet the glass is transparent as usual.

POINTERS—

Molasses—Down 2c.

Tarragona Almonds—Short crop and ½c higher.

Ginger—Very firm.

Evaporated Apples—Primary market ½c higher.

Montreal, May 12, 1910.

This week has been marked by a large increase in total trade locally, and few are the lines which have not had their share. Jobbers report a busy week, with no signs of a falling off. Collections are much improved, and country buyers are plentiful.

As yet the weather is almost too cool to expect such a condition of affairs, but it is here, nevertheless.

The retailer who waits for sugar to go down before stocking up is going to be badly left, if signs speak truthfully. Seemingly only a slight excuse will be necessary for refiners to advance prices still farther. The present high and firm state of the raw article will fully warrant it.

Molasses receipts have been large enough to weaken prices 2c in both fancy and choice.

Reports from France show that the almond crop there will be very short, only about quarter what it was last year. On the other hand Ivica and the Balearic Islands report no damage to crops and that this year's will be about the largest in their history. It remains to be seen how far these reports will act on the present market conditions.

Sugar.—Sugar continues high and firm, with far more likelihood of a further increase than a decline. In fact such an advance seemed certain until New York refiners lowered their prices. This had a deterrent influence on local refiners, but with the present high prices of raw there seems to be a good chance for the advance to take place in spite of this..

Tea.—The new season market opened in Japan on the 6th. According to recent cable advices the quality of the new crop is much the same as last year. The output is as yet naturally small, and for early picked teas is slightly higher than last year's opening prices, but in some instances quotations have been made on the same basis as last year.

The future course of the market for later teas, those which interest the Canadian trade, is yet to be determined.

Evaporated Apples.—The evaporated apple situation has been greatly strengthened by some large German buying. In the primary market the price is ½c higher with a fairly brisk demand as against the slow market at the old price. What has stimulated the German trade is so far unknown to local dealers, but the trade is a very welcome one.

Nuts—Recent dispatches from France say that fully three-fourths of the almond crop has been destroyed by frost, and as a result the crop there will amount to only from 10,000 to 15,000 bags. If this is true in its entirety, it of course will mean very high prices for this line. Already the market has shown the effect by jumping ½c, and further dispatches are awaited with decided interest. Walnuts are scarce, and good lots particularly are hard to find.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—The recent advance in canned fruits and vegetables seems to have made trade all the more lively in those lines, and from present indications the demand seems likely to almost eat up present supplies. If this state of things continues there will probably be a further advance in certain lines.

Lobsters show a decided falling off in demand, due to the large quantities of fresh lobsters now on the market.

TORONTO—"Salmon is mighty good property these days, especially if it is good quality," said a wholesaler this week in referring to the canned goods market which at present is very strong. Several conditions combine for this result. The supply is limited and furthermore this is the season of the short run in the rivers. Increased prices and a strong market have been the results making good salmon a valuable article on the grocer's shelves. Canned goods all along the line are firm. Vegetables may be pointed out in this respect. Corn, peas, tomatoes, etc., are moving rapidly before a good demand. Canned fruits are strengthening too. Home preseryes have become exhausted and the grocer's fruits in glass jars are now being attacked. With these nearing their finish the canned fruits will become prominent. The market in canned goods is encouraging.

POINTERS—

Canned Fruit—Strong.
Sugar—Very firm.
Nuts—Advanced.
Raisins—Firm.

Toronto, May 12, 1910.

Raw sugar recently reached a record figure but speculation was temporarily arrested by the death of King Edward VII. Since them the price has returned to the former quotation. The European market is strong and reports from New York convey similar intelligence. An advance is generally expected at any time.

A continued drought threatening the vines in Valencia, Spain, has strengthened prices of raisins slightly. The nut market is uniformly firm. Almonds were strengthened as the result of the report of three-quarters of the crop in France being destroyed by frost. The prices in Spain have been advanced and filberts to keep in line are also firmer. Lured by the movement in rubber the natives in Brazil have allowed their attention to be distracted from the nut crop and some apprehension is felt in New York as to how much of the crop will be gathered. Evaporated apples have taken on a firmer tone by reason of recent exports to Germany and Holland.

Sugar—Sugar is referred to on the street as a safe holding. The market is strong and is ripe for an increase at any time. "I'm surprised that it has not yet occurred," stated one wholesaler. The demand is not a feature at present and some do not expect to see an increase until the opening of the season when prices go soaring. All are a unit, however, in stating that the situation is uncertain. "Prices may go up this week or it may be three or four" was one opinion expressed.

Dried Fruits—A firm movement has been recently noted in several lines of dried fruits. There is a fair demand for apricots with the prices slightly advanced. Prunes have a stronger tone. While raisins have not been disturbed yet, the following letter from Spain may be significant: "The vines are just beginning to bud, and though nothing uncertain can be said for the future yet, we may mention that there is prevalent throughout the raisin country a very severe drought ever since last autumn, which if it continues much longer, is sure to affect considerably the size of the next crop."

Nuts—With the almond crop in France reported to be damaged by frost to the extent that three-quarters of it is lost, the price of Spanish almonds has been put up and filberts have been similarly affected apparently in sympathy. The market is noticeably stronger and shelled almonds have been advanced. The situation regarding Brazils is somewhat peculiar. Reports state that England's recent boom in rubber has directed attention in Brazil to raw rubber and it is feared the nuts will not be collected. There is no idea what crop will be obtained and this condition has given Brazils a firmer tone. The market, throughout, is stronger than usual.

Winnipeg, May 12, 1910.

The entire west is favored at present with excellent weather and those engaged in all lines of business are enthusiastic over promising conditions of trade. If there ever was a buoyant feeling in the west, it is certain that it is more widespread this spring than ever before. In years gone past optimism was known to prevail in a few localized centres, but before it grew to encompass the whole territory a tide of depression would make its presence felt. Perhaps this year in a manner never felt before, has the whole west as an entirety been caught up in a grand advance forward. Public works are clamoring for labor, municipalities are enticing manufacturers, wholesalers are pressing producers for goods, and merchants are clearing up wholesalers' stocks.

The increase in the number of retailers is astonishing, and almost daily opening orders are being delivered from Winnipeg and other wholesale centres. The agricultural centres are rapidly filling up and although farmers do not visit the merchant often, he carries away a substantial supply when he does call. Travelers report that merchants everywhere are turning over stocks rapidly and bumper orders are easily secured.

The long expected advance on the general line of goods is taking place and the quotations this week on such goods as are advancing are only transitory. Values are bound to go still higher. The collection departments report a revival, but later in the year cash will circulate more freely.

Sugar.—The market is up 5 cents and although this line is not as strong as some others it is believed sugar will be held moderately firm. Latest reports from New York are that prices are steady. There is room for more stock in the west, but that is a matter of transportation.

Foreign Dried Fruits.—In these lines is the trade pressure felt most heavily. Raisins are getting low in wholesale stocks and values though not advanced are held strongly. There has been a recent heavy demand for pears, peaches and apricots for camp supplies, and prunes have been going out exceptionally well. The prune market has been advanced ¼ of a cent and may go higher soon. Wholesalers are encouraged with favorable reports from prune crop centres, and there will be a great scarcity before 1910 stuff comes on the market.

Nuts.—The shelled nuts market is perhaps the feature of the week. When it is remembered that prices are already much higher than those of last year, the advance of 3 cents a pound at this time is significant. The peanut market is also up, only the lowest grades going at 13 cents.

One wholesale house bought at the $1.50 mark recently, but this is exceptionally low. Evaporated Apples.—A slight break in an extended dull market is reported and some goods are going out at 8 cents to-day. The future is uncertain.

Butter.—No. 1 creamery is about the 41 cent mark to the retailer. Dairy is firm from 30 to 35 cents. The present high butter market is unprecedented in the west except on rare occasions of isolation. Some retailers are selling at cost to ease the consumer's situation.

Eggs.—Supplies are abundant. Prices are 18 cents to merchants and shipments leave Winnipeg almost daily for points west.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, May 12, 1910.

Canned peas are up to $1.35, an increase of five cents. This advance has long been expected for early Junes.

That is about the only increase, though there are one or two minor changes. Hams are quoted at 22½ cents for two brands, while bacon is at 28½ and 29 cents.

Eggs run at 28 cents for general stock and 30 cents for selected.

Californian strawberries have come on the market last week in large quantities and in good quality. At the first part of the week they jobbed at $2.50 per crate of fifteen boxes, and a better quality brought a little higher price, making a retail figure of 20 cents in the first instance and 25 in the second. With the warm weather, it is expected that the berries from the south will be in earlier this year.

Canned fruits and vegetabels of all kinds have advanced and the quotations are from 2½ to 5 cents higher. Refined sugars advanced 10 cents per hundred pounds on Wednesday last. Lard is firmer.

The recurrence of cold weather has retarded planting to a great extent and sales of seeds have been lighter of late.

R. A. Dutton, grocer, Peterboro, Ont., has sold his business to Jas. Fanning and intends opening a store in Toronto near High Park.

A despatch from Brooklyn, N.Y., refers to a young retailer there who is working the store combination idea. He recently bought up five stores in an exclusive section of the city, two of them having a long history. Out of the five, two will be closed as being unnecessary, following the trust idea of economy. The young magnate explains his idea as follows: "In making this move I have been actuated by the knowledge that I can buy in larger quantities and give my customers better value for less money than before. I love the business and as far as hard work is concerned the more I get of it the better it suits me. These three stores are very near each other, and I can keep in touch with them all without any trouble."

California Canners to Have Selling Agreement

With a View to Making Termsof Sale Uniform—The Liabilities Accepted by the Seller and His Guarantee Against Swells —Goods Sold to Conform With Pure Food Laws.

San Francisco, May 10.—The Canners League of California have adopted a Selling Agreement for this season's use with the idea of making the terms of sale of canned goods uniform. The executive committee of the league decided not to incorporate an arbitration clause in the contract. The contract is as follows:—

Terms: Cash, less 1½ per cent, payable in New York, Chicago or San Francisco Exchange on presentation of invoice with documents attached.

Conditions: The prices specified are for goods "free on board" at factory. On account of shipments from different factories, the sellers reserve the right of initial routeing. Goods are at risk of buyer from and after shipment, although consigned to seller's order.

Seller shall not be liable for short, late or non-delivery of goods resulting from damage to crop, strikes, fire, flood, unavoidable casualties or other circumstances beyond its control, in which event it is mutually agreed that deliveries are to be pro-rated to all buyers without discrimination from suitable stock remaining in sellers' possession.

Goods to be shipped at seller's discretion as soon as practicable after packing.

Fruits remaining unshipped on December 31 following the date of this contract shall be billed on that date. Peas unshipped to be billed and paid for not later than July 1. Tomatoes unshipped to be billed and paid for not later than November 1. Asparagus unshipped to be billed and paid for not latter than August 1. Buyer agrees to pay said invoices on demand when attached to warehouse receipt, and seller agrees to store said goods and insure them against loss or damage by fire in selected insurance companies for buyer's account for 75 per cent. of invoice cost. Buyer to pay 1¼c per case per month for No. 1, No. 2½ and No. 3 sizes and 2c per case for No. 8 size to cover both storage and insurance, fractional months at full rate; charges to accrue from date of warehouse receipt. Seller may move and store said goods at buyer's expense in public warehouse if not ordered out by buyer prior to March 1 following date of sale.

Swells: All goods guaranteed against swells until July 1 of the year following that in which the goods were packed, but all claims must be made, and bill rendered for the same, prior to the date of aforesaid, and goods held subject to the order of the seller. At seller's option the goods may be returned by freight to California, and seller will then pay the original invoice prices for the goods with freight to original destination added. Claims other than swells must be presented within ten (10) days from the receipt of the goods.

Guarantee: Seller guarantees the goods covered by this contract to conform with the requirements of the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, except seller is relieved from any responsibility for misbranding when goods are not shipped under his labels.

This contract to be binding upon the seller must be confirmed in writing by the seller, who, however, shall not be responsible for the performance thereof, unless a copy, properly signed by the buyer is delivered to the seller within ten days of date thereof.

Sharp Decline in the Price of Butter Recorded

General Break in the High Quotations That Have Prevailed—Heavy Production of Eggs Throughout the Country — Provisions Firmer With Price of Hogs Increased—Market is Generally Strong.

The anticipated slump in the price of butter occurred during the past week, although it was a little later than expected. The break was experienced throughout the country and with production increasing a further decline is looked for.

With exceedingly heavy receipts of eggs, the market is a little easier, especially in the east. Toronto prices are steadier, however, and remain quite firm. The provision market is strong throughout, and indications point to a continued firmness. Hogs, live and dressed, are bringing higher prices.

Cheese has not yet become a feature. The new cheese is not bringing a heavy demand.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Trade is somewhat less this week in compound lards, owing to the recent advance, but in all other lines things are moving briskly. Country buyers are coming in quite freely, and city trade is better, owing probably somewhat to the continued chilly weather. Prices are unchanged.

Butter—Since last Saturday butter prices have been on the toboggan slide, going from 32c down to 27c for new milk creamery. Fresh dairy rolls are quoted at 25c.

This break is, of course, due to the large influx of new butter, and has been looked for any time during the past two weeks.

Receipts for the week are large, as compared with the same week last year, being 7,222 packages, as against 4,283.

Cheese — In the country cheese is slightly weaker, but not sufficiently so at present to affect local prices here. Demand for export is fair and improving, which should tone up the market somewhat.

Receipts for the week show a slight decrease over last year, being only 9,855 boxes, as against 11,036 boxes for the corresponding week.

Receipts for the week are 14,334 cases, as against only 10,700 for the same week last year.

TORONTO.

Provisions.—A feeling of strength has been given the provision market during the past few days by a general bracing of the market. The price of live hogs has gone up about ten cents and for dressed hogs the prices are higher. Quotations ranged from $12.25 to $12.75, with $12.50 the prevailing price. One firm is quoting from $13 to $13.50 a cwt. Lard compounds are easier. The market is strong with a growing steadiness in pork products. A slight increase in hams and backs has been felt during the week.

Butter.—The expected happened in the butter market during the past week. Business has been brisk. Wholesale houses state that they did not carry a pound from one day to the next owing to the heavy demand. Prices have not only declined but they are expected to drop still lower.

The arrival of the new butter which is of fine quality was expected to knock the prices from the strong position they have held. Authorities would not make a rough guess at the minimum price and at this stage it is difficult to tell where the line will be drawn.

Cheese.—Old cheese is moving along easily bringing from 13 to 13½ cents. The new make is being received, but not to any extent. It is quoted at 12½ to 12¾ cents.

Eggs.—Receipts of eggs continue heavy. From all parts of the country they are coming in, but the price has not yet begun to recede. It has rather stiffened and prices are slightly higher than those of a week ago. Large quantities are being put in cold storage at a rather high price. The prevailing price in the country is 18 cents. Local demand is steady.

TRADE NOTES.

A. W. Hart, Sydney, N.S., has been given the agency for the products of Herron, LeBlanc & Co., Montreal.

J. S. Fry, Chocolates, London, Eng., have opened a Montreal office at 27 St. Sacrament St. Joseph Perrault, formerly with D. Masson & Co., has been placed in charge.

A Vancouver, B.C., despatch states than an important deal has been completed whereby the Morrin-Thompson Co., in Phoenix, B.C., has purchased the business in that town of the Hunter-Kendrick Company. On May 15th it will take over the grocery and hardware business of the Hunter-Kendrick Company, and later will take over the dry goods business.

A despatch from Chatham, Ont., states that T. B. Escott & Co., wholesale grocers, London, Ont., are making preparations to open a branch in the former place. Negotiations with the Chatham council are now progressing regarding a railway spur to the proposed premises. Chatham claims to have more retail grocers per head than any other town of its size in Ontario.

WANT FRUIT OFF THE SIDEWALKS.

Woodstock Board of Health Take Action in This Matter.

Woodstock, Ont., May 12.—At the last meeting of the local Board of Health, the medical health officer brought forward and showed the dangers to health arising from fruit and vegetables being exposed for sale on the sidewalk in front of stores. The custom of placing out fruits, celery, lettuce and other eatables, whose only preparation before being eaten is a rinsing through cold water, was accountable for many cases of disease. This could readily be understood, when people thought of the number of animals which came in contact with such eatables, not to mention the flies, which fly straight from the filthiest places and alight on the fruit, carrying bacteria by the thousand and the germ-laden dust which is settling all the time. A by-law exists which prohibits this placing of merchandise on the streets, and the board decided to memorialize the city council, asking that the law be strictly enforced hereafter.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied by Sellers.

On Wednesday of last week there passed through Toronto over the C.P.R. two carloads of "2 in 1" shoe polish on route for Australia. This shipment will go forward by the Steamer "Rakai," sailing from Montreal May 15th, which is the first sailing of the recently subsidized line of ships sailing from that port. This shipment represents 1,540 gross (221,760 boxes), and The F. F. Dalley Co. have also shipped during the past year to Australia, 1,500 gross, (216,000 boxes), on Nov. 2nd last year, by the steamer "Montezuma" sailing from Montreal, and on June 8th last from New York 1,000 gross, (144,000 boxes). It speaks volumes for "2 in 1" Shoe Polish when this trade can be done in far off Australia against an almost prohibitive tariff and direct competition with the oldest and largest shoe polish manufacturers in the world. These goods are being shipped through the Imperial Export Co., of Toronto.

A. G. Snowdon has returned to Montreal after an extended trip west, in the interests of Rowat & Co. Snowdon & Ebbitt have been appointed agents for Rowat's specialties for Ontario, Quebec and the Northwest, and Mr. Snowdon, accompanied by John Fullerton, Glasgow, made a successful visit to wholesalers between Montreal and Victoria. Mr. Fullerton left for Scotland last Saturday.

A little girl whose father was a commercial traveler sat on the porch holding a kitten, and, creeping up close, her mother heard this: "Kitty," said the young miss, "I know you, an' I know your mamma, an' I know all your little brothers an' sisters, but I ain't ever seen your papa"—then after a brief pause—"I spec he must be a traveling man."

Ideal Egg Weighs About 1½ lbs. to the Dozen

How the Dealer Grades Eggs—The Condition of an Absolutely Fresh Egg—Evaporation of Water Occurs as it Grows Older —The Sign of a Dead Germ.

By Jno. A. Gunn.

In grading eggs, we divide them into a number of grades as follows:—

Selects, which consist of sound, good-sized, fresh, reasonably clean eggs. No. 1, sound, undersized, shrunken, stained eggs. No. 2, shrunken, dirty, stained, washed or salted eggs. No. 3, cracked, gallon eggs. No. 4, rots, total loss.

Now the ideal egg is one that weighs about one and a half pounds to the dozen. This is the standard size of export, and, generally speaking, meets all conditions.

The grades I have referred to are distinguished by candling. An expert takes an egg, and turning it can immediately tell the exact condition. An absolutely fresh egg, when held before the candle, is clear and only the dull outline of the yolk is visible; there is little or no air cell visible at the large end. Any egg other than that which is not absolutely fresh, shows a clear space at the large end. The air cell grows larger as the egg grows older; this is caused by the evaporation of the water content of the egg. If a dark spot is noticed, it is either a rot or a developing germ. A red spot is caused by a dead germ. A white streak in the shell shows that the shell is cracked.

Thus we grade our eggs, into the fresh, stale, cracked and rotten classes.

Chicago Classification.

It will be interesting and instructive to know how eggs are graded in such large centres as New York and Chicago, and I give you here the rules of the Chicago butter and egg board:

Eggs shall be classified and graded as "extras," "prime firsts," "firsts," "ordinary firsts," "seconds," "dirties" and "checks."

"Loss" as used in these rules shall comprise all rotten, broken (leaking), heavy spots, broken yolked, hatched (blood veined), and sour eggs. Very small, very dirty, cracked (not leaking), badly heated, light spots, badly shrunken, salted or frozen eggs shall be counted half loss in all grades excepting "seconds," "dirties" and "checks."

"Fresh gathered extras" shall be packed in new whitewood 30-dozen cases, unless otherwise specified, shall be free from small and dirty eggs and shall contain fresh, reasonably full, strong, sweet eggs, as follows:—February 15th to May 15th, 90 per cent.; May 15th to October 31st, 80 per cent.; November 1st to December 31st, 70 per cent.; and January 1st to February 15th, 80 per cent.

The balance may be defective in strength or fullness, but must be sweet. There may be a total average loss of one-half dozen per case, but if the loss exceeds this amount by not over 50 per cent. the eggs shall be good delivery upon allowance of excess.

Packing of "Prime Firsts.".

"Fresh gathered prime firsts" must be packed in new whitewood 30-dozen cases, unless otherwise specified, shall be reasonably clean, of good average size and shall contain fresh, reasonably full, strong, sweet eggs, as follows:—February 15th to May 15th, 85 per cent.; May 15th to October 31st, 65 per cent.; November 1st to December 31st, 50 per cent.; and January 1st to February 15th, 65 per cent.

The balance other than the loss may be defective in strength or fullness, but must be sweet. There may be a total average loss of one dozen per case, but if the loss exceeds this amount by not over 50 per cent. the eggs shall be good delivery upon allowance of the excess.

"Fresh gathered firsts" must be packed in new whitewood 30-dozen cases, unless otherwise specified, shall be reasonably clean, of good average size, and shall contain fresh, reasonably full, strong, sweet eggs as follows:—February 15th to May 15th, 70 per cent.; balance of the year, 45 per cent.

The balance other than the loss may be defective in strength or fullness, but must be sweet. There may be a total average loss of two dozen per case, but if the loss exceeds this amount by not over 50 per cent. the eggs shall be good delivery upon allowance of the excess.

"Fresh gathered ordinary firsts" shall consist of current receipts in any kind of cases as specified, they must contain the following percentage of fresh, reasonably full, sweet eggs:—February 15th to May 15th, 60 per cent.; balance of the year, 30 per cent.

The balance other than the loss may be defective in strength or fullness, but must be sweet. There may be a total average loss of four dozen per case, but if the loss exceeds this amount by not over 50 per cent. the eggs shall be good delivery upon allowance of the excess.

EXTRAVAGANCE THE CAUSE.

This Combined With Increase in Supply of Gold Produce High Living, Says Commission.

St. John, N.B., May 11.—A commission appointed by Massachusetts state to investigate the cost of living in St. John, Montreal, Yarmouth and other Canadian points, as compared with Boston and other New England cities, have submitted their report to the legislature. The commission finds that the increase in the world's gold supply and extravagance by individuals and the government is mainly responsible for the higher prices.

Trusts, tariff and labor unions are not held directly responsible, but it is admitted the tariff cuts off possible relief to the consumers by closing the cheapest source of food supply.

The commission recommends that the expediency of removing all duties on food products be considered when tariff is next revised. Vigilance with reference to trusts dealing in the necessities of life is advised.

In comparison with Canada the commissioners found meat and provisions ten per cent. higher in Boston than in Montreal, but on groceries Montreal is four per cent. higher.

Meat and provisions in Bangor are 13 per cent. higher than St. John but St. John pays eight per cent. more for groceries. Butter is three cents higher in Bangor than in St. John. For vegetables St. John is lower. The commission found an "excellent fish market" in St. John, but fresh fish prices were higher than in Boston. Bread was also cheaper in St. John.

Regarding reciprocity, the commission says: "The extension to Canada of reciprocity in the matter of manufactures is, in our belief, for the present out of the question. The forces now dominant in Canada would not listen to any proposition that would endanger her present industries, and there is no reason why they should."

Generally living costs about the same in both countries.

LOSSES WERE TOO HEAVY.

A report from Chilliwack, B.C., states the reason the Chilliwack Co-operative Assn. went out of business—as noted in last week's issue—was that it found retailing an unprofitable trade. Until a year ago the business paid a dividend of 9 p.c. to the shareholders. "Lately, however," says the despatch, "several losses were sustained both in the store and in the selling of farmers' products on the markets, These losses were never recovered."

HE LIKES THE CARTOONS.

Editor Canadian Grocer.—There is no doubt that the cartoons which you have been publishing in The Canadian Grocer for some months past, under the heading: "Things That Shouldn't Be." are being eagerly watched for, and carefully studied by, your many subscribers. They are gotten up exceedingly well, and all that have been published in your valuable paper so far, are the kind that strike home with much force. They are not only a great help to the grocers to work along scientific principles, but they are also a strong incentive to clerks and salesmen to take a lively interest and to put forth much care in the performing of their duties.

LOOK ASKANCE AT MAIL ORDER STORES.

St. Louis Jobbers Declare Themselves to be With Legitimate Retailers Only.

St. Louis, Mo., May 12.—Wholesale grocers of this city have expressed their refusals to furnish anything to mail order houses, stating that they prefer to co-operate with retailers in forming opposition to these big concerns. Referring to the mail order people, a member of F. Goebel & Sons, states that they are willing and ready to assist retailers in "your efforts to free the grocery trade from these leeches." Continuing he states: "We have never sold to any mail order house and will not do so in the future. We will render any assistance possible to help advocating co-operation between the jobbers and retailers."

H. W. Gildehaus & Co. referring to the same question said: "We do not supply mail order houses. We confine our efforts to legitimate retail grocers, refusing to sell to consumers, restaurants, laundries, hotels, department stores and mail order houses."

The Krenning Grocer Company were brief in their assertion but to the point. "We don't and will not sell mail order houses," they said.

The Wulfing Grocer Co. said: "We wish to state that it would not be to our interests to sell to mail order concerns. We have never catered for their trade, and, in several instances, where orders came to us unsolicited, we have turned them down."

Three other concerns are equally united in their methods of dealing with mail order houses.

ADVERTISING RAISINS.

Large California growers assisted by railway companies have contributed $20,000 to advertise all varieties of California raisins with a view to increasing the consumption. Philadelphia was selected as the city in which to inaugurate the campaign and Saturday, April 30th, was Raisin Day among retailers. One feature of the advertising will be new ways of preparing raisins and arguments as to their medicinal value. The campaign was undertaken in desperation as the result of dull and weak markets throughout the country.

Flour Market Affected by the Wheat Situation

Last Year's Heavy Crop and the Splendid Weather up to Present Pointing to Another Bountiful Harvest Has Not Tended to Boost Wheat Market or Sustain Prices of Flour—Cereals in Same Boat.

A Government report recently issued is authority for the statement that in 1909, Canada produced 166,752,540 bushels of wheat in comparison to 111,067,853 bushels during the previous year. The occupied fifth position in the list of the world's producers following Russia, United States, France and British India. Last year there were nearly half a billion bushels more wheat produced than in 1908. The bulletin also states that there were 749,707 acres sown in the fall of 1909. This area is 113 per cent. of that harvested in 1909. The condition on April 1st, was 92 per cent., 100 per cent. denoting a standard crop. The present situation is therefore resultant upon the heavy crop of last year and the present indications point to even a heavier crop this year.

The market is showing the effects of a rather depressive influence. Wheat that has been held is being turned into the market with the expectation of a bumper crop. Present indications are favorable.

The result has been to make the flour market uncertain, and as one authority stated, "It is rather sluggish just at present."

A NEW MILLING CONCERN.

Montreal, May 12. — Lt.-Col. A. E. Labelle, until recently local manager of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., and Thomas Williamson, its secretary, have, with a few other capitalists organized a new milling concern, which will be known as the St. Lawrence Milling Co.

Among those interested locally in the new firm is G. A. Grier, of G. A. Grier & Son, lumber merchants. It is rumored that English capital is backing the enterprise.

Experience !

You remember in the old days there was a system of apprenticeship usually about four years' grinding to learn a business.

After serving this term one was supposed to be quite proficient. In time one became an expert in a chosen field—if one stayed with the work.

Experience made one such.

Now, it's fully twenty-five years since we began making Bordeaux Chocolates. In the first few years we learned all they could teach us about them.

But we were not satisfied. We did not feel we had attained perfection. We kept on plugging.

Eventually we considered we had reached highest attainable perfection.

Everyone complimented our quality by imitating it.

So we registered our brand—for your protection—the public's—our own.

That perfect confection, the result of our experimenting, our experience, has since been known, and is now famous as the

and it's an all-the-time winner.

Purity
A Big Five Roses Feature

WHY the Food Laws, Brother Grocer?

To compel Purity in foodstuffs.

And what is Purity in Flour?

Nothing but the floury heart of the sun-ripened Manitoba wheat berry, nothing added save skill and experience, nothing subtracted save dirt and impurities.

Purity means the absence of all woody particles, the fibre, indigestible and dark-colored bran coat, the wheat skin, the fuzz and whiskers.

It means no trace of dirt, dust or imperfection; no grit, no foreign matter.

No specks or stains to vex the soul of the fastidious housewife, no complaints over your counter.

It means expert wheat buyers to reject off-grade stuff; bin-burnt, rusted wheat; soft wheat; smutty wheat, and a thousand other kinds.

It means expert shippers, experienced millers, modern milling science and methods; means automatic milling, hand-proof, germ-proof; it means clean packing, clean packages; plant cleanliness, hygienic conditions.

It means a water-power plant like the Keewatin mills, out in the country air away from the belching smoke-stacks of the industrial centres.

It means FIVE ROSES, don't you see?

Long before the Pure Food Legislation was talked about, Brother Grocer, we had our own code of purity, stricter than any law.

We have seen other mills, American and Canadian; we have studied their surroundings, their methods, their sanitary regulations; and we say in all sincerity: there is no cleaner, more hygienic plant in all the milling world than the Keewatin mills, no more ideal location anywhere.

You tell your customer that there is no sweeter, purer flour made than FIVE ROSES—you know you speak truly, you know it is so.

Think of the effect of the words: "Madam, your hands are first to touch FIVE ROSES. Your own earnestness must carry conviction, must compel her order and re-order. You command a bigger price because of higher value.

When her family health is at stake for a few cents' difference, will she hesitate?

When the health of your trade is at stake, Brother Grocer, will YOU hesitate?

Green Fruits.—The new Mediterranean fruit which arrived on the S. S. Fremona was auctioned off Wednesday, and brought good prices. The grade is pronounced good for first arrivals.

Vegetables.—Both wax and green beans are coming on the market freely, and are bringing $5.50 per large basket. Some very fine celery has been received, put up in large crates, selling at $6.50 to $7. Recent arrovals of new cabbages and potatoes have reduced prices in those lines, and trade in them is good. There seems to be somewhat of a general improvement in most lines.

Fish.—Haddock is keeping scarce, with a little sign of improvement. River fish are still plentiful. B. C. salmon is now coming through at a high figure and Gaspe are expected soon. There is hardly any trade in pickled, salt or prepared fish. Brook trout are coming in fairly well at high prices. Trade in general is more satisfactory and demand on the increase.

Green Fruits.—A steady demand for fruit of all kinds is giving the market a healthy tone. The production in most instances is only moderate with the result that prices are maintained at a strong figure. There is still a fair market for apples although they are practically done. Northern spies are clearing out at from $3.50 to $5 a bbl. There is a fair demand for grape fruit. Strawberries are market favorites. There is continued strong demand. The North Carolina variety is selling at from 14c to 18c a box with 16 and 17 cents prevailing. Virginia berries are due. Strawberries have given no trouble this spring and move easily. The first cherries have been opened on the local market. They are of extra fine quality and demand $3.50 a box.

Oranges are particularly strong. According to one authority the navels may be expected to clean out within the next two weeks and at present they are selling well with the demand strong and prices inclined to an increase. The market has not been over-supplied and quotations have been healthy.

The same may be said of lemons. The "Fremona" was expected at Montreal this week with 27,000 packages of oranges and lemons. There is some speculation as to what effect this supply will have on the market. With warmer weather lemons are expected to become even firmer than at present.

Vegetables.—Tomatoes are presenting a strong front to the market and the slight increase that was noticed during the past week is expected to reach a higher figure in the near future. The demand is particularly good and there has been no possibility of overstocking the market. Other new vegetables, for the most part, are a little easier. Business is brisk, however, the public taste calling for the delicacies of the season, even though they have to be imported. The easier prices for most of the articles were generally expected. New potatoes are inclined to be slow although the price is somewhat easier. The general market is bright and snappy.

FRUIT NOTES.

A report from Koshkonong, Mo., states that there is bumper crops of Elberta peaches now on the trees. They escaped damage from the weather, and are in good shape.

California cherries sold at high prices in New York this week. Owing to the demand and small supply prices ranged from $7.75 to $9 a box.

According to a report from Florida, grape fruit are about all shipped. It says, "We think the trade who purchase grape fruit now will find it valuable property."

While North Carolina strawberries are still reaching the Canadian market, first arrivals from Virginia point to the fact that the supply is coming from a still more northerly point. Home-grown berries will soon be offered on this side of the border if the warm weather continues.

Preparing the Coffee Bean for Export Trade

How the Different Sized Beans are Separated — Sorting the Grades According to Quality—This was Formerly Done by Hand—Season for the Ripening of the Coffee Crop.

By D. Williams.

Kingston, Jamaica, May 11.—The Island of Jamaica is a large producer of coffee, and upon the sloping sides of its high hills and fertile valleys are extensive plantations of the coffee tree. Probably few people, however, who sell and who enjoy the fragrant beverage have any idea of the amount of labor connected with it after it leaves the tree until it is ready for the coffee pot.

The coffee crop begins to ripen about the first of September and continues till December, but the time varies in different localities. After the pods are picked, they are thrown into water and run through a machine called a pulper, which separates the bean from the pod and also removes the rough outer husk from the bean. This is usually done on the estate where the coffee is grown, after which it is sacked and sold to the dealers or coffee mill owners. Of those mills the largest in Jamaica is the one recently erected by Lascelles de Merchado & Co., in Kingston. This mill is being fitted with modern and up-to-date machinery.

The sacks of crude coffee beans after they arrive at the mill are emptied upon a clean, hard floor under a large suction pipe. This draws the beans up and in turn empties them into a hopper while the strong current of air drives off any dust or dirt that may have adhered to them. They now pass through a huge revolving cylinder heated by hot air supplied by a centrifugal fan where they are thoroughly dried and passed on to another machine that removes the two remaining hulls from the bean.

The hulls or refuse from the coffee bean are driven by a fan down a tube to the furnace room where it is used as fuel under the boilers that supply the mill and enjoins with steam. The now thoroughly cleaned beans are carried by an elevator up to the second flat to an ingeniously contrived and elaborate machine that separates the different sizes and qualities of the beans each passing by a separate tube to its respective receptacle. The larger and better quality is still picked over by hand, a number of girls being employed to separate the large long bean from the shorter one.

The work of separating and sorting the different grades and sizes of coffee beans was formerly nearly all done by girls and women picking them over, but this will to a great extent be done away with in this mill, their improved machinery doing much of the work and doing it better than by the former process.

After the beans have been sorted, some of the product is sacked and in that condition exported to the various foreign markets. Large quantities, however, before shipment are put through an automatic roaster, a contrivance in the shape of a furnace that gives the beans just heat enough to thoroughly do the work without at any time over doing it.

TRAVELER'S NARROW ESCAPE.

Was Sleeping on Third Floor of Burning Hotel—Need of Better Protection.

Brockville, Ont., May 11.—Capt. H. W. Lumb, traveler for S. H. Ewing & Sons, Montreal, whose home is in Brockville, was one of those who had a narrow escape in the recent Cornwall hotel fire. When he arrived home his hands were covered with bandages and his usual natty attire was replaced by misfits.

He tells a graphic story of the holocaust which serves to show the great need of better protection from fire for the men who make the road and hotels their home for the greater part of every week.

Capt. Lumb had arrived in Cornwall the evening of the fire, working home for the week-end and made his headquarters at the Rossmore House for the night, being allotted a room on the third storey. Some time during the early morning he was awakened by a smothering sensation and was horrified to find the room filled with smoke. Though breathing under great difficulties he managed to find his way to the door carrying his grip containing money and valuables. Flames seemed to have enveloped the whole building and cries for help were coming from all directions.

A lady occupying a room convenient to Capt. Lumb's was in dire distress. Passing out into the stifling hall he implored her to accompany him to the nearest window. She halted and the next moment the flames had enveloped her. By this time the fire was dangerously near Capt. Lumb. Upon reaching the nearest window he located the rope fire-escape tied in a bag. The rope was a tangled mess and Capt. Lumb had almost given up hope of straightening it out. After a great deal of tugging he finally got a portion of it into shape for use and forcing the double sash on the window he slid down as far as it reached, burning his hands terribly. The escape fell short of the ground about twenty-five feet which he was forced to jump. Fortunately he escaped with a slight shaking up, suffering no fracture of his limbs.

Upon reaching the ground in his night clothes he was hurried to a place of shelter across the street where every attention was given him, including suitable clothing which he wore home. As to the details of the fire generally he was not in a position to discuss, further than to say that he considered it a very badly handled affair on the part of the brigade. The thought of the unfortunate woman whom he tried to save completely unnerved him.

Capt. Lumb lost his clothing, also the grip which he carried to the window, leaving it there in the excitement of the moment. It contained over $100 in money, his watch, chain, rings and other valuables.

SPAIN WANTS TREATY WITH CANADA.

During the season of 1909-10, says Robt. Frazer, writing from Valencia, Spain, exports of Valencia raisins to Canada amounted to 82,000 hundredweight. This was 13,900 hundredweight more than during the season of 1908-09. Regarding this trade with Canada he says:

"The steady increase of Valencia raisin exports to Canada and the great future possibilities of the Canadian market are now centreing the attention and energies of farmers and export associations on the prospects of obtaining more favorable tariff conditions from Canada. The fruit region is being canvassed to this end and is asking for a commercial treaty or other arrangement with Canada on lines placing Valencia raisins on the same tariff footing as is accorded French dried fruits in the Franco-Canadian treaty. The Spanish Ministry of State has been petitioned to this effect, and it is pointed out that as Spain enjoys precisely the same commercial relations as France both with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada she is entitled to the benefit of the concessions accorded to French dried fruits under the Franco-Canadian commercial convention, which went into effect on February 1."

The GROCER'S Big Spring Number

¶ Every Dealer in Canada will take an unusual interest in THE GROCER'S BIG SPRING NUMBER, to be issued May 27th. There are few of them who will not make money by reading and studying it closely. There are few of them who will not keep it for reference for a considerable time.

¶ In the Spring Number we will get right down to facts and figures in showing retailers how they may improve their methods of buying, stock-keeping, handling credits, store arrangement, assorting, display, advertising, stopping leaks, cost accounting, delivery, salesmanship, etc.

¶ The Spring Number will be given over almost entirely to "Scientific Methods of Retailing." Each one of the series of articles coming under this heading will be founded on definite information gathered first-hand from the best sources.

Olsen & Kleppe Sardines

Quality Sardines that are packed "on the square." The "Albatross" brand for those who prefer small fish—the "Ambrosia" (equally as fine) for those who want fish a trifle larger. Packed in Norway, and packed with scrupulous care, in pure Olive Oil.

Griffin & Skelley Fruits

Whether dried or canned, the "Griffin" brand of fruits is always the same high quality—the natural flavor is never wanting. Raisins, seeded or seedless, White and Green Asparagus, Prunes. The "Griffin" Brand assures that absolute satisfaction co-incident with being "always on the square."

IF the line hangs plumb, then go ahead and lay the foundations of business—if the spirit level rests fairly and squarely in the centre—then go ahead. If each timber in your structure dove-tails and is "on the square," then, too, go ahead.

Be "on the square" with "quality." Do not deceive yourself if the line hangs out of plumb, the spirit level be out of centre or the timbers fail to dove-tail.

The Quickest Trip from Plantation to Purchaser

There is a fresh picking of "SALADA" every week and all the year round. The climate of Ceylon makes this possible. Ten weeks after being gathered it reaches you. It is packed in lead packages to ensure uniform goodness.

It is protected every step of the way from plantation to purchaser. Bulk Tea grows old and stale rapidly—being unprotected, it cannot escape deterioration. It soon loses freshness.

We have always advocated the supreme importance of fresh tea—of buying in small quantities and buying often. It does not pay a grocer to buy heavily and keep tea in stock so that it reaches the consumer in impaired condition.

We back up our belief in the paramount importance of fresh tea by unconditionally guaranteeing to refund the full purchase price—to pay the freight both ways—to any merchant who has any "SALADA" in stock that is over six months old.

We do our utmost to have "SALADA" reach the consumer in all its garden freshness and fine flavor. We ask your co-operation in our efforts to serve the public with fresh tea.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

London Grocer Fined for Leaving Gum Slot Machine Outside on Sunday—Victoria Merchant Gives Method For Cutting down Cost—Keeping Flies From The Window—Relation of Price Cutting to Failure—Requisites of the Window Trimmer.

Will Hurt Smaller Merchant.

Broadview, Sask., May 18.—A. R. Colquhoun & Son, in referring to the resolution, submitted by the Retail Merchants' Association to the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, that "it is not in the best interests of the grocery trade that some few retail houses should have the right to purchase in large quantities direct from the manufacturer and that this privilege be not allowed to all," have the same opinion as the merchants.

"This condition does not immediately exist around this district," they say, "but here and there at some points, goods are purchased direct from the manufacturers, which eventually through time, will certainly hurt the smaller merchant. What we mean, is that one or two of the larger merchants club together and bring in the goods direct and divide them."

Broke Lord's Day Act.

London, Ont., May 19.—A decision of some importance was given by the Police Magistrate on Tuesday of this week in the case of Hiram English, grocer. Mr. English was charged with breach of the Lord's Day Act by reason of the fact that a gum slot machine has been hanging outside his place of business seven days a week. The defendant submitted that the machine was actually owned by another concern, and that he himself had no way of locking or unlocking it, although the owners locked it on Sundays last year. He admitted receiving a percentage of the profits, however, and the magistrate held him to be responsible.

"I'll have it removed if I am responsible," decided Mr. English, who had to pay $2 costs.

Cutting Down the Cost.

Victoria, B.C., May 19.—"One of two things must be done by every merchant who expects to continue to stay on top of the business earth," remarked a retailer the other day. "He must either add a bigger per cent. of profit to cover the increased cost of doing business or he must devise some way to cut down the cost of doing business."

One of the heavy expenses of doing business is the cost of delivery of goods.

He suggested co-operation in delivery as a means to cut down that expense. Instead of 20 merchants running 20 delivery wagons he would suggest to hand the work over to one concern. Either that or run the delivery department to a system having specified hours arranged.

Keeping the store open at night was also a useless waste of selling cost which might as well be avoided, if the merchants simply pulled together.

"Where the items in the cost of doing business pay, keep them," he said. "But when they can be pared down without injury, merchants should work together and see that they are properly pared."

To Keep Flies From Windows.

Smith's Falls, Ont., May 19.—Now that the summer season is approaching, the retail dealer will have his troubles combating the fly nuisance.

A local grocer, Wm. Hyndman, has a simple device to keep them from the window. He built a large wire screen to the ceiling separating the entire window from the store. At the bottom he arranged sliding doors to permit of easy access to the goods placed on display. This proved an effectual scheme and now he has no more trouble with flies getting into the window and creating an unfavorable impression.

During the winter months, Mr. Hyndman uses a double window, which he places at the bottom of his display window to prevent the gathering of frost. The glass is now always transparent.

Church Workers Assisting Him.

Wheatley, Ont., May 19.—The novel idea of enlisting the aid of the community's church workers for purposes of business boosting has been evolved by M. H. Chamberlain, a local shoe merchant.

Mr. Chamberlain's idea should be of interest to merchants throughout the length and breadth of the land who have submitted more or less gracefully to the exactions of subscription hunting and prize-seeking church societies and charities.

Mr. Chamberlain is offering a $10 in gold prize to the Ladies' Aid Society in his village which digs up the largest amount of feminine support.

With each 50c worth of goods purchased at his store, Mr. Chamberlain gives a ballot. The customer marks this ballot and drops it into one of a number of sealed ballot-boxes conspicuously displayed in various parts of the store.

The contest is to last till July 1, when the ballots will be counted by impartial judges and the $10 prize awarded to the Ladies' Aid Society which receives the largest number of votes.

The value of the scheme as a business getter will doubtless be pretty thoroughly proven in the three months that the contest is running. In his announcement Mr. Chamberlain points out significantly that the customer gets a chance to do two things at once—secure reliable footwear and help her favorite society.

Price-Cutting Cause Failures.

Islington, Ont., May 19.—W. F. Hopkins, general merchant, in referring to the recent convention of wholesalers states that he is glad to see there is something being done to make the grocery business a better paying investment.

"So many of the grocers to-day are such fools," he says, "they do not seem to know enough to keep their prices when they have a chance. If they would not cut each other's throats so much there would be less failures."

The Window Trimmer's Requisites.

Montreal, May 19.—"The successful window trimmer of to-day," observed a professional artist the other day, "should be endowed with the following faculties, well developed, viz.: Imagination, inspiration, originality, color balance, constructiveness, individuality and patience.

"Imagination enables him to picture in his mind the work he wishes to do.

"Inspiration enables him, after that start has been made, to place the various articles to be used in the exhibit where they will show to the best possible advantage. All this comes to the trimmer as he builds up his display just as new ideas come to the mind of the artist as he paints his picture.

"Through originality the trimmer makes a display that is distinctive in design and style and that does not show the earmarks of imitation.

"Patience, and lots of it, enables the trimmer to carry to a successful conclusion many a tedious piece of work, that he would otherwise leave out of the display. Patience without doubt is one of the greatest assets a trimmer can possess. Balance concerns the placing of articles used in display so that the exhibit will not appear to be one-sided, or top-heavy at any particular point. A well-balanced display is absolutely necessary at all times. A proper interpretation might be, 'A place for everything and everything in its place.'

"The day is not far distant when a window trimmer, as he is now termed, must be something more than a mere trimmer. He must add the qualifications of a decorator. A color scheme of draping the bare walls of a window with either cloth or paper will tend to bring out the beauty of the exhibit and make it more attractive to the general public than the old style of trimming. Harmony in color is another valuable asset to possess."

Selling Bedding-out Plants.

Bracebridge, Ont., May 19.—Merchants are busy this week owing to the continued rush for seeds and grain. Another specialty that makes sales larger and stores more attractive are the large displays shown of bedding-out plants. This line seems to be increasing year by year. It is now being firmly brought before the public by one particularly fine window display showing budding and full bloom flowers in the foreground, with the back built up with tomato plants, forming one huge mass of green.

Merger with R.M.A. Favored and Opposed

Toronto Retail Grocers' Association Receive Formal Proposal to Discuss the Question at a Conference — Letter From G. E. Gibbard, the Secretary—D. W. Clarke Gives Notice of Motion to Bring About Merger—Opposition to the movement.

Toronto, May 19.—It was hinted in a recent issue of The Grocer that there was a possibility of an amalgamation between the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association and the Retail Grocers' Section of the Toronto Retail Merchants' Association.

Whether this will be brought about or not is a question. Some of the members of the former, as was intimated at the regular monthly meeting on Monday night, have decided views in favor of the merger while others are apparently just as strongly opposed.

D. W. Clarke, Avenue Road, belongs to the former class. He gave notice of a motion to the effect that "this association amalgamate with the Grocers' Section of the Retail Merchants' Association of Toronto."

At the same meeting there was a letter read from G. E. Gibbard, secretary of the Toronto Section of the R.M.A., asking for a conference with a delegation from the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association.

Mr. Gibbard maintained in his communication that unionism was necessary to conserve the interests of the grocery trade He pointed to the recent convention of the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange and stated that manufacturers and wholesalers were making arrangements to confer regarding trade matters and that retailers should present a united front if their rights were to be considered fairly.

He therefore asked on behalf of the R.M.A. for a conference with the view to bring about better relations and the protection of interests.

The letter further stated that the Grocers' Section of the R.M.A. "was prepared to offer any reasonable concessions" to bring about the amalgamation.

Words in Favor of Scheme.

The question arose as to whether the matter should be discussed at the meeting or await a larger representation at the next.

J. S. Bond referred to the matter as an important one. It meant a great deal.

"If we unite with the other association we relinquish all our social functions but now we are not doing anything for the trade and its interests."

He pointed out that strength was needed in going to the council to protect the interests of the trade. To accomplish much in this line the trade must be a unit.

"If we are a power we must have numbers; we would have to drop all our prejudices and get together or else remain a purely social club."

He suggested that a committee of five be selected to meet a like number from the other association to talk over the matter.

D. W. Clarke is keen on the amalgamation idea. "In union is strength," he said. "The Retail Merchants' Association have branches all over the Dominion so they are able to present a straight front when necessity arises. We cannot get anything ourselves; the R.M.A. have to get strength from outside and we'll never accomplish anything for the trade if we go on like this.

"We are going in there," he added emphatically, "to make ourselves stronger by their support."

Neil Carmichael, a new member of the association, thought the move to be a good one and if the amalgamation was consummated predicted it to be one of the best that could occur.

W. F. Johnston saw no reason why the other association should not fall in line with theirs instead of theirs with the other.

David Bell is also opposed to the change but at the next meeting the question will be gone into fully.

A committee of five was appointed to confer, in the meantime, with a committee from the R.M.A. in order to determin what the terms of the amalgamation will be.

The selection was as follows: D. W. Clarke, J. S. Bond, David Bell, D. McLean and C. F. Thorn.

Excursion Date Arranged.

The only other matter discussed was the annual excursion which will take place this year on Wednesday, June 15. per steamer Turbinia to Cobourg, a 3½ hours run down the lake.

The various committees were selected to make the necessary arrangements.

PRESENT STANDARD OF TRAVELERS.

Toronto, May 18.—As an illustration of the new order of thinigs the Sunday evening service at Parkdale Tabernacle was recently conducted by commercial travelers and was unique in that respect.

J. W. Borsbery, for years a traveler for a wholesale grocery house, was chairman. He spoke of the higher standard that had been set by commercial men during recent years. In spite of the many temptations that lie in their paths, travelers, he said, can be as good Christians as any of their brethern and among the knights of the grip many excellent men were to be found. The elevation of this standard was doing a great deal to improve general business conditions and a better tone was thereby given to the commercial world. Mr. Borsbery was assisted by other travelers who spoke along similar lines pointing out the desirability of everybody having a high ideal. The song service was conducted entirely by travelers who gave solos, duets and quartettes.

Winnipeg Grocers Discuss Early Closing Law

They Claim There is Discrimination Against Them in Matter of Fruits—Restaurant Keeper Discharged Who Sold Canned Goods After 6 O'clock and Grocer Fined—What Chief of Police Says.

Winnipeg, May 19. — Occasionally grocers are brought face to face with statute laws or by-laws which serve to remind them that law is one of the keys to the limitation or enlargement of any business enterprise.

This fact is too frequently lost sight of by merchants, who by united effort could have such laws enacted or amended which would benefit their business, or remove laws which discriminate against them.

Is it not true that when a grocer who wishes to enter into some new enterprise, perhaps to give expression to some fertile idea, finds himself hemmed in by the law, he drops the idea, and crushes his ambition?

In this land there are few laws in force which are detrimental to the general trade, and our laws may be fast reaching perfection, but as yet they are far from that point.

In speaking of the early closing by-law which is in force in Winnipeg, J. A. McKerchar, a grocer in that city, was of the opinion that a radical change was necessary, but just what the change should be would require an investigation in order that justice would be meted out to all. The point in question is that the grocers are compelled to close promptly at six o'clock p.m., while hundreds of fruit stores, restaurants and lunch counters are allowed to keep open all night. All these later named sell a wide range of lines which from time immemorial were grocers' goods. At present a customer need not order from the grocer during the day anything in fruits, dried or fresh, fresh vegetables, bread, candies or fancy biscuits; these may be purchased freely at midnight in fruit stores and restaurants.

Loss of Trade Great.

Could an estimate in figures be put before the eyes of the grocer, of the business he loses by the operation of the by-law in its present form, one could well imagine an army of grocers bombarding the sanctum of the city fathers. They are apparently unaware of the actual conditions as they prevail, and they patiently submit to the rulings of the custodians of the law.

In Winnipeg it must he admitted that the grocers asked for an early closing law—and rightly so. There is not a grocer in the city who wishes to sell goods after six o'clock, and as for this specific phase of the law, they would not relent one iota. But because they asked for a law which was right and just, should the city allow others to take advantage of the action of the grocers, and sell lines after six o'clock which the grocers claim as theirs, and which they refuse to sell after that hour? That others (not grocers) should take this advantage, and that the city should allow it, appears to be wrong.

Chief-of-Police McRae, Winnipeg, speaking on the point in question stated that the difficulty lay in the fact that 'groceries' could not be defined. What was needed was a law specifying what lines of goods could or could not be retailed after the closing hour.

Up to Grocers, Says Police.

"At any rate," he said further, "the grocers clamored for the law and they got it, now let them take the consequences until such time as they feel like repealing it."

In this statement the gruff chief struck the vital point of the whole problem. In other words the matter is in the hands of those who are concerned. No one is going to move for the grocers; they have to act for themselves, and in this case it is their move.

It is not fair to the grocers to intimate that they are absolutely unmindful of what is going on. Recently when a restaurant keeper sold canned goods after six o'clock, the grocers had the offender checked but no fine was imposed. It would seem that there was no law which would restrict him from selling those goods since he was not a grocer, but the nature of the articles sold made the offence look altogether too glaring, and it was more than some of the grocers could tolerate.

Detective on the Job.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the custodians of this law in Winnipeg have made themselves unpopular with the grocers.

To instance a case in point: one Friday evening not long ago at two minutes after six, a man who had all the appearance of a street laborer entered a down town grocery store and asked for a loaf of bread and a can of sardines. The clerk thinking he was a hungry toiler wishing to get something for supper, sold him the goods—a fifteen cent sale. The next morning the grocer was summoned to the police court, the evidence of selling goods after six was presented and a fine of seven dollars and fifty cents was imposed. In this case the merchant was lured into breaking the law. Is this right? If not it could be changed, and there is no one to do it but the grocers.

TRADE NOTES.

Warren Thompson, who has been manager of the Thompson oatmeal mills in London, Ont., is going to Toronto, where he will assume the position of buyer for the newly organized Dominion Cereal Mills.

H. J. Parry, Vancouver, B.C., is not advertising his business for sale as was stated in our issue of May 6th.

H. R. Nixon, general merchant, Hartland, N.B., has moved into larger premises.

R. J. Burke, grocer, Dundas, Ont., has sold his business to Webb & Broad, of London.

R. C. Bowen, general merchant, Wetaskiwin, Alta., advertises his business for sale.

F. T. Foster, grocer, Shelburne, Ont., has sold his business to T. O. Kerr, of Alton, Ont.

W. C. Wilson & Co., Toronto, have taken over the grocery and ship chandlery business of Newton & Reuter, Thorold, Ont.

The Regina Cold Storage & Packing Co., Ltd., of Regina, Sask., have received a charter to carry on a cold storage and general ahattoir and pork packing business.

FARRINGTON PHILOSOPHY.

Bunch your orders whenever possible and avoid overbuying to make enough for a shipment.

Winter is out of the way with its inside coal dust and gas to make the store grimy. Have you taken advantage of the warm weather to clean house and slick up the premises generally?

It needn't be much of a job to freshen up the woodwork inside and out with a little paint. Prohably one of the boys would willingly do some of that work at odd times. In most stores there is someone who likes to paint.

The greater the variety your stock shows, the more customers it will bring in, and the more goods they will buy when they get in.

When you see a new line of goods mentioned in a trade journal, don't be afraid to order a few samples. There is no better way of keeping your stock up-to-date.

If you are not using price cards freely you do not know their value. Price cards will pay your rent, fire and life insurance and put something by for a rainy day besides.

Of course you get discouraged sometimes. We all do, but there's no real reason for it as long as there is more business to be had—and no one yet ever got it all.

Many things must be considered in buying a stock of goods. Not the least is the state of the buyer's bank account at the time of buying without regard to what he thinks it will be later.

Immense Traffic in Southern Fruit and Vegetables

How Toronto Became a Distributing Centre and an Idea of the Quantities of the Various Imported Fruits and Vegetables Which Come North—Canadian Demand Gradually Increasing From Year to Year.

Toronto, May 19th.—Recent years have witnessed great strides in Toronto's growth as a centre and distributor of early fruit and vegetables. Those who are intimate with the conditions do not have to burden their memories in an attempt to recall the time when it was an easy matter to keep an account of the amount of spring vegetables and fruits that were introduced from the sunnier lands of the south.

Persons of means made special arrangements to obtain for their tables the delicacies which were then confined to Florida and the adjoining territory within the area of the land of unbroken summer. The populace was probably unaware that tomatoes and other delicacies were being brought here during the earlier months; and it was just as well, for the existing high prices would but have stirred up feelings of futile envy, and the ordinary mortal would have had an opportunity to experience the position of Lazarus of ancient and honored fame.

But the world is progressing, and organization and system are accomplishing things which were undreamed of a few decades ago. While the northern states and Canada lay deep beneath a blanket of snow there was still a demand in these districts among the people who had the means to pay for fruits and vegetables which were then grown in the south. The northern market increased every year. Modern methods of distribution were used and by regulating the supply an effort was made to prevent a glut in any place. As the industry grew, the market was broadened proportionately. When it was learned that prices were becoming cheaper than formerly the public fell into line, slowly at first, but once a feeling of confidence and satisfaction gained a footing in general opinion, the rest was plain sailing. Dealers who took a certain quantity one season felt that during the next they could perhaps double their business.

How Northern Trade Grew.

Toronto has a delicate palate and is willing to pay the price. As the trade increased prices became easier and while still far in advance of the home articles in their season they were considered reasonable under the conditions by which they were marketed here.

During the past season it is stated the business was double that of last year. All along the line an advance was made. Hotels made larger and steadier purchases, private homes took up the habit and there were included among the regulars many who a few years ago would not have considered the idea of going in for spring fruits out of season.

The dealers brought their efforts to bear upon neighboring cities and towns and the same results were noticed there. Thus while Toronto became a heavy consumer of the imported fruits and vegetables she also became a distributing centre.

Early tomatoes, celery and strawberries, in fact all the early fruits and vegetables are received from Florida. The heaviest demand is for tomatoes and strawberries in which this year a heavy business was registered, practically doubling that of last season.

But the list is a long one. There is asparagus, celery, beets, beans, radishes, lettuce, cucumbers, carrots and all the other varieties. They are received here in crates and hampers arriving in splendid condition. Orders are filled locally and the neighboring cities and towns likewise send in their demand. A wholesaler states that there has been scarcely an instance where a faulty consignment was received. As the season advances and the sun begins to approach the northern tropic Florida's sister states share in the business of supplying that district which is still unable to provide her own wants. California also contributes a certain amount of tomatoes and asparagus but the bulk comes from the south.

Where They Come From.

Pineapples are from Porto Rico, Cuba and Florida. They begin their season about the first of April. Oranges are received the year round from various countries—California, Florida, Mexico and Spain. The Florida season is about over and California navels will soon follow. California "Valencia" will then come into prominence.

Bananas are received from Cuba and Jamaica.

Strawberries are now being procured from North Carolina but as with the early vegetables they also come from Virginia, Alabama, Louisiana and Tennessee when their seasons permit.

Considering the advances that have been made during the past few years it is safe to say that in future seasons the demand will continue to grow and the south will be called upon to put forth greater efforts in order to supply the market.

To get an idea of the amount of the business done in Toronto in early fruits and vegetables, figures were procured through the Customs department. It may be said that they begin only with February 2nd of this year and extend up to a day or two ago. While it will therefore give a good idea of the trade in early vegetables it does not do justice to the trade in oranges, lemons and bananas which continues throughout all the months of the year. The list has been briefly compiled as follows:

Strawberries—18 cars, 240 crates in each, 32 boxes in each crate. Total number of boxes 138,240. Duty 2c lb., practically 2c a box. Total duty $2,764.80. Average price to the trade 18 cents. Total $24,883.20.

Lemons—67 cars; 300 boxes in each; 300 lemons in each box. No duty. Total number of lemons 6,030,000. Approximate price to the trade, 1 cent. Total, $60,300.

Oranges—268 cars; 380 crates in each; averaging from 80 to 216 in each crate; average total number of oranges, 15,072,320. Average price 2 cents. Total $301,446.40. No duty.

Bananas—198 cars. All the way from 350 to 900 bunches to the car. Total number of bunches estimated from average, 123,750. No duty. Paid by retailers about $247,500.

Tomatoes—52 cars, averaging 480 crates each containing 6 baskets, totaling 24,960 crates or 149,760 baskets for which trade paid approximately $74,880. Duty 30 per cent.

Mixed Vegetables—29 cars, each containing between 300 and 400 hampers of beets, carrots, cucumbers, spinach, etc. Duty on all vegetables is 30 per cent.

Pineapples—40 cars; each containing 385 crates; averaging 27 pineapples each; a total of 388,800 pineapples or 14,400 crates. Total $50,600. No duty.

Celery—43 cars, averaging 250 to 300 crates to the car. Sold to the trade at from $5 and $5.50 to $6 a crate.

Onions—36 cars averaging from 150 to 250 crates to the car. Price varying as to kind of onion, Valencia, Spanish, Bermuda or Texas-Bermudas.

Cabbage—14 cars, each containing 200 crates at from $3 to $3.50 a crate.

Grapefruit—21 cars.

Sweet Potatoes—13 cars.

If you are carrying a stock of goods on your books and one in the storehouse in addition to your stock from which you are selling, you are carrying too much.

Economies in the Writing of Store Show Cards

An Ordinary Stub Pen May Be Used For Outlines of Letters—Camel Hair Brush for Filling In—Paint and Ink That Have Been Tried and Found Satisfactory—Hints on Block Lettering.

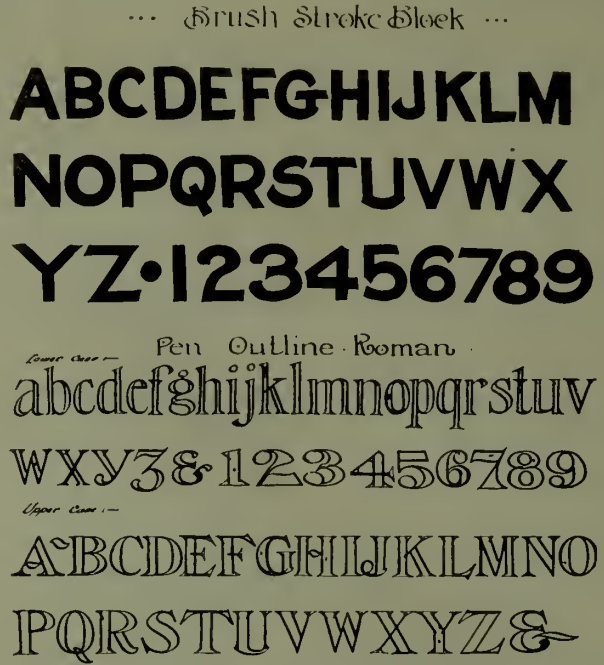
By R. T. D. Edwards.

It is astonishing how cheaply a good card can be made up when you know how. For instance, take the alphabet, under the name of "Pen Outline Roman," whcih was executed with an ordinary "stub" pen obtainable at any stationery store. The stiffer the nib the better you can control it. If it lacks stiffness, heat in the blaze of a candle or match and put it quickly into water. That method will temper it.

Then you can buy a camel-hair brush plenty good enough for "filling in" purposes for about ten cents. Ink can be had for fifteeen cents per small bottle, which would do a small store for months. Cardboard can be bought at the rate of five cents per sheet (22x28 inches) and for less in larger quantities.

There are several kinds of black that are all good for brush work. One that always works nicely and which is the easiest to obtain in the smaller towns and cities is drop black. You get it ground in water in glass jars, also in Japan and in dry powder. I would not advise using the Japan on show cards unless they are to be exposed to the wet. It is mostly used for cotton and oil-cloth signs. The drop black already ground in water is better than the dry powder, because it is finer ground and all you have to do is to add water and muscilage to the desired thickness.

There are other prepared inks for show card use that are much handier, such as letterine, which can be used with either pen or brush. It comes mixed at the proper thickness for brush work, and should be thinned with water for the use of the pen.



Alphabet Showing the Pen Outlined Letters in Both Lower and Upper Case and Capitals Finished with Brush Stroke.

When you make your own cards, therefore, it is possible to reckon that a half-sheet card will not cost more than about three or four cents at the very most—which is a great difference in paying from forty to fifty cents for it.

Paint and Ink Suggestions.

The question of proper paint and ink to use is a big one among the majority of amateur cardwriters, and too much attention cannot be paid to this most important part of cardwriting. Many writers do not care as long as the black is black or the white is white, but they should always be on the lookout for better color—the kind that is ground fine and will spread on the board evenly and not show the board through it.

In practising alphabets illustrated always draw the brush or pen in the direction you are working, namely, from left to right, and from top to bottom.

Block Lettering.

This class of lettering should only be used on cards that are to be seen at some distance in the store, such as half-sheets used in a conspicuous place to direct the customers to the different departments.

Of course, the beginner cannot expect to do as good work as a professional, but practice will do a lot for him.

CROWDS WATCH WINDOW DRESSING.

Goderich, Ont., May 19.—"The actual making up of a good window display is an even better and more effective drawing card than the window itself when it is made up."

This is the statement of a merchant who has given this phase of window dressing some attention.

"I used to pull down the blind," he added, "and run it up again when the window was a complete whole. Now I leave it up through the entire process. I have something of a reputation for good window dressing, and crowds gather every time to watch developments and possibly to bet on the final outcome. Frequently more people will stand watching a window put together than will gather at any one time after it is complete; and these crowds are not loafers by any means, but people who, I have on several occasions noticed, have afterwards come in and bought.

"The secret of it all probably is the human desire to witness action. Action is what draws a crowd every time. Even the best window display has little action; the more you can infuse into it or suggest the more likely it is to attract attention and make sales. If I range a stock of small articles in regular rows the result is comparatively lifeless. Price cards attached suggest a sale, hence action, and therefore increase interest; show cards emphasizing certain points regarading the goods further suggest action. If I range my stuff in the shape of a clock, an air ship or a Santa Claus the window becomes far more life like.

"The act of dressing a show window is just full of action. It possesses the same element of suspense as a dramatic moving picture. People are anxious to see what is coming next, and when it does come it impresses them far more than if they just saw it in its proper plaee in the display.

"I've come to the conclusion that the window with the blind down is bad business. My show window is so much advertising space for which I have to pay; it is my business to make the utmost use of it. The blinded window is suggestive of seizures for rent, bailiffs' notices, and such things. Furthermore, the window dresser has to use considerable electric light if he doesn't want to work in comparative darkness.

"Just two things I insist on. The first is that the window dresser have his idea all mapped out beforehand, so that he can dress the window with the utmost possible speed. The quicker the work, the more the interest taken. The second is that the window dresser himself be perfectly neat."

Jealousies Disrupt Business Among Merchants

Condition That Weakens Trade and Offers a Great Obstacle to Organization—Merchants Dealing With Mail Order Houses Rather Than With One Another—A Sentiment Prevailing Particularly in Small Towns Which Should be Eradicated from Business.

By F. C. Aitken.

"I know a great many towns throughout the Dominion where the relations among the merchants are so strained that they will not deal with one another. Although they are preaching to their customers the splendid gospel of 'spend your money in your own town,' the merchants are not setting the example to the townspeople and strange to say the mail order houses have established themselves to a greater extent in these places than elsewhere."

This is a summary of the statements of a business man who has traveled extensively and through his position came in contact with hundreds of merchants in practically every line of business. It almost seems incredible that conditions such as he speaks of should exist in this enlightened age, but there is one consolation, namely, that the grocers who are included in this list are of the small town variety. In the larger towns and cities there is a better understanding existing and spreading itself rapidly, undoubtedly from the realization that there is nothing to be gained by petty jealousies. Experience has taught grocers that the "United we stand" motto applies to them even as it applies to the secret society, but there is lacking that unanimity among grocers which is required before they will come into their own, presenting a solid front without sacrificing any personal rights.

But to return to the towns referred to and the 'noble' spirit of brotherly love that exists therein.

A $50 Order to M.O. House.

Brown, a dry goods man, is credited with saying that he had given a certain mail order house a fifty dollar order for groceries this spring and he intended to continue dealing there.

"Anywhere rather than with Jones or Smith" is his motto. This is an actual case. He probably imagines that he is hurting his fellow merchants but they are practically all going out of town for their goods and are thus diminishing their home trade to that extent. Is there an association among the merchants of these towns? Decidedly not! And there are different reasons explaining the lack of organization in each of the various towns, but one example will suffice.

It happened that Smith, a prominent grocer, identified himself actively with the work of organization. Jones, another grocer, to use a popular expression "got sore," and the rest of the trade split just when they should have been united. Barclay, a big dry goods man, did not fall in readily with the association idea and thus this section was divided. Discouragement was handed to the organizers at every turn and they dropped out in disgust. Pull together is a good headline providing the pulling is concentrated in one direction, otherwise there is nothing but internal strife. This biplane had no chance to make a record for it never got going and instead of friendly relations being established they were quite the reverse.

There is nothing of the day dream about these statements. They are realities, excepting the names which are used merely as examples. It is also pointed out that the townspeople find out where the wind lies and if merchants themselves deal with the mail order houses surely, they say, we might as well try it.

Poor Spirit to Show.

Thus one evil brings on another and the second is far worse than its fellow. When the merchants learn that some of their customers are dealing out of town there is a number who begin to whine and in the body of their advertisements in the papers (if they are really carrying one) they quote this splendid motto "Trade at home and build up your own town." Fine sentiment that!

It is a fact that organization and the beneficial results accruing therefrom will go a long way toward keeping business on the home front street but there must be a different sentiment permeating the atmosphere of Main street to that already referred to.

The gentleman who recently mentioned this condition of affairs said that he had passed through in one week about a dozen towns along a particular railway and he found a strikingly similarity of sentiment in the entire number. Of course all the merchants are not of this kind but there is such a large number who do come under the category referred to that the ideal few are lost sight of and are powerless to accomplish or perhaps hopeless of accomplishing anything that will create a union of interests among the mercantile class.

In the majority of cases those among whom the 'green monster' jealousy has done his best work have the smallest businesses. Their trade seems to sink to the level of their thoughts but they are scarcely worth discussing. The lamentable cases are among strong men who have splendid stores and are now flourishing. Happily they are not numerous and the trade would be greatly strengthened if the cases of this kind existing throughout the Dominion were brought to a happy termination.

FRESHENING OLD PRUNES.

The following advice of an old grocer on freshening old prunes may be profitable to readers:

"Freshening prunes is a very simple matter. There are two or three methods, but they are quite similar. The practice most commonly employed by grocers is to take a clean butter tub, place some boiling water in it and put the prunes into it, allowing them to remain in the water two or three minutes, at the end of which time they should be taken out and drained through a sieve.

"The water runs off freely, and the prunes have a much more attractive appearance, having incidentlly been thoroughly cleaned by the process. This plan neither increases nor diminishes the weight of the prunes. Some grocers place a little molasses in the hot water, just enough to sweeten it, making the water about the color of weak tea. They think this makes the prunes still more attractive in appearance and a trifle sweeter than if molasses is not used. The prunes are not so pleasing to handle if made a little sticky by the addition of the molasses. Either process will make the fruit bright and attractive, and even prunes which have turned white will, after being washed, look like new ones."

THE "PICKER" IN THE STORE.

"In all the big grocery stores," says an observant retailer, "there is a class of visitors known to the store people as "pickers," just as a certain class in the department store are styled "lookers." as distinguished from "buyers." The pickers in the grocery establishments do more than look. They wander about from one counter to another, picking up and eating a cracker here, a bit of candy there, a small cake from the pastry counter, and perhaps a bite of delicatessen.

"While one may filch in this way perhaps only a few cents' worth of stuff, when there are hundreds in a day it amounts to a pretty considerable item. But there has as yet been no way to stop the habit devised. In a prominent grocery store in the very centre of the city one of these "pickers" appeared last week with a plumed hat and a red silk waist, with a fine lace about the neck. She was making the usual rounds, accumulating a lunch in small bites, when she came to an open box containing olive oil capsules, a new inovation that this store recently introduced. Without looking at the label behind the box, and evidently thing the contents candy, the woman picked up a capsule and slipped it to her mouth. The capsules are meant to be swallowed whole, of course; but she attempted to eat it candy-fashion and, still holding it in her fingers, bit off one end. The olive oil spurted out in streams over her face and the red silk and lace neckpiece, and the effect can be imagined.

FURTHER DECLINE IN BUTTER.

At the present time the butter market is generally weak. Declines have recently taken place and this week more are announced.

In Montreal butter is marked down a couple of cents and in Toronto the drop amounts to 5 cents.

This is of course, due to the season as this time of year the milk supply is heavy and cheese factories are not universally in operation. Practically all the milk therefore goes into butter or is consumed in the form of cream.

The probability is that the present condition will continue for a time but we may expect a strengthening of the situation again when cheese factories are set in operation for the summer.

NOT ALTOGETHER A BLESSING.

Improved transportation facilities between country towns and the large commercial centres are not looked upon as unmixed blessings by all country merchants.

The advent of a new railway or improved connections on an old line is followed by an increase in passenger traffic to the large cities where the department stores flourish and a marked decrease in the business of the local stores.

When once a start is made in this direction it becomes almost epidemic. The bargain counters of the large department stores seem to hypnotise country customers, and like the city customers, they buy whether they need the goods or not.

What is the remedy? Some declare there is no remedy, that nothing can be done by country merchants to stop the flow of trade to the city stores. We doubt it.

The power of the large department store is not so much in the fact that it sells at lower prices as is its position as a large and persistent advertiser. Day in and day out its advertisements occupy the favored positions in the newspapers. Day in and day out it keeps hammering away. No customer is allowed to forget.

Service founded upon up-to-date business methods tends to hold customers as well as catch them.

Country merchants can and do sell just as cheaply as department stores and in many instances cheaper, but local customers require to be educated to the fact.

If merchants in the smaller towns and villages throughout the country were to co-operate with a view to doing this, the work would not only be made easier but its benefits would be both more effective and more immediate. A three months campaign, for example, during which every advertiser would concentrate his efforts to educate the local residents through the local newspapers would accomplish a great deal of good.

Appeal to local patriotism. Emphasize quality and service as well as price.

Local business men's organizations and boards of trade could help materially in an educational campaign of this kind.

But neither service, quality nor price are very effective without advertising. The tale has to be told to be heard.

BOOKS MUST BE KEPT.

It is an offence against the criminal code to have neglected to keep books.

Under this section of the cod· a boot and shoe merchant, Toronto, has been charged with neglect and is now out on $1,000 bail awaiting his trial.

He was originally a farmer near St. Catharines and exchanged his farm for a boot and shoe store at Drayton, moving later to Toronto.

The trouble arose from the fact that he misrepresented the value of his farm and stock, and suit was brought against him by the former boot and shoe merchant. The result was that judgment went against him, calling for a refund of $3,205. He was forced to assign and when the assignees called upon him they allege they could find no books that would give any indication as to the nature of his assets and liabilities.

His arrest followed and he is now out on bail.

Whether he is convicted of the offence charged or not, this goes to show the importance attached to modern business methods by the law and the need of proper attention to details in bookkeeping in running a business.

ACQUIRE A PERSONAL FOLLOWING.

There is a future ahead of the store salesman who builds up a personal following among a store's customers.

The man who can make such friends that they will insist on having him wait on them, and depend largely on his judgment as to what to buy, is sure to be a necessity in the store where he works, and the larger his clientele, the better salary he will be able to get.

Often some really desirable lines go begging in a store. Such a man is in a position to push them far better than his co-workers.

It is not at all necessary to resort to favoritism—giving extra weight, etc.—to obtain such a following. The man who is invariably polite, knows his goods well, and is always willing to put himself out to serve a customer, will do so as surely as anything in this world is sure. Try the experiment.

PUBLIC SPIRITED BUSINESS MEN.

A country merchant who is devoting a good deal of time and attention to the industrial development of his town disclaims that he is actuated by public or philanthropic motives. He declares that what is good for his town is good for his business.

Notwithstanding his declaration he is a public spirited man. It is his modesty that prevents him saying so.

It is a pity there are not more of his kind in every municipality throughout Canada. They are wanted and wanted badly

It is the shame of our municipal system that it does not induce more successful business men to give some of their time and attention to public affairs. The present municipal system of government is in bad odor because business men are not giving their aid and co-operation to the management of its affairs.

A municipal government, like a commercial institution, in order to be successful, must be conducted on business like lines. It is because too often it is not thus conducted that it is in bad odor.

The man who serves his town or city either in the municipal council or as an active member of the board of trade naturally, in an indirect way at any rate, derives some benefit from the success which has crowned his efforts But he is none the less a public spirited man.

Because visitors to the store don't ask questions about the goods they see displayed, don't think they are not interested in them. They are. Put the information on cards where it speaks for itself.

CAUSES OF THIS SEASON'S APPLE WASTE.

In a recent issue of The Grocer it was shown that there was a great waste of eggs annually through careless handling which must have a serious effect on the cost of living.

This year thousands of barrels of apples were wasted, but the cause of the waste is a little more difficult to locate, and therefore it is a matter that should occupy the attention of the proper authorities, and steps should be taken to avoid a repetition of the same trouble.

The farmers got them off their hands and received good value for them, but the dealers were not so fortunate.

The question, however, is not who made or who lost, but the waste is an actual cost to our country, and how this loss can be avoided in the future is the problem that should be solved. Either the farmer did not give the value the dealer expected, or the dealer did not handle them right.

Perhaps more or less blame can be attached to both of them.

In the first place a great many apples were carelessly, badly and dishonestly packed. This may have been the principal cause of the loss, because it is impossible to determine the extent of the mischief even a few barrels will do, if they do not measure up to the represented standard. A few dishonestly packed barrels may spoil the sale of thousands of barrels of good apples. A buyer may be prepared to buy a thousand barrels, but as soon as he discovers that he cannot depend on the quality he will not touch them.

All apples have their regular time when they should be used, and if something happens which delays them from going into consumption at the proper time, they deteriorate in quality, and on account of their inferiority will lessen the consumption. Stale apples will accumulate and the more they are pushed on the people the less will become the demand.

That there is truth in this theory was clearly illustrated this year. Dealers in apples all complained of the fact that the demand for apples was away below their expectations. The cause of it was that people bought stale apples and they did not care for any more. They do not always know that the trouble is in the apple, but they come to the conclusion that they have lost their fondness for apples. This again proves, what has been repeatedly stated, that quality regulates consumption.

In viewing the situation, from the past season's experience, two features may be pointed out which should not be repeated. There should be no more dishonest packing and apples should not be held beyond the time when they are at their best, even if they have to be sold at a loss.

There is another matter which should be considered. Our own population is growing rapidly and more attention should be paid to the home market. It is too much the case now that all the best fruit is bought for export, and the local demand is supplied with the poorer qualities. Home trade should not be overlooked. Through better butter, better eggs, better bacon our consumption per capita has wonderfully increased, and this will be the case with apples if the people get the right quality. It is a mistaken idea that we must export our products to make money. It pays better to have the people here consume our own products: but there should, of course, always be an outlet through export trade for surplus stock.

BUYING AWAY FROM HOME.

At a recent meeting of the Lindsay Board of Trade the subject of business men buying from catalogue houses was discussed and complaint made that a certain Lindsay hotelman was buying most of his supplies from Toronto.

Other complaints followed, amongst them being the statement that the wife and sister of one of the most active merchants present at the meeting had been on a buying tour in a Toronto departmental store a few days previously.

There is not enough loyalty to fellow business men or to the town. The hardwareman says he can get a better selection of books from a Toronto dealer than in his home town. the drygoodsman thinks he can save a dollar by buying a rifle or a bathtub in the departmental, and the jeweler imagines he can make a saving by buying his boots or groceries by catalogue. Each asks for support from the town and county people, and then on the sly tries to pick up a "bargain" which more often is a "gold brick."

Each merchant should set an example to others by buying at home. Even if the assortment of books may not be so large the local bookseller will be only too glad to get what is wanted at a fair price. Let him know what you have seen offered for sale and give him an opportunity of meeting the competition. And let each merchant do the same in other lines and there will soon be a better feeling all round and better stocks will be carried.

Support the local printer. Give him all the printing he can handle and then make him ex-officio chairman of the "Buy at Home" club. It will be to his interest to conduct a persistent campaign in his paper against mail order buying.

Every cent spent with a catalogue house in Toronto or Winnipeg helps to build up those cities at the expense of the smaller places. Every dollar spent with the home merchant helps to build up the town, increase the educational advantages and opportunities for enjoyment, while also helping to advance the values of town and farm property.

Our insane asylums are overflowing with patients, even the jails are being used to care for these unfortunates. And the more the cities are crowded and farm life made less enjoyable and more arduous, the more unfortunates will we have to live a living death as "the wards of society."

Support the "Buy at Home" movement.

GOODS OUT OF STOCK.

An important thing in conducting a retail store is to meet your customers a little more than half way, and if a customer asks for a line of goods not kept in stock, it is, from every standpoint, good policy to make out an order slip for it. If the customer finds that you have not goods in stock, which are carried by your competitor the customer loses confidence in you.

To overcome this difficulty, have an "order slip" printed, and give your sales clerks strict orders to fill out the slips in the presence of the customer, and promise to enter a "special order" for the article desired. In most cases, customers will be favorably impressed with your desire to meet their needs, and willing to wait until you can get the goods for them. If they prefer to look elsewhere, you do not sacrifice their good will, nor lose their confidence, because your willingness to enter "special order" places them under a certain obligation to you.

All special orders should be entered in a book kept for that purpose, showing the customers' name and address, date of order, date when delivery was promised, value of the article or articles, price quoted, with a column showing when goods were received and delivered.

Sometimes customers say, "Oh, I can get that next door for so much," naming a lower price than you ask. In such cases clerks should be instructed to notify the department manager at once.

These order slips tend to make better sales clerks and make them ready and willing to satisfy all who come in to buy, you will receive a great many valuable "pointers" from these slips, and they will help to keep your stock fresh and up-to-date.

Brantford Grocer Thinks Law of Garnishment Should be Amended—Suggests a Limit of $5 Instead of $25—Barrie Merchant Proposes Watching deadbeats Closely—Quebec and Hamilton Dealers Give Their Ideas on Manufacturers Selling to Large Retailers.

THE LAW OF GARNISHMENT.

Editor Canadian Grocer, — Your article on "How the Law of Garnishment Effects Grocers," is most timely. That law as it stands at present, is practically a dead letter, owing to the fact that nearly all employers of labor pay their employes every week, or at most every two weeks. Hence the dishonest customer takes advantage of the $25 exemption the law allowes him.

Years ago when the Garnishment Law was placed on the statutes of this province, wages were paid monthly, so that many workmen had from five to six weeks wages coming to them. That left a margin for the merchant if he had to sue his customer.

I claim that the present exemption of $25 puts a premium on dishonesty, and leads the honest workman to believe that prices are adjusted—that is put high enough by the retail dealer to recompense himself for any loss he may sustain through the failure of the deadbeat to pay his bill. That is an error, of course.

But it goes to show that many of the working class think as the grocer does—that the low should be amended. Why should any man be exempted from paying his debts if he is able to pay them? Very few business men are inclined to push an honest debtor; he generally gets all the time he wants, if he is doing his best to square his account.

Therefore we grocers believe that the exemption should be reduced to one week's salary, or better still to five dollars. There are other good reasons why the grocer desires a change in the Law of Garnishment, which I will explain in a future letter.

ADVISES SELF PROTECTION.

Editor Canadion Grocer,—My experience re garnishment of wages is limited. During 28 years of retail grocery business I only garnisheed one customer's wages. The amount was $40, and I got judgment in the Division Court. I did not take the cheapest mode of collecting it, as I gave it to a legal man to collect. He got $25 and kept it, while I never got a bill of his costs or any statement.

I have long since realized that it is no use to depend upon collecting accounts by legal proceeding—that is, the class of accounts referred to.

The law protects the working man, and tells the grocer, as the judge said on this occasion, "you did not have to give this man credit." I have taken this advice and walked up to it pretty closely, making few bad accounts an dturning a deaf ear to many appeals. In most cases such appeals for credit are made with deliberate intent to do the grocer.

A good motto to adopt is not to open any accounts, just to say: "It has been my rule to consider and look into such matters (ask them for reference), and I will let you know to-morrow;" then send a polite note, 'Yes' or 'No.' It's because a grocer is taken unawares and on the spur of the moment that bad accounts are usually opened.

I cannot suggest any remedy as to a better way of collecting small accounts from the working man. My opinion is—protect yourself, he is protected. Keep a firm hold of the lines and of the whip handle yourself.

SELLING TO LARGE RETAILERS.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—We are of the opinion that the manufacturers should stop selling retail houses in large quantities at wholesale prices. The small retail houses which are more numerous than the few large retail houses cannot buy in large quantities, and are by this fact unable to compete with larger firms, who are underselling them.

This is the complaint made to us by most of the retail grocers in our district.

C. O. GENEST & FILS.
Sherbrooke, Que., May 17, 1910.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—At the retailers convention in Toronto recently the following resolution was carried and sent forward to the wholesalers for consideration:

> "That it is the opinion of this meeting that it is not in the best interests of the grocery trade that some few retail houses should have the right to purchase in larger quantities direct from the manufacturer since this privilege is not extended to all."

With all sales prohibited to larger retailers the manufacturer who is introducing a new line is up against a difficult proposition. Naturally he wants to get his goods before the consumer at the earliest possible moment and formerly he has found that to interest some of the larger retailers and make it worth their while to push his goods has been the best way to promote his own interests. As the situation looms up now he first approaches the wholesaler, who makes the most favorable terms for himself, and then tells the manufacturer to go out among the retailers and take orders and he will fill them. Often the margin of profit that is left to the retailer is so small that the larger ones will say "no," or else tell him that he will wait until their is some demand for the article, or possibly that he may leave it on sale (which by the way is often good policy for the retailer). This is most discouraging to the manufacturer as he knows under the old plan a few live retailers would have advertised and pushed his goods for a consideration, and then the whole trade would be ready to fill up his order book.

The retailer who helps him out under the first plan possibly does not make as much out of it as appeared on the surface. If he were to go carefully into the cost of window displays, extra time spent by himself and clerks in introducing the goods, interest on money paid out for larger supplies than necessary, he would find he was not so much better off than the smaller man who takes advantage of the market created for him and buys from the wholesaler in emption the law allows him.

For the trade as a whole I think the selling of a new line to a few respectable firms who do not cut prices is a better proposition for the whole body of grocers than the present arrangement of selling and demonstrating through the department stores. The policy of these stores is to humbug the consumer at every turn. When a new thing comes out, they impress the customer with the idea that the goods can be purchased nowhere else, and then when they have got the most advertising out of it, and other grocers are stocked up they cut the price. The retailer should certainly refuse to handle goods brought out under their manipulation. This proposal from the retailers at large is no new thing and has always met with the approbation of the wholesaler.

From Jobber to Consumer.

Another resolution that was placed before the convention was in reference to the wholesaler selling the consumer. These two resolutions should be placed side by side and the wholesalers status be fixed as well as the manufacturers. In the United States the retailers are much better organized than here, and recently asked the wholesaler to define his position, and told him that if he could not do so, that they, the retailers, would do it for them. If the wholesalers want to pull the retailers up short they should see that this pernicious custom is entirely wiped out.

I think some of the worst evils the retail trade have to contend with are the department stores, the cutter and the selling direct to the larger consumers. When these things can be eliminated, then let the manufacturer sell nobody but the wholesaler. While the wholesaler is considering the question contained in the injustice of retailers buying direct, why not let him take up the larger question of all the manufacturers selling the department stores.

An instance of the evil attending these sales occurred recently when a large manufacturer sold a rather small department store a line of new goods. After thoroughly canvassing the grocers and selling them the same goods with instructions what the retail price should be, the manufacturer sold the department store, who cut the price to the consumer to the figure the grocer had paid for it. Let the Guild get right after these people and show them up, and then the retailer will be able to appreciate their efforts.

Merchants Opposed to the Feminine Labor Law

Decide to Send Deputation to Wait on Minister of Agriculture—Inspectors Beginning to Enforce Act—Subscription Started to Wipe Out Deficit—Permits For Erection of Awnings—To Close Stores on Friday.

Toronto, May 19. — The retail Merchants' Association have started in with intentions of wiping out the present indebtedness.

At the meeting of the general executive of the Toronto branch of the association on Monday night this was one of the chief questions. Every class of the trade was represented, and the members contend it was a meeting productive of good results.

The association was placed under new management 6 weeks ago, and the report of the treasurer showed that they had begun to pay off the deficit. Plans were outlined and a subscription list was headed by Wm. Dineen with $100. Altigether some $300 were subscribed.

To Organize Deputation.

The law respecting feminine labor—which compels all places in which female help is employed to close at 6 o'clock—was discussed. This has been on the statute books of the Ontario Government for some years, but it is only recently that labor inspectors have set out to make it effective. Under the administration of the Hon. Mr. Montieth, former Minister of Agriculture, the law was suspended. At that time his department agreed that it should be amended and it is claimed that the same department in the present Government believe it to be in error.

The merchants say they are willing to abide by a maximum number of hours per week, even less than that provided by the present law, but they say it is ridiculous, and unfair as well, to determine by law when those hours shall be put in. As the law now stands it is illegal for a girl to serve ice cream or candy after 6 o'clock, except on Saturdays and on days before holidays.

A deputation will be organized to wait on the Department of Agriculture to induce it to suspend the operation of the law until such times as the act can be amended.

Permits for Awnings.

The Roads Department of the City Hall demands that a permit must be taken out whenever an awning is erected. This was another question discussed.

Secretary G. E. Gibbard has interviewed the department which points out that the streets of the city must be under the street department, and that the permit was the only way to keep control of them.

This department is prepared to issue an awning permit upon request at no cost whatever to the merchant—even if the request is made by telephone.

The trouble was laid to some tent and awning manufacturers who put up awnings without first ascertaining whether a permit had been secured or not.

The association also decided to consider Friday, May 20, a holiday—the day of the King's funeral—out of respect for the memory of the late King Edward VII.

PASSED AND REJECTED.

Resolutions Which Came Up For Discussion at National Convention of U. S. Retail Grocers.

Springfield, Ill., May 18.—Among the resolutions adopted at the convention of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States were the following:

Disapproving action of manufacturers who advertise that grocers' profits upon sale of their goods are much greater than the facts justify.

Opposing all free deal propositions offered by manufacturers to merchants.

Disapproving the action of the National Canners' Association which had endorsed the parcels post and asking that the Canners' resolution in favor of the same be rescinded.

Opposing the solicitation of orders by manufacturers upon terms concerning which the retailers have no advance information.

Reaffirming policy of the National Association in favor of the Pacific coast plan of maintaining retail selling prices and opposing the publication of the price upon packages of goods.

Opposing trading stamps and premiums of every description.

Favoring enactment of percentage collection laws by all the states.

Opposing advertisement of premium offers to consumers by manufacturers.

Condemning the practice of packers who use heavy wrappers weighed with the goods, causing loss to retailers.

Favoring the sale of all bulk commodities by weight, 100 pounds being the unit and asking for legislation to enforce that system.

Opposing enactment of bulk sales laws.

Recommending that the convention of 1911 be held in San Francisco during the Panama canal celebration.

Favoring the establishment by retailers of account systems similar to those of large institutions.

Urging reduction of the tax on oleomargarine to two cents per pound.

Providing for a committee of three to ask jobbers to co-operate with the retailers in encouraging organization of retailers.

The Rejected Resolutions.

The following resolutions, after a long debate were rejected by a decisive vote:

"Whereas, it has been found by experience that free deals on perishable goods, or free deals that work toward the end of demoralization of prices are not to best interests of retail grocers, and,

"Where, where are deals inaugurated by some manufacturers and who do not sell to the mail order houses, or chain stores, on stale commodities but do not deteroriate, and are instituted for the purpose of increasing the profit of the legitimate retail grocers and to enlist his co-operation, and,

"Whereas, the members of the National Association of Retail Grocers in convention assembled, believe there should be a distinction made between objectionable deals above referred to and those that are utilized for the mutual interests of the manufacturers and the distributers, therefore,

"Be it resolved, that the National Association of Retail Grocers in convention assembled, reiterate its objection to free deals on perishable goods, or upon products where the deals are so handled as to allow demoralization in prices.

"Be it further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be published in the trade bulletin."

MAKING MORE SALES.

By W. J. B.

Perhaps there is nothing that invites a customer to purchase groceries, more than a clean and tidy store; or it might be better to say that nothing drives a customer away quicker than a dirty and untidy store. Windows, counters, scales and floor should be kept very clean. Care should be taken in sweeping so that goods will not become dust covered. Shelves and ledges should be clean from dust and the goods on them attractively arranged. There should be receptacles at every counter in which to place all waste paper as it makes a store look untidy for the floor to be covered with paper. Care should be taken in weighing goods to put it all in the bags and not strewn over the counter, floor and scales.

But the salesman behind the counter can perhaps do more than anything to increase the sales by intelligent suggestions to customers. We find the clerks and even proprietors in many shops will spend the time talking to customers, about everything from the weather down to the latest murder or political scandal; but they will forget completely to mention that "We have just received a fresh shipment of canned corn which we are selling at 3 cans for 25c."

Then there is the salesman who rattles off his talk about twenty-five articles in about as many seconds. He might just as well save his breath and not drive the customer away. Take one thing at a time and talk about it intelligently—say pickles. "Mr. Jones we are selling this pint bottle of pickles this week at 15c. It is a regular 20c bottle and I thought perhaps you might like to know about the reduced price as you buy a large quantity."

Why More Attention Should be Paid to the Window

A Lesson From the Department Stores — Troubles of Western Merchants With Their Winter Windows—Grocer Says Good Window for Display Purposes is Worth $10 per Month—The Question of Tickets and One-line Displays.

By L. C. Harkness.

If there is one thing more than another that distinguishes the department store from the smaller retail business, it is the emphasis which the larger house puts upon the window display.

It is safe to conclude from this that this feature toward which so much attention is directed, has been a dominant factor in making the larger business. Every retailer admits that a good display of goods is an asset to the business and every retailer makes some sort of an exhibit in his show window.

The variety of display methods, the evident lack of systematic display ability, and the exhibits which often repel rather than attract gives an observer the impression that the average retailer might well make a special study of window displaying to develop his crude art.

It is no exaggeration to say that an estimate is placed upon the nature of a business by every one who notes the display in the window. It is then little short of tragical that the business grows slowly, or does not grow at all because the man behind it does not realize the value of an attractive and educative window.

Thanks to the stores that have already learned the secret of scientific business methods, this feature is becoming more and more pronounced. But the average grocer is far behind those who lead and a few suggestions as to how the art may be improved seem to be timely.

Difficult in Winter.

It must be remembered that climatic conditions have much to do with the nature of the displays. In Western Canada it is difficult to display goods well during the winter months. It is for this reason that grocers should take advantage of the summer months in the matter of front attractions. The freezing over of the windows in winter has been an obstacle which merchants have always been trying to overcome. And it is believed that the use of the electric fan in keeping the glass free of ice has been the most effective solution to the problem. Grocers maintain that the winter season is so cold that passers by do not notice the windows, but if the window is free of ice the value of a glance at a good window cannot be estimated.

The indifference towards goods displays in winter seems to have created a general indifferenee toward this feature all through the year. Winnipeg, which is yet the greatest western city, is far behind some smaller towns farther west, in the matter of front window attraction. But it is in this same city that the value of the display can be discerned. The dry goods merchant, the haberdasher and the tobacconist are all strong on this feature, and it brings them returns.

These merchants find it to their advantage to plan their stores and construct the interior in order to develop the display feature. Grocers too often make the mistake of not duly considering this feature when planning the interior.

Worth Much More Rent.

H. R. Beaudry, Winnipeg, said recently that a store with good possibilities of window display, even if on a side street of a suburb, was worth ten dollars a month more rent than a store in the same locality with poor window facilities.

"The window sells goods," he claims.

The fact that so many grocers believe that the window is a valuable selling asset and claim to depend upon it for the turnover of stocks, and at the same time pay such little attention to the window, is surprising.

W. Ketchem, who dresses the windows in the J. O. McKerchan store, in Winnipeg, said that grocers should appropriate a certain sum of expense money for window decorations each year. He thinks that a special clerk should be given the responsibility of dressing the window, and co-operate with the stock keeper in the selling of goods.

Every grocer who has tried the experiment has proven that by his window he can educate the public to buy just what he wants to sell, and at the desired time.

Montreal, May 19, 1910.

The recent death of the King and the fact that his funeral takes place this week has put a general damper on trade. It is not confined at all to one line, but to all. It is only a temporary lull, after which the former condition should return. Probably May 25th or 26th will be the date. Interest in the comet has taken a great hold of the average Montrealer, seemingly to such an extent that he has forgotten to do much buying.

With the present fine weather prevailing there seems to be no reason why, later in the month, conditions should not improve.

Sugar is firm owing to reports that crops are not any too good. Molasses may soon present a distinct scarcity, especially the "choice" variety.

Sugar—Raw sugar is firm, owing to recent reports that tell of various crop disasters, and it looks as if there would be no relief from present high prices for some time to come. Local refined prices are firm, and show no signs of weakening.

Evaporated Apples—Export demand is still strong, and though locally prices are the same they are from ½ to ¾c higher for export. This presents a rather peculiar situation, and local dealers are taking full advantage of it to unload their stocks.

Evaporated apples, prime	0 08

Beans and Peas—There is an unexpected quickening in the demand for beans. At last writing they were having a slow sale, but recent export demand has livened things up to a marked degree. It looks also as if local men had allowed their stocks to run too low, and prices are stiffening daily in the primary market. It seems certain there will be an advance to the retailer in a few days.

Peas are quiet at former quotations.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—For canned vegetables the demand is still as good as ever, even at the slightly higher prices of some lines. The call for fruits, except those in glass, has gone off to a certain degree, though still satisfactory, in view of the high prices.

Sockeye salmon are in good demand, while other fish are quiet.

In meats there is a steadily increasing trade, and the buying for summer consumption seems to have set in, in earnest.

WINNIPEG—All houses are quoting canned goods at an advance of 2½ cents per dozen and 5 cents per case just now. It is not known whether this is a result of the recent canners' merger or not, at any rate it seems impossible to secure lower quotations anywhere, and it is more probable that prices may still go up. The demand is excellent except for peas and corn which is an indication that the present values are warranted.

TORONTO—Canned goods, particularly vegetables, are firm. The demand has been strong, corn and tomatoes perhaps leading. It is a fact that the average home has exhausted the supplies that were laid away last year, including carrots, parsnips and cabbage. Srring vegetables are offered now but they have to be imported. The price is prohibitive to many outside of the wealthy class. Canned goods which have been running along actively have assumed a new life. Canned fruit are strong and this market is most satisfactory. Canned salmon is unchanged being still firm and steady.

POINTERS—

Canned Goods—Steady and firm.

Sugar—Steady.

Dried Fruits Much firmer.

Brazil Nuts — Shortage in primary market.

Toronto, May 19, 1910.

While the week's markets have been firm and steady in a general sense, there have been no outstanding features to point to. Sugar remains firm with an unsettled condition in raw market. A change is looked for practically at any time now and although it is generally accepted that a rise will be recorded, there is a slight feeling that it may go the other way. Dried fruits have presented a strong feature. Apricots and prunes, particularly futures, are much firmer due to the loss sustained to the next crop.

Canned goods are also active and firm. They are considered a good holding, particularly in the vegetable varieties. Tomatoes and corn are in particular demand.

Nuts remain firm. The report regarding Tarragonas is now believed not as serious as at first reported but is nevertheless considerable. Brazils continue firm but the conditions connected with the production are not yet certain. Peanuts have taken a stronger tone and reports show heavy importations. The ball game crowds explain the new market. From the news regarding Brazils it looks as if they would be a good purchase.

While the general market has no big features, it is encouraging and satisfactory.

Sugar—The market is steady and strong. Fluctuations occur in the raw market, but the week has witnessed no changes in the prices of the refined article. "It is a waiting market," to use the expression of one dealer. Opinion was a unit to the effect that when the break comes it will be upward. In this respect it may be remarked that New York reports mention the raw market as somewhat unsettled, but unless the market is unduly manipulated there is no apparent reason for expecting a decline.

Dried Fruits—Severe damage to California's coming prune crop has been confirmed and estimates even place the loss at half the crop. The market has been affected to the extent of marked firmness which has stirred up the dried fruit market from sluggishness to activty. Latest reports announce a strong tone to future prunes. Locally, dried fruits have not been up to former years. It has been explained that the market has been flooded wih fresh apples which had been held in storage. The California reports have brightened the market and prunes are held in favor. Apricots are also firmer and likewise dried peaches. Raisins are firm but only fairly active.

Nuts—Shelled almonds and walnuts are firm. Advices from Brazil state that the market there continues to advance under a decided shortage in the crop. The unsold supply still to come forward is estimated at not over 3,500 tons.

In connection with nuts a prominent operator in New York said recently: "The position of almonds remains unchanged. There are reports, now, that some sections in France were not as seriously affected as others, but all reports agree that Tarragonas have been severely damaged and that the crop will not exceed 30 per cent. of a normal yield. In princess paper shells, the damage is not quite as serious as was first stated. Walnuts: Stocks are unusually small and are now in cold storage. An advance of ¼ cent in all prices is to be noted. MANITOBA MARKETS

Strong—Canned goods, tapioca, nuts.
Firmer—Beans, evaporated apples.

Winnipeg, May 19, 1910.

The general strengthening of the market last week has been warranted, it is believed, by the still increasing demand for goods in every part of the west. Last week the weather broke out fine and warm and business in every phase has taken on its usual midsummer briskness. Wholesalers and brokers are better pleased with the way goods are coming in, no doubt due to the increased facilities of lake and rail routes. West of this city the railways are taxed in making prompt distribution, but there has been little complaint on this score. There is a tendency on the part of the merchants to buy too heavily and overload their stocks due to the inevitable advance in markets, as a consequence orders are very heavy and trade is easily secured. Travelers have been forced to hold merchants down to limited orders due to scarcities and the possibilities of overstocking him.

This is a peculiar condition of the trade at present and has been brought about by natural means.

Sugar.—It would seem that the Canadian sugar market—in the west at any rate—is becoming more and more independent of the United States market. It is not usual that our market holds out so long against advances in New York. Last week there was an advance across the line and no changes are quoted here. Whether the Canadian market will follow or not is a question. U. S. values are quite as liable to go down before a rise takes place.

Foreign Dried Fruits.—Reports of frost came from fruit crop centres recently and such a condition always enhances values on present marketable goods. Peaches, pears and apricots are exceptionally strong and further advances may reasonably be expected. The prune quotations of last week are strongly maintained and the demand continues heavy.

Beans.—There is much unrest in the bean market just now and wholesalers have been forced to pay higher prices recently. Whether this will continue or not is uncertain as it is believed there is a good supply somewhere. It is certain that merchants will have to pay more, however, if the present condition is maintained, since the wholesalers' margin is claimed to be too small.

Evaporated Apples.—It is reported in wholesale centres that this product is on the rise, but the advance will be gradual; 8 cents is the general quotation to-day, and an effort is being made to put on such quality as will insure better values.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, May 19, 1910.

With the incoming of new potatoes, it is quite surprising what a large amount of old stock is to be found. There are no Ashcrofts, of course, but there are plenty of good potatoes. Not so very long ago, the price was being hoisted systematically, the general statement being that potatoes were scarce. Now it is being seen that large quantities were held, for their is an abundance on the market. It does not make much difference to those commission men who hold them, as the price which has obtained for a couple of months past will more than conmepsate for the drop now. They advanced to even $40 a ton, and now are quoted at $23, and even at that there will be difficulty in clearing out

Expert Tea Man Tells How To Increase Sales

Mr. R. K. Stevens, representing Shaw, Wallace & Co., of Calcutta, India, a tea firm well known in both hemispheres, arrived recently in America. In an interview with the Tea and Coffee Trade Journal he expressed very plainly the opinion that the reason the consumption of tea in the United States was practically at a standstill while the consumption of coffee was increasing by leaps and bounds was that seventy-five per cent. of the tea imported was being bought and sold for appearance instead of for "cup" or "liquoring" quality. The consumption of tea in England, he said, had remained comparatively small until India and Ceylon had begun to ship tea largely. The better liquoring quality of blends of India and Ceylon teas appealed strongly to Old Country consumers. The largest buyers on the Calcutta and Colombo markets, declared Mr. Stevens, are among the finest judges of tea in the world, and they buy for liquor, not for appearance.

Every time you buy Red Rose Tea you are buying a blend of Indian and Ceylon tea carefully selected for its "liquoring" or "cup" quality and not for appearance. Your customers don't know anything about the appearance of tea; they do know about its "liquoring" or "cup" quality. Rich, smooth strength, delicious flavor, delicate aroma, these are cup qualities. In these Red Rose Tea is not equalled by any other tea in Canada. That is the reason for Red Rose Tea success. That is why it pays to recommend

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

The Dominion Register Co., Ltd., of Toronto, held a Convention of their salesmen the first week in May and were invited to visit the plant of The McCaskey Register Co., at Alliance, Ohio, The Dominion Register Co., Ltd., of Canada is a licensee of The McCaskey Register Co., of Canton, Ohio. The managers and salesmen spent an entire week at the plant of the latter company to become thoroughly educated on the systems of the company, which are duplicated and marketed in Canada by the Dominion Register Co., Ltd., and the president of the Dominion Register Co. took advantage of the opportunity to banquet the Canadians at the Canton Club. The entertainment was one long to be remembered by those who were present. The banquet hall was beautifully decorated with Canadian and American flags, and the environments generally, were such as made the "foreigners" feel thoroughly at home. Mr. Ryley, president of the Dominion Register Co., Ltd., although his home is in Canton, is a Canadian, having been born and reared in Canada, and having started his business career with the Canadian Bank of Commerce. Altogether the Canadian boys who made the trip to Canton and who are now back in the field distributing the Dominion products are enthusiastic over the treatment accorded them in Canton, and as a result of their week's education there, have entered upon their duties for the Dominion Register Co. in a way that means success for each and every one of them. Those who made the trip to Canton were as follows:—H. B. Macdonell, managing director, Toronto, Can.; J. C. O'Connor, sales manager, Toronto, Can.; E. McCall, H. H. Jack, P. M. Corcoran, George Cameron, H. N. Hill, P. J. Morton, J. H. Farwell, W. H. McDermott, David F. Milne, F. T. Oldfield, W. G. Stewart, A. M. Almas, W. B. Pierce, J. R. Lumley.

G. S. Buchanan and G. S. Ahern, formerly with D. Rattray & Sons, have opened offices in Quebec as commission merchants and importers. The former has a connection of three years, while employed by the Rattray firm, and the latter six years, with the wholesale trade of Quebec. They anticipate featuring sugar, molasses and kindred lines, while they are acting as selling agents for several specialties.

R. B. Wiseman Co., Winnipeg, have sold their storage and forwarding business to Ferguson Bros. They have retained their wholesale grocery brokerage business, to which they will now have time to pay increased attention. They propose developing their brokerage business to larger proportions than it has ever had.

Lunham & Graham have removed to 559 St. Paul St., Montreal, where they have secured larger quarters. A refrigerator plant has been installed for the safe storing of their Corona butter, while alterations to the warehouse are being made, which will particularly suit it to the needs of their business.

Vegetable Butter.—Further investigations regarding the introduction of coco fruitine on this side of the Atlantic confirm the view that its use will produce a revolution that will distinctly benefit householders for all cooking purposes and all purposes where pure lard and cooking butter are employed with this article, which is manufactured from cocoanuts, and is a genuinely pure extract of cocoanut produced in Marseilles, and shipped from there under the name of coco fruitine. It is shipped to this country in a hardened form, although used in France in the form of oil largely. Coco fruitine is used in enormous quantities by the large biscuit makers in Great Britain and on the continent, and the manufacturers have found it necessary to greatly increase their facilities for producing it. It is singularly wholesome, and nourishing, and its easy digestion, compared with other substitutes therefore commend it greatly. The nourishment contained in this article is greater than that from similar goods. It is made in such form that all moisture is eliminated, making it, therefore, more economical in use, even although the initial price is not any more than pure lard. Its absolute purity, its nourishing qualities, the economy in its use, and its agreeable taste, so far as there is any taste to it, all favor its large use. Arthur P. Tippett & Co., Montreal, have been appointed agents for the manufacturers for Canada, and as this firm does not handle goods that they are not perfectly satisfied with as filling every known requirement of purity and reliability, it is a fair criterion, without any other evidence, it is all right.

Recently some 500 retail grocers of Philadelphia, Pa., were guests of the Campbell Soup Co., at their large plant in Camden, when two hours were spent inspecting it, and the methods used in manufacturing their soups. The care exercised to prevent anything but the highest quality of products from being a portion of the ingredients was a revelation to all. Sherry and Madeira wines, imported from Spain and used in the ox tail and mock turtle soups, vied with the selected dry-picked fowls, glimmering Patna head rice and butter used in chicken soup in their interest to the grocers. The plant was in full operation, and a good idea was given of the ability of the machines to handle over 400,000 cans daily, as is frequently done while tomatoes are being received.

S. T. Nishimura & Co., Montreal, on Monday received samples of new crop Japan teas, being the first to arrive in Canada this season. These samples have been forwarded to their various agents and submitted to jobbers, who are reporting the teas as being of excellent quality.

Chr. Bjelland & Co., Stavanger, Norway, the packers of the King Oscar brand of sardines, have placed on the market a new line—smoked herring in bouillon. These goods are small herrings, not much larger than sardines, and are packed closely in sardine style, consequently, the consumer gets a lot of fish for a small price. The liquor is a spiced bouillon, and gives the herrings an appetizing flavor that will be pleasing to most palates. Each tin weighs 14 oz., and as they can be retailed at 10c per tin, and give both wholesaler and retailer a good profit, the line will be a popular one with the trade. Mr. Henderson, of J. W. Bickle & Greening, Canadian agents for Bjelland & Co., reports that the first shipments have been well distributed and repeat orders have been cabled.

J. W. Lefebvre is now selling J. & A. Carpenter's meats in glass, which are packed in London, England. Egon Clavel, 209 Coristine building, Montreal, is agent for Canada. Mr. Lefebvre, who was with the Ozo Co., is widely known in the trade.

Cracks, Helds, and Rots in Eggs Ruinous to Trade

Three Dead Losses Which Revert Back to the Producers — System in Denmark Which Prevents These — Merchants Too Keen on Accepting all Kinds of Eggs — Would Make it Illegal to Sell Bad Stock.

By Jno. A. Gunn in Canadian Farm.

There are three big, dead losses in eggs: losses from cracked, losses from held eggs and losses from rots. The cracked are usually caused in shipping, due to rough roads and handling.

Held eggs are caused by the farmer or small dealer waiting for an advance in price. This is especially the case in the fall. The third loss, rotten eggs, is caused by various things: one big cause is the heat of the summer, one hour's direct rays of the sun will put an egg out of condition, particularly on hot days.

Another cause is by the hens stealing nests and the eggs not being gathered until they have spoiled. Another cause is carelessness on the part of the farmer; he gathers his eggs any time that suits his convenience, puts them in any place, without any thought of the future, and takes them to town whenever it pleases him.

Thus the eggs go through a process of heating and cooling which causes disintegration to take place rapidly.

How to Eliminate Loss.

Now what are the remedies? There is a considerable loss to the individual and to the community by the present methods of handling, and it is time for us to consider the ways of eliminating this loss, so that the businesslike farmer may adopt them, improve his egg business, and make money by doing so.

It is hardly reasonable to expect anyone to improve his business conditions unless he realizes a financial benefit therefrom. Everyone likes to produce the best of everything, providing they can make more money than by selling the inferior article. It is only reasonable that if the farmer brings in good, No. 1 eggs every week, he should get more than the one who does not. Under the present circumstances he does not, consequently the tendency is to let the care of the eggs slide.

Would Pay Higher Prices.

The question now evolves itself into one as to how we, as wholesale men can secure a better quality of eggs which will justify us in paying a higher price for the article, which we are quite willing to do if the standard is raised. It may not be known, but in purchasing eggs we do discriminate, and in certain sections where they have improved the standard and where the eggs are more regularly collected, we pay a higher price than in other districts where these conditions do not prevail, proving conclusively that more attention to these details will insure the farmer greater returns.

I am fully convinced that only proper legislation prohibiting the selling of bad or rotten eggs and a co-operative method of collecting or gathering the eggs, based largely on the system adopted in Denmark, will prove effective.

When recently in Europe I studied conditions there. I found that where there existed a wise co-operation they realize, on an average, far more for their eggs than what we do. I found that they command a higher price on the best markets in Great Britain, and I naturally asked myself the reason why and took the pains to find out. I found that under conditions that are not as favorable as what we enjoy in many respects, they were able to produce more and realize higher prices.

Naturally I wanted to know why this was so. I found that their extra profit was largely due to the fact of a more honest, businesslike method of collection, and that an intelligent concentrated and universal system of co-operation had brought about these results.

The System in Denmark.

In Denmark they form co-operative egg associations or circles; members are accepted on application by paying a small nominal fee. They have to deliver all the eggs produced by their hens, setting eggs and accidentally found eggs excepted, in a manner and on days fixed by the officers of the circle. No eggs more than seven days old are delivered, transgression of this rule is punished by a fine which reverts to the association. Each member undertakes to collect eggs every day, and in the hot season twice a day.

Accidentally discovered eggs or stolen nests must not be delivered. Artificial eggs only are to be used as nest eggs, and the hens must be kept from the nests during the night; only clean eggs will be received. Every member gets a rubber stamp with ink and pad; the number of the circle as well as that of the member appears on the stamp, each egg being stamped plainly on the large end, so that the owner of every egg may be identified. The necessary capital for paying cash to the members on delivery of the eggs is provided by a loan, the members of the circle becoming responsible for this loan. The eggs are paid for at a price set by the circle directors, and whatever over and above this price the eggs realize is paid later on to the members of the circle, after deducting the current expenses.

The directors undertake the disposal of the eggs, find the best market, and realize very much higher prices than would be possible by individuals working along individual lines. The result of all this is that when you look into shop windows in London, you see eggs with stamps on the ends, as referred to above, ticketed at a much higher price than ordinary stock. This stamp being a guarantee of quality, the consumers are willing to pay the extra price asked for them.

Make it Punishable Offence.

I believe that it is manifestly in the interests of every individual producer, as well as everybody interested in the distribution of eggs, that legislation should be enacted making it an offence against the law to market, or offer for sale bad eggs. We also should inprove our methods of gathering and collecting.

As everybody knows, the system today is most primitive; either a few individuals go around and collect the eggs from the farmer, taking everything they offer, good, bad and indifferent at the same price, or else these eggs are taken to the country merchant who has neither time nor inclination to go through them, and who is compelled to pay good cash for everything that offers.

The competition in buying eggs through the producing season is so keen that buyers are afraid to insist on being allowed to reject bad eggs, the storekeeper stating that if they do not accept them someone else will, so under this method there is necessarily, and will continue to be a very great loss, and a shrinkage which is borne by the trade generally and primarily by the farmer.

BEAN GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Ridgetown, Ont., May 17.—At a largely attended meeting of bean growers and dealers held here on Saturday the Ontario Bean Growers' Association, provisionally formed last February, was actually organized. A large number of members were enrolled, and the indications are that the list will grow rapidly.

The addresses largely related to the improvement and cultivation of the crop. A strong point urged by practically all the speakers was the necessity of using first class seed, by which means insect pest could be successfully combated and the yield immensely increased. W. C. Newman stated that though the Canadian Northwest offered a large and growing market, in which the consumption of Canadian grown beans had doubled in the last 8 years, in order to meet American competition Canadian growers must produce beans of the highest quality.

Although a failure, when previously tried, this traffic bids fair to be successful, and will form an important link in the transcontinental route.

Live and Dressed Hogs Placed at Higher Prices

Scarcity Has Helped Boost the Prices—Butter Suffered a General Slump During the Past Week—Egg Market a Little Easier and Should Become More General — New Cheese Markets Report Decline in Prices—Poultry Remains Quiet.

Butter and eggs are both occupying a prominent place in the market. The former has declined generally. It was not a drop of one cent at a time. The market held on at a high figure until two weeks ago, when the first break occurred. Last week it was sharper than ever throughout the whole country, and the bottom price has hardly been reached yet.

Eggs have remained firm. The production is heavy and it might be expected that the price would have dropped, but it is apparent that a large percentage have been put away. The price is, at any rate, a little easier.

The provision markets display a new firmness. Live and dressed hogs are demanding higher figures, owing to a present scarcity of supplies. Lard is firm, although in some quarters it was quoted, as well as backs, at slightly easier prices.

Poultry has not entered its season and is temporarily quiet. Honey is firm, with the demand firm. Cheese quotations at the various boards are easier, although a better price should be received before long. The old variety is firm, with the demand normal.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Dressed hogs are 50c higher, in view of a temporary scarcity. Otherwise the market is steady, with only a fair volume of business moving. The main cause for this dullness seems to be the quantities of fresh vegetables and fruits that people are buying.

Butter—Butter is still on the toboggan slide, being two cents lower than our last quotation. Supplies are coming in very freely, and the most satisfactory thing about the present condition, according to local men, is that the drop is coming all at once, instead of a cent now and another one a week later. There will probably be little further change for some time. Receipts for the week are 9,257 packages, as against 5,409 packages same week last year. In view of these figures it can only be the increasing consumption that keeps the price where it is.

Provisions—Another upward movement in the hog market has occurred during the past week, due to a shortage of supplies. Hogs are reported scarce throughout the country, and from $9 to $9.40 is being offered. Some specially selected brought $10.25 per cwt., weighed, off cars. Dressed hogs are also firm, and while the price ranged from $12.25 to $12.75 for the most part, some offerings of $13 were reported, and it is believed the latter price may become more general. One dealer reported backs a little easier on account of an accumulation of stock, but others did not quote a reduction, maintaining that the market was steady and firm.

Butter—Prices suffered a bad fall during the past week. Five cents is probably the outside figure of the decline. It was fully expected in one sense, although some believed it would be a slow, rather than sudden slump. Butter is coming in freely, practically more being received than can be readily handled. In regard to the following prices some quotations give the outside price one cent higher.

Fresh creamery print	0 24 0 25
Farmers' separator butter	0 22 0 23
Dairy prints, choice	0 20 0 21
Baking butter	0 17 0 18

Cheese—There is nothing featuring the cheese market. The price on the boards has dropped from 10 7-16c to 10⅝c. Reports state that not all the offerings were sold. Old cheese is firm at 12¾c for large, and 13c for twins. New stocks are beginning to move at 12c.

Eggs—The egg market is fairly steady. Receipts have been liberal, with a resultant decline in price. It is learned that farmers are receiving 17½c to 18c a dozen, and at these figures they are being stored away for next winter. This should make eggs dear when the next snow flies. The production seems to be undiminished. It may be said that the prices to the trade vary. Some quote 19c to 19½c, while others go as high as 20c to 21c.

Poultry—This market has changed but slightly. The farmers are busily engaged with other work, and, besides, hens are more valuable as the producers of eggs. It is expected that in a short time a marked improvement will be felt.

FAVORS FIXING PRICES.

Same Questions Affecting the Grocery Trade in U.S. as in Canada.

Springfield, Ill., May 19.—At the annual convention of the National Association of Retail Grocers here, President Sullivan referred to "a growing disposition manifest by the larger interests to absorb the smaller interests and the only salvation of the retailer lay along the pathway of organization."

He cautioned the retailers to keep close watch on their business in order to avoid leakages and thereby cut down operating expenses, and that, owing to the keenness of competition, the grocery business is no longer one of physical endurance and horse strength and long hours, but one which required work from the neck up instead of from the neck down.

He favored the system of placing a protected price on proprietary articles, maintaining that no one body could question the justice and righteousness of manufacturers protecting their own trademarks.

Frank B. Connolly of the committee on price maintenance reported converts among the manufacturers to this system of protecting the retailers' profit, especially on the Pacific Coast, and gave the further information that manufacturers throughout the country were watching its operation closely with a view to falling in line.

There was also a heated discussion relative to the action of the canners' convention at Atlantic City in February, at which time that organization adopted resolutions favoring the passage of a parcels post measure at this session of Congress. Considerable correspondence was presented to the convention by Secretary Green showing the action of the canners as well as other correspondence indicating that the packers would not rescind their attitude.

The retailers take offence at the attitude of the canners that parcels post would save them considerable money in shipping samples. The question was disposed of temporarily by referring the whole proposition to the resolutions committee.

If the spirit of the delegates is any criterion as to their attitude something warm in the way of a strong resolution, if not open declaration of war can be looked for.

L. F. Padberg said that the retailers could expect little assistance from the jobbers and that they seem to be content only when they were able to make the retailers buy of them and then see fit to sell the retailer's customers.

Looks for Decline in Price of Manitoba Flour

Flour Authority Expects That Condition by the End of May—Export Trade has Been Affected by the Death of King Edward—Heavy Exporting From Russia—Cereals are Quiet.

"There is nothing doing in export trade," remarked a representative of a large milling concern this week. The death of King Edward has had a quieting effect which will hardly be removed until after the funeral. The wheat market is experiencing what may well be termed an over supply. Russia is exporting from five to six millions of bushels a week. Wheat is pouring from the Canadian west with the result that a dulling influence has been felt in the market. The United States crop report for May just issued contains the following:

"The acreage abandoned was put at 1,439,000, which was fully more than anybody expected, but to counteract this the condition of the number of acres presumed to be left to come to maturity was 82.1, compared with 80.8 on April 1st, and 83.5 on May 1st, 1909, and a fourteen years' average of 85.2. The number of acres left in crop on May 1st is estimated at 29,044,000, being 714,000 acres more than was estimated to have been harvested in 1909. Since May 1st, however, the plowing up of poor fields has continued, and when harvest is over our opinion is that there will be fewer acres than were harvested last year. Besides this, with four and a half million acres so poor as to make it better to turn them into some other crop, there must be a tremendous acreage that will produce only a very medium yield."

It is generally anticipated that Manitoba flour was ripe for a decline in prices. "It may not occur this week," remarked one flour man, "but I will be greatly mistaken if by the end of May there has not been a drop in the present quotations." He pointed to the heavy supply here, and the influence of congested markets elsewhere. The prospect of a bumper crop this autumn also has its effect.

COMPLAIN OF SLOW PAYS.

Smith's Falls, Ont., May 18.—Local merchants are having considerable trouble with the "slow pay" and are looking for some system to overcome this.

A few years ago a system was well under way and merchants were beginning to get results by united action. But this latter went backwards and the merchants were placed in as unfavorable circumstances as before.

One grocer stated recently that he has taken in as much as $500 in one pay night, but then during the next two weeks or so he could scarcely get a cent. If he sold $50 worth of goods in a day he never secured more than $5 cash. This is one of the troubles the grocers here complain of and they would like to secure suggestions from others.

Experience!

You remember in the old days there was a system of apprenticeship usually about four years' grinding to learn a business.

After serving this term one was supposed to be quite proficient. In time one became an expert in a chosen field—if one stayed with the work.

Experience made one such.

Now, it's fully twenty-five years since we began making Bordeaux Chocolates. In the first few years we learned all they could teach us about them.

But we were not satisfied. We did not feel we had attained perfection. We kept on plugging.

Eventually we considered we had reached highest attainable perfection.

Everyone complimented our quality by imitating it.

So we registered our brand—for your protection—the public's—our own.

That perfect confection, the result of our experimenting, our experience, has since been known, and is now famous as the

and it's an all-the-time winner.

Color, You Know, is Comparative

COMES along a salesman who says — "Sure, my flour's white."

Happens another along proclaiming—"Don't care—mine's whiter."

And a third chirping—"Mine's the whitest, you bet."

Which only goes to show that of salesmen both over the counter as well as over the grip, some are positive, even comparative—but mostly SUPERLATIVE.

Somehow or other the womenfolks have got to insisting on PURE WHITE as a flour prerequisite.

They want UNIFORMITY, which goes without saying.

They demand STRENGTH and NUTRITION—evident.

And they insist on PURITY and WHOLESOMENESS—correct.

And—oh, yes—"I want my flour white"—like the "snawdrift" in Annie Laurie.

We want to tell YOU about a little incident which happened in business hours a while back.

A fellow came along to sell us a bleacher (if he could)—told us how very white and nice-looking 'twould make our FIVE ROSES.

He was a sure-enough expert—had sold many a bleaching apparatus-s-s. Of course, Brother Grocer, you already know that FIVE ROSES flour has never been bleached, hasn't even a bowing acquaintance with the aforesaid.

Well, we showed him a sample of our FIVE ROSES, and he insisted that it was bleached.

Said that otherwise no hard spring wheat flour could look so pure, and wholesome, and inviting, etc., etc.

What do you think of that, Brother Grocer?

A flour that combines Strength out of the ordinary, uniform Evenness, reliable Quality, with an unbleached whiteness that can deceive even the practised eye of a prominent bleaching expert.

FIVE ROSES, you see, is so absolutely pure and clean that it simply doesn't need artificial whitening.

Do you know another flour like that?

Prices range from $1 to $7 per dozen bunches. Cucumbers are scarce. Celery is growing scarce, and arrivals are of poor quality. Beets and sweet potatoes show strengthened prices. Fish—Haddock is now more plentiful, while river fish are gradually decreasing in volume. Gaspe salmon is still high, but the trade is looking for larger arrivals and lower prices in the near future. Halibut, both from east and west, is in good supply. Reports from the Pacific coast are, however, that the production up to date is behind last year's. A good demand is looked for this week, on account of there being three fast days.

Green Fruits—The fruit market maintains the firmness of tone which has been a feature during the season. Pineapples are active at a price that is slightly easier than a week ago. Oranges and lemons are firm, with what some of those intimate with the market term an upward tendency. The navel market will be wound up within a few weeks and will be followed by Valencias. The lemon outlook is strong with the demand beginning to show itself to a slight extent. Strawberries have remained stationary. Prices have not slumped and the supply and demand make both ends meet. Bananas are arriving in abundance and are shipped loose while green at 25c a bunch less. Cherries are a little easier. Grape fruit assumed a firmer tone in the better stock of which the supply is small. Fancy apples are firmer owing to a recent brace that occurred. The market on the whole is strong. The quality is good and the demand is steady.

Vegetables — Satisfactory conditions are reported prevalent in this market. Owing to a short supply, Texas-Bermuda onions advanced sharply. The tomato market underwent a similar operation and it is believed that prices will not be easier until the homegrown tomatoes are received. The demand is lively. Other vegetables are easier, thanks to a good supply. Potatoes are, if anything, a little firmer. The dealers state that the market is encouraging.

NOTES FROM FRUITDOM.

The general manager of the Florida Citrus exchange, stated recently that the celery crop in that state is so heavy this year that it is left standing in the fields, and in some cases the growers have turned their hogs into the fields to eat it.

A remarkable hybrid fruit, half orange and half grapefruit has been grown at Alhambra, U.S.A., and is attracting considerable attention. The fruit was grown on an orange tree which stands next to a grapefruit tree and is about the size of a 96 orange.

Cultivated raspberries are being marketed in Florida at 15 cts. a quart. They are the first of the season.

Reports state that there is a heavy crop of California cherries this year.

Quality rather than quantity has been agitated among the deciduous fruit growers of California. They are being urged to thin the fruit heavily in order to secure larger and finer fruit.

A Red Bluff, California, report states that the fruit crop in that district "will beat anything ever before produced, with the exception of prunes." The prune crop will likely be short. Estimates are made that it is less than half of last year's crop. One statement is to the effect that it will not reach 20 per cent. of previous crops.

Demerara Province and its Trade Possibilities

Besides Producing Sugar and Rice it is a Great Fruit-Growing Country—Trade Relations With Canada Improving — Some Features About the Capital, Georgetown.

(Staff correspondence by D. Williams.)

Demerara Province, in British Guiana, South America, is perhaps the least known of any of the British West India possessions. It is, however, not by any means "the least among the thousands of Judah," having an area of 76,000 square miles. The population is rather sparse considering its enormous size, there being scarcely three hundred thousand people in it, of whom some eighty thousand are East Indians, brought out by the colonial government to work upon the sugar estates.

Georgetown, its commercial centre, is quite a modern, up-to-date community, having well-laid-out streets, electric lights, electric tramway, an excellent sewage system, and splendid waterworks. The water, however, supplied for the system is only used for fire extinguishing purposes and watering the streets, it being too muddy for drinking purposes.

A striking feature is the magnificent canals built of concrete and running at intervals all through the city. It used to be said that Demerara was the white man's grave, but since the construction of the canals, which thoroughly drain the city, it is quite healthy. One of the sights of Georgetown, to which every visitor and tourist is directed, is its great sea wall, running for some two miles along the shore, and built of stone and concrete. The object of this great structure is to keep out the sea at high tide from flooding the street, Georgetown and much of the adjacent country being very little above ocean level. Demerara, although its growth is slow, is capable of great development.

What Demerara Produces.

On the rich land around Georgetown and extending for miles on either bank of the great Demerara river, there are some of the largest sugar plantations in the West Indies, and rice is beginning to be grown in large quantities, the country being well suited for both those crops, while thousands of acres are yet undeveloped. All kinds of tropical fruit grows in abundance, but so far it has received little attention. Further back in the country are great primeval forests of some of the finest timber in the world, and in the interior there are said to be vast savannahs capable of pasturing thousands of cattle all the year round, there being no such thing as frost or snow in those regions.

The great need of the country is capital. Before much can be done, railroads must be built. Under present conditions the lumberman cannot profitably follow the timber far from the rivers, the cost of transportation through a country such as Demerara being too heavy for profit.

Ranching upon the savannahs would also, under present conditions, be unprofitable, on account of the difficulty in bringing the cattle to a market through great swamps and wildernesses and across unfordable rivers.

The country is also rich in minerals, gold being found in considerable quantities, also precious stones, diamonds and emeralds. It may be wondered why such a country, much of whose latent wealth has been so long known, has not made greater strides in the way of development, but southern countries, as a rule, do not advance as quickly as their northern neighbors. It is asserted that some of the laws of the colony are not as favorable to its development as they might be. The timber regulations are considered unreasonable, and the mining laws are looked upon by the prospectors as absurd. We met two prospectors in Georgetown who had come all the way from Cobalt, with the intention of exploiting some of the mining lands, but they assured us if they had known the conditions imposed, they would never have come.

The Trade With Canada.

The trade conditions between Demerara and Canada are not what they might be, but are improving. The reasons for their slow growth are much the same as in the other West Indies, but the people of the colony are just as anxious for closer relations as any of the others. If Canadian capitalists and business men would direct some of their surplus capital and energy in this direction, they would find profitable investment for the former and abundant scope for the latter.

Owing to the stable conditions of government, the law-abiding principles of the people, and the undoubted ultimate profit and security for their money, we cannot help thinking Demerara a much more inviting field than some of the adventures that are being made with Canadian capital in Latin countries.

Whether Canadians render assistance in the upbuilding of this future great country or not, nothing can long stay its progress, for before many years it is bound to become one of the great sources of supply for the world's needs.

FRIENDS—NOT GROWLERS

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes never comes back to you with growls from the housekeeper. It is always up to the same high standard maintained for forty years, and is always just right. That's why we have the thousands upon thousands of grocers pushing it everywhere. Grocers don't wish to run the risk of losing a good customer by passing out an inferior stove polish, which is wrong more often than it is right. RISING SUN makes friends for you and for us in every household where you put it.

MORSE BROS., Props. - Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

The GROCER'S Big Spring Number

¶ Every Dealer in Canada will take an unusual interest in The Grocer's Big Spring Number, to be issued May 27th. There are few of them who will not make money by reading and studying it closely. There are few of them who will not keep it for reference for a considerable time.

¶ In the Spring Number we will get right down to facts and figures in showing retailers how they may improve their methods of buying, stock-keeping, handling credits, store arrangement, assorting, display, advertising, stopping leaks, cost accounting, delivery, salesmanship, etc.

¶ The Spring Number will be given over almost entirely to "Scientific Methods of Retailing." Each one of the series of articles coming under this heading will be founded on definite information gathered first-hand from the best sources.

NOTICE TO MANUFACTURERS

We have sold out our warehousing and forwarding business and are now prepared to handle two or three additional high-class lines selling to the Western wholesale grocery trade.

To Maintain and Increase Permanent Trade

We handle only articles of known worth—the tried and tested kind—articles whose intrinsic merit has raised them far above the commonplace. We do this because we like to feel that the folks who buy them are, year after year, adding permanent trade to the business of the grocer who sells the goods. From our own selfish point of view we believe the principle applies with telling force.

We Know of no Safer or Surer Way

There is a good living profit on every article we are privileged to represent—each of its kind is, to our way of thinking, a splendid example of honorable manufacture. And because of that important fact we advertise their strong features fearlessly, over our own name, in The Canadian Grocer and elsewhere, every week of the year.

Scientific Retailing

The first step is to carry stock that sells, and that sells as much from the quality that is in it as from the "push" the manufacturers put back of it.

Pure Gold Food Products

do not represent the whole sum of scientific retailing—but every "scientific retailer" will welcome the selling opportunity these goods offer.

For instance :—

Scientific Buying consists, among other things, in not overbuying. You can't overbuy Pure Gold goods because you can return unsold goods at any time and get your money back.

Stock Keeping—It is particularly easy to keep up your stock of Pure Gold Goods—it's such an active stock that it is before you daily.

Store Arrangement—Arrange Pure Gold goods within easy reach—you will have to reach for them often in a day.

Display—Pure Gold packages are so neat and so compact that they dress any shelves.

Advertising—We are doing that—lots of it. Tie our campaign to yours by mentioning in your advertising the fact that you keep Pure Gold goods.

Salesmanship—It is good salesmanship to tell your customers about Pure Gold goods. They will buy them of you if they know you have them.

These goods can be had of all jobbers and can be shipped from Pure Gold stocks at Victoria, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Montreal, Toronto and Calgary.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST WAFER

In the quaint old town of Mydrecht, near Amsterdam, Holland, is situated the biscuit factory of the Firma, Wed. B. Van Doesburg, who owns and operates one of the most valuable trade secrets of this age—for the manufacture of a filled wafer now famous on both sides of the Atlantic. Its name is FROU-FROU. It is conceded by experts to be the masterpiece of the baker's art.

Brands of Flour That You Can Rely On During The Hottest Weather

"More Bread and Better Bread"

PURITY
THREE STARS BATTLE

Daily Capacity, 7,000 Barrels

¶ You've got to use discrimination in buying flour for use in the hot weather—otherwise you'll have inferior batches—and displeased customers.

¶ "Soft" wheat flours are too weak—lack the staying qualities necessary to resist summer heat. They ferment far too rapidly—and you know what that means.

¶ Imperfectly milled and improperly aged "hard" wheat flours will cause you trouble too. They lack the required degree of gluten-elasticity to resist fermentation. They haven't enough body. The hot weather exhausts them. Instead of getting big, bulky loaves, you are presented with small, puny affairs.

¶ To avoid those hot weather troubles use Purity, Medalion, Three Stars and Battle flour. Perfectly milled from the highest grade of hard wheat—and properly aged. They will stand by you and do their duty during the hottest days—and at all seasons. They have the body and the strength. Summer heat cannot exhaust them. They have that elastic, gluten quality that resists too rapid fermentation. Large, fresh, snowy-white loaves, of matchless flavor, are the result when they are used.

¶ Make up your mind to save trouble and expense this summer. Buy Purity, Medalion, Three Stars, Battle—the trustworthy brands.

JERSEY CREAM SODAS

and hundreds of varieties of Fancy Sweet Biscuits and Confectionery

Established in 1858 by T. McCormick in a very small shop, about 12 by 18 feet.

Now, look at the picture of the largest biscuit and candy factory in Canada, owned and managed by his three sons.

The factory is also the most modern on this continent — is thoroughly ventilated and kept scrupulously clean.

Pre-eminently the best.

McCormick's Biscuits are made from Best Blended Flour, First Quality June Creamery Butter, Fresh Sweet, Whole Milk, Pure Sugar, etc.

All materials are analyzed by an expert chemist and therefore McCormicks are in a position to guarantee the Purity and Quality of their biscuits.

No other biscuit factory in Canada employs a chemist to insure wholesomeness of its biscuits.

Continental Reputation

Great numbers of discriminating American women-visitors to Canada have pronounced McCormick's Jersey Cream Sodas vastly superior to the American crackers. They have even insisted on the factory shipping a supply to their grocers, stating that they were willing to pay the duty, if by so doing they could enjoy such a luxury.

We have appreciated the confidence and assistance of the Grocery trade in Canada in placing our biscuits before the consumers and hope still further to merit your approval in our present efforts to assist your sales of our biscuits by advertising them extensively amongst the consumers. We hope you will keep on hand a good supply of

The Public Demand Grocery Stores of Sanitary Construction

Ceiling Plate No. 444 used in this Store

The time is passing rapidly when intelligent consumers—those whose trade is profitable and desirable—will purchase food products in a slovenly store.

The grocer of to-morrow will need to be a scientific merchant—a pure food specialist—and public opinion will make it absolutely necessary that his store be a model of cleanliness, and constructed so as to be perfectly sanitary.

The walls and ceilings of the stores the public like to patronize are never made of wood or plaster, simply because these materials soon become dirty, cracked, discolored, unsanitary; and it is almost impossible to keep them clean and attractive.

"Metallic" Ceilings and Walls are not only highly desirable in the modern grocery store, but they are a real economy, outside entirely of their influence on sales. They are handsome in appearance; never become discolored or cracked; can be cleaned by wiping with a damp cloth. They are perfectly sanitary; they will last as long as the building, and are absolutely fireproof.

Metallic Ceilings and Walls are our specialties. We carry a large stock in appropriate designs. Write us for estimate, giving shape and dimensions of ceilings and walls to be covered.

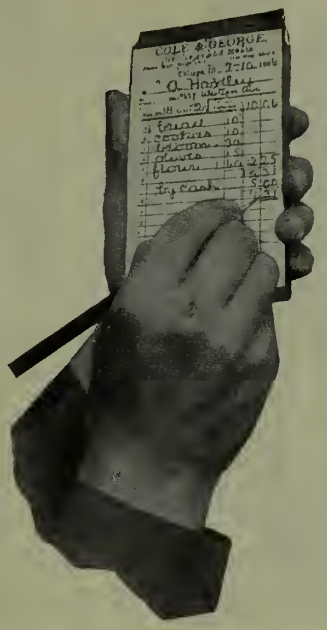
Time Saved is Money Gained

¶ You will be interested if we can show you how to keep accurate accounts of any transaction in your business with only one writing.

¶ That's just precisely what is accomplished by the McCaskey Account Register System. At the same time it reduces the possibility of error to a minimum and abolishes absolutely all liability of dispute with customers. It also eliminates all loss through forgotten charges; facilitates collection; checks over-crediting; takes care of C.O.D. sales; cash on account; produce and exchange sales; and shows you instantaneously the exact state of any of your accounts at a single glance.



The McCaskey Account Register System

IS SIMPLICITY ITSELF

¶ You enter all credit orders in a counter check book. After adding to it the total shown on the last slip filed, you give the duplicate slip to the customer and the original slip you file in a spring clip under that customer's number. Thus every account is up to the minute all the time without any copying or posting. Twenty accounts are visible at a single glance and every account consists of the only documents admitted as evidence in a court of law—the original entries.

¶ This is only an outline of the system. We want to send you an illustrated catalogue showing the system from A to Z. You will be amazed at the ease and cheapness with which you can keep accounts with the McCaskey Account Register.

Every Drop Costs Money!

ICE BILLS are an outright loss. Keep that loss as small as possible by using a McCray Refrigerator. The McCray Refrigerator uses less ice than others and at the same time gives efficient refrigeration because it has BETTER INSULATION (keeps warm air out and cold air in) than other refrigerators. Think this over! INSULATION is the secret and you can only get McCray Insulation in a McCray Refrigerator. We printed our "Catalog No. 66" especially to tell you how McCray Grocers' Refrigerators work and why they save ice. It makes every point of the refrigeration question so plain you cannot fail to understand it. Send us a postal with your name and address and ask us for "Catalog No. 66." We'll send it FREE.

"Enterprise" Economy

An Enterprising grocer, who does things right, uses an "Enterprise" Electrically-Driven Coffee Mill

The right way is also the cheapest way in the end. It always pays. Take the experience of the Philadelphia grocer who grinds 15,000 pounds of coffee a month with an "Enterprise" Mill electrically-driven at a cost for current of $3.00.

He bought the Mill as a great convenience—a time and labor saver, and an up-to-date attraction for his store. Its economy astonished him.

Look through our catalogue and you will find Mills of any capacity, any power required, for direct or alternating current. Your local power supply company will co-operate with advice and assistance.

The Mill illustrated here is No. 08712, fitted with ½ horse power motor for alternating current. Capacity of each iron hopper, 6 pounds of coffee. One Mill is fitted with grinders for granulating, the other for pulverizing. Granulates 2 pounds of coffee per minute, and can be regulated for fine or coarse grinding while mill is running. If you haven't the catalogue showing all our Mills, write for a copy to-day.

Berkel's Improved Slicing Machine

BERKEL'S Latest Improvement Patent Knife Guard to protect operators from accidents by thoughtlessly getting their hands against the circular knife. The only slicing machine in the world that has this protection.

BERKEL'S is the machine with the Patent Automatic Sharpener, by means of which the keen cutting edge on the knife is constantly maintained. The only machine with an automatic sharpening device. Simply press the Carborundum wheel shown in the cut above the knife downward and it strikes the knife edge at just the proper angle, a few turns of the wheel and your knife has an edge like a razor.

Will Slice Boiled Ham and Bacon Down to the Last Ounce

We call attention to the photographic production of two plates of boiled ham, there is just one pound of ham on each plate, it was all cut from the same piece, the eight slices on the right hand plate were cut with an ordinary knife, while the twenty uniform slices on the left hand plate were sliced on a slicing machine. This is an average result. The difference can be more or less marked according to the skill and time given the hand cutting, however the machine never can vary, the customer is always protected by dealing where there is a BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine. Dried Beef can be sliced thinner, quicker and better on BERKEL'S than any other made. The BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine is now used by Grocers, Butchers, Department stores, Delicatessens, Hotels, Restaurants, Hospitals, Educational Institutions, Steamship and Railway Companies, Charitable Institutions, Penal Institutions, the Army and Navy, Soldiers' Homes, etc. BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine can be set to cut automatically (14) different thicknesses, from 1-40 of an inch up to ¾ of an inch, "it cuts bread or meat equally well," requires no skill to operate and will slice perfectly more meat or bread in twelve minutes than the most expert cutter can slice by hand in an hour. While it is a hand machine, for several years many packers, as well as grocers and marketmen who do a large sliced meat business, have been running their BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machines by mechanical power. Enough pieces of bacon can be put on this machine to cut 300 slices a minute. This should be of interest to those who put up bacon in boxes, glass or tin cans.

In the Rush and Fret of Business the most skilled accountants are hopelcssly outclassed by a child, assisted by the HAINER BOOKKEEPING MACHINE.

The machine that instantaneously tells you what any customer owes you at any given minute, that invoices, receipts, registers the cash, places seven safeguards over it, and over the credit five, that automatically records the day, the hour and the minute of every transaction and BANISHES AFTER WORK.

Mr. Grocer:

Your cnergies are needed to dcvelop your business, to study its ceaseless demands, the changing tastes, the problems of over and under stocking, the prompt sales of perishables, the individual preferences of your customers, the intricate magic of a restless market. Every element of business-building demands a clear judgment, a keen perception. To exhaust those energies with the worries of accounting means, at best to you, STAGNATION.

Why Not Feed Your Worries to a Machine and Put Your Brains Really into the Business?

The HAINER BOOKKEEPING MACHINE is a cash rcgister, an autographic registcr, an account register, and a time-recorder in one machine.

IMPORTANT! An account is filed or found in the sectional register of our machine in from one-half to one-tenth of the time required upon any other account register, selling, in many cases, at a much higher price than our complete machine. MAKE US PROVE THIS.

Note thc thrce detached accounts here illustrated. When an account is running, thc total, up to thc minute, is always in the space following the name. When paid, the space is blank. No indcx, no tumbling pages or partitions—no searching. You have simply to LOOK.

For Your Store—
A Necessity, Not a Luxury

An Embossed Steel Ceiling is not merely an expensive "decoration." In any modern retailing establishment it is a money-making, trade-drawing, actual necessity.

It greatly assists your fixtures and displays to present an attractive interior, goes a long way toward making your building fire-proof and adds tone to your store and business. Cannot crack, warp or fall down, is unaffected by heat or dampness, and after the first coat of paint requires no further attention. The cost of a "Classik" Ceiling is reasonable, and it may be applied without serious interruption to business. If your store needs one, why not get it now?

To the Manufacturer or Wholesaler——

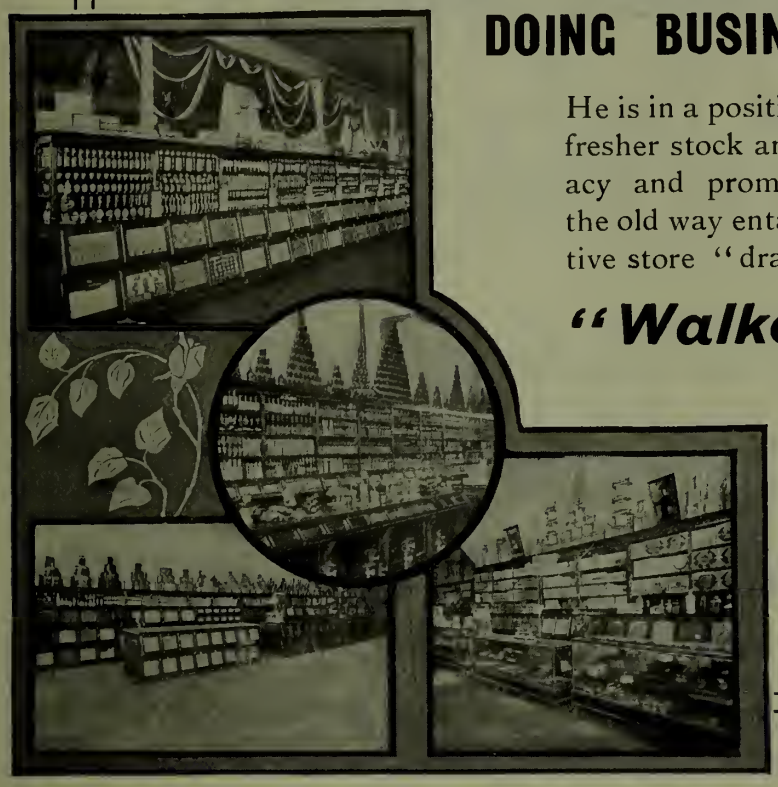
If it were possible to employ a traveller who could call on 7,000 of the best dealers all through Canada every week, what salary would you figure he'd be worth—even supposing he did nothing more than go in and shake hands with these dealers, under such circumstances they'd be glad to see him.

Would he be worth $200, $300 or $500 per week? Many a house would pretty nearly let him fix his own salary.

Equip an advertisement in the Canadian Grocer with a verbal handshake for every dealer in Canada, and a frank, brief, pointed talk about your goods and you add a traveller to your staff who will make 7.000 calls a week for you at a salary of $4 to $8 a week—less than you would pay a first-class stenographer.

Of course this traveller won't displace any of your regular salesmen, but he will help them to sell more goods and open up more new accounts.

THE GROCER WITH MODERN STORE EQUIPMENT HAS A DISTINCT ADVANTAGE OVER COMPETITORS DOING BUSINESS IN THE OLD WAY.



He is in a position to give his customers cleaner and fresher stock and to handle his orders with accuracy and promptness at much less expense than the old way entails, while a clean, bright and attractive store "draws" customers and "holds" them.

Self-Measuring Systems
For Handling
Kerosene or Gasolene

Emphasize one feature that is important above all others in the general store –

CLEANLINESS

From the slopping and dripping of faucets and funnels, the porous boards of the floor near the oil supply become soaked through and through, making the appearance unsightly and unclean. In any store under the old method of handling oil, this condition exists — it cannot be avoided. The merchandise stored near such a place is easily contaminated. After drawing oil the least odor from hands or clothes is absorbed by the paper used to wrap up merchandise, which quickly becomes infected with the disagreeable and nauseous taste of oil.

The only system that will remove these objections is one that will hold the oil in a tank absolutely leak and evaporation proof, measure the oil accurately into the customer's can with neither spilling nor slopping, dispose of unclean measures and funnels, and one in which the flow of the oil is instantly cut off the moment the desired amount is drawn. All of these features and more are found in the Bowser Adjustable Measure Oil Equipments. They will meet any conditions and requirements, being made in more than fifty different styles.

If you are interested, you need only drop a card, asking for Bulletin 5, and you will then receive full information.

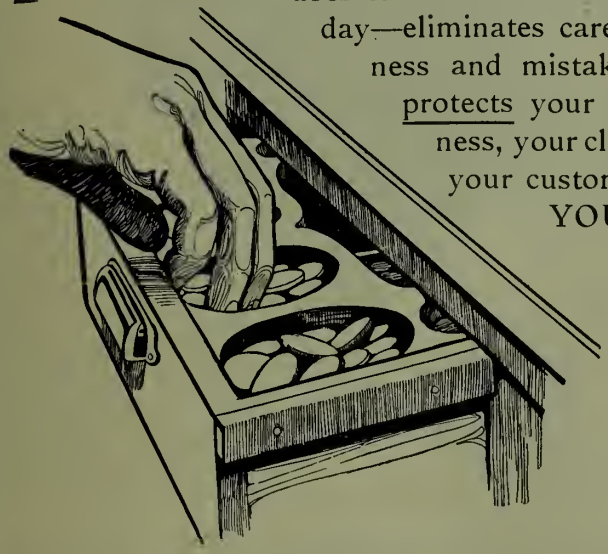
has its best exponent in The NATIONAL CASH REGISTER

The true Science of Retailing consists in guarding your profits—and that's a harder matter than merely selling the most goods for the highest price. That's where the National Cash Register does its work—saves your profits—and does it a hundred times a day—eliminates carelessness and mistakes—protects your business, your clerks, your customers, YOU!



How many mistakes in your cash to-day? No man can tell unless each clerk's sales have been separately itemized and every cent, in and out, checked by the mechanically correct National Cash Register System.

Over 825,000 merchants in every part of the Globe are using the National Cash Register—because it saves them money. How about you? Remember—No one ever yet bought a National—it pays for itself over and over again in any business.

Is your cash handled this way?

The open cash drawer is a menace to your profits. Your help may be as honest as the day but mistakes will happen!

You will save time and money by trusting to our great guarantee—it has never been equalled.

"We guarantee to furnish a better Cash Register for less money than any other house in the World."

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

SCIENTIFIC RETAILING.

This is an age of science.

The men who have made outstanding successes in the world's business arena are those who have been able to see into the future and who have judged conditions on a scientific basis.

That erratic aerial wanderer—Halley's comet—which has just left us on another long journey through space was predicted 75 years ago by men of science—men who have been thorough and exact in their calculations.

So must merchants who look for the best results in their business be scientific. They must be familiar with every phase of retailing; they must be scientific in their buying and selling; in their bookkeeping and in their advertising; their delivering, displaying, weighing and collecting accounts.

The age demands such men, and these are the men who, with probably a few exceptions, will be the real Canadian retail grocers of the future.

How is this scientific knowledge to be secured?

It must be got from close application to the business and a study of the conditions surrounding it. This demands a review of the successful methods of successful merchants whether by reading, personal visits or by experience during apprenticeship, and it demands a watchful eye on the markets.

Scientific retailers have minds of their own. They use them and particularly when it comes to buying.

Be men of science.

WHY SUGAR ADVANCED AGAIN.

Sugar advanced ten cents on Monday last. This forward step was not unexpected; indeed it was generally looked for and The Grocer some time ago called the attention of the trade to the conditions under which nothing but higher prices could well have been anticipated.

The same condtions are still at work. The frnit season gives promise of being up to the average and there is a strong likelihood that it may be unusually heavy. At the least, this should afford better opportunities to the masses to lay aside a large stock of preserves.

There is added to this the fact that the visible supply of sugar is greatly less than that which was on hand at this time last year.

Europe's supply has become exhausted and raw sugar is decidedly firm. Under these conditions it is easy to grasp the fact that sugar at the new price is valuable and within a few months its value should be increased.

EFFECTS OF RUBBER CRAZE.

The big financial centres of the world are "going crazy" over rubber. How far reaching this will be is difficult to determine, but at the present time it is affecting the tapioca and sago markets.

Rubber plantations are supreme in countries which produce all three and reports indicate that the sago palm is being displaced for rubber trees by the natives and owners of such groves, whose eyes have all been turned on rubber production.

Advances in tapioca and sago prices are already being experienced by the trade.

Tea men fear that the same may soon apply to the tea markets and many attribute the recent firmness to the attention being given to rubber.

Just how long this will last nobody knows. And in the meantime grocers will likely have to pay more for their tapioca and sago and perhaps a few other things.

SALESMANSHIP THAT SELLS.

Salesmanship is a big question. Some possess the fundamental principles of salesmanship and many think they do who don't.

Scientific salesmanship is rare for the simple reason that few salesmen develop their latent abilities to the proper extent.

You have often wondered why you couldn't sell a certain customer an article she inquired about or that you considered she should purchase.

Lack of salesmanship was probably the reason.

To be a scientific retail salesman one must first know the goods he sells; he must be a judge of human nature and must form his opinions of individuals rapidly; he must be posted on seasonable goods and their usefulness; he has to suggest but he must be careful to keep within proper limits.

The day is coming, when only retail store salesmen who have developed their latent abilities to the scientific stage will be considered valuable.

But this much must be realized; it is not salesmanship that simply provides a customer with the goods she asks for.

THE MAINTENANCE OF PROFITS.

At the end of the next quarter of a century will there be any price cutting in the grocery store?

Let us consider the present conditions and the progresss that has been made by trade evolution—if any has been made—before we answer this.

Years ago few merchants knew anything about price maintenance. They did not study buying and selling or the allotment of profits; they did not figure on the expense of maintaining and operating a business.

What is the result? To-day there are few standing grocery businesses that were established 50 or 60 years ago.

But the trade is being educated through organization, and an interchange of each other's methods and ideas through trade papers. To-day the question of price maintenance and adequate profits is a big problem.

The feeling against price cutting is growing and now-a-days there are but one or two offenders in an ordinary Canadian town.

About a month ago a price cutter in a small town failed for the second or third time and he wants to compromise at 20 or 30 cents on the dollar. His competitors lay it to his neglect in maintaining prices and are annoyed that he should get out of his difficulties at 20 cents on the dollar.

Yes, the tendency is toward the maintenance of profits and the scientific grocer in the year 1935 will get his just profit in every case.

LOOK TO ASSORTMENT.

The majority of Canadian grocers have frequently been reminded that people send to the mail order house for goods which they do not carry.

To remedy this they will have to stock a better assortment and be prepared to supply all demands. It is a well known fact that many stock up too heavily in certain lines and neglect to stock at all in others. This is frequently what causes many to send out of town for their goods.

It would be better to buy carefully in all. Spread the amount set apart for buying purposes over a wide area, get the assortment and, if other conditions are equal, the catalogue houses will attract little of the trade.

PROTECTING PROFITS.

Retailers have often passively suffered through having the wings of their profits clipped on certain articles.

Prices to them advance while they do not advance their prices to the consumer. Naturally they are losing money on such goods in comparison to their former profits.

Of course, if the price to them is raised a little on one or two articles the difference would be slight; but if the wholesale prices of several advance, a year's business will be shorn of a large sum in profits.

A retailer is entitled to a fair profit on his outlay for his risk and work in serving the public and to a great extent it's his own fault if he doesn's get it. He can control the situation if he wishes and there is no reason why he should work for nothing. That he should make a large profit on one article and a small one on another is not fair to either—all of which brings us back to the question of maintenance of prices.

If the wholesale price goes up let the retailer follow suit and obtain his just margin. But then co-operation is required to bring about the desired result.

This is what the scientific grocer is doing and what he will do in the future.

STOP THE HARD LUCK STORIES.

The man who has no hard luck story to tell is one who is making, or is sure to make a success. If you hear a man start in to tell you about his troubles you immediately think, "Well, if he only would stop to listen to mine he would find out what hard luck really is."

The truth of the matter is, we all, to a more or less extent have "hard luck." More often it is misnamed and should be called plain "misjudgment." In fact, if a man were perfect in every particular of judgment there would be no hard luck for him.

The best way with such troubles is to keep them to ourselves. It does no good to anyone to tell them to his neighbor, and often starts him on a career of news spreading, which will in the end do him harm.

If troubles are thick use the head to nullify their effect.

RELY UPON YOURSELF.

The power of perception and ability to read human nature has much influence upon your work in selling to the consumer. This power and ability comes intuitively. It will not make its appearance suddenly, like a flash of light, or that which we term a presentment. If you wait for it to make its appearance in that way you will be grievously disappointed. It comes only through close association with the consumers, making its appearance in so gradual a manner that you are not cognizant of it and do not actually realize the possession of it.

The salesman is an observer; he knows things; he knows what the people eat; what they speak; their desires, wants and needs. Remember, the key to the whole situation is in being able to present your goods to your customer in the same light in which he sees it.

To most successfully guard against failure in selling to the consumer you should rely wholly upon yourself, believe nothing you hear until you are able to learn from personal observation that it is true; never take anything for granted, but find out for yourself whether it is so.

If you are told that certain parties have placed their orders, don't accept the bald statement, but see them yourself; if that the trade is held or controlled by another party, prove it. No trade is held or owned, as the consumer is an independent operator, and buys where he thinks he can do the best. No manufacturer or merchant can possibly cover a territory and sell to every one. There is always room for one more.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

How a Modern Meat Slicing Machine Saved $60 in One Year — Preventing Losses in Buying Goods—Retail Salesmen's Methods for Holding Customers—A Merchant Who Visits for New Ideas—Suggestions for Displaying Goods in the Store—Grocer With Inventive Mind Who Devises a New Silent Salesman—Edmonton Merchant Checks Annual Loss of $225.

Meat Slicer Saved About $60.

Regina, Sask., May 27.—Pennies make dollars and little slices make the whole ham. If, therefore, frequent losses of pennies amount to an appreciable sum, as it assuredly does, then by the same principle continued losses of thin slices of ham finally mean the loss of a considerable piece of that ham. A local grocer was surprised by the figures which were presented to him at the end of the year showing the saving he had made by the purchase of a meat-cutter.

He estimated that he was losing about one pound in ten according to his former system in which he used a big butcher knife. He realized that his method was not according to the latest idea and fully appreciated that the butcher-knife method was costing him money and robbing his cooked ham and bacon sales of quite a percentage of the profit that should have been his. He estimated that he lost one pound in ten according to the old method, which with a yearly business of 1,000 pounds meant a total loss of one hundred pounds. Now, he paid about 25 cents a pound for the ham and did not get that money back. There was also a loss of 35 cents which he should have got had he sold the ham at a gross profit of 10 cents. This was a total loss of 60 cents a pound or a loss of sixty dollars for the year on that 1,000 pounds purchased.

It may be stated that this loss is occasioned in various ways known to every grocer who has sold cooked ham and had to cut it with an ordinary knife. The machine itself saved practically its cost the first year although of course there was still a slight loss in the ends which is bound to result unless a special market is secured for them. However, the cutting machine proved its worth and the butcher knife is now used to cut kindling wood and to throw at marauding cats.

Vegetable Buying to Stop Losses.

Montreal, May 27.—"It is astonishing," said a large Westmount retailer, "how often lettuce and other green vegetables and garnishes have to be thrown out through not keeping. The remedy is a simple one but works beautifully.

"Do not buy quite as much as you estimate you will need. That sounds rather foolish, but the times when you actually run short will be few and even then you can take the order and pick it up from your neighbor. The loss is so complete when once the article wilts that the other way will be found to prove much more profitable in the end.

"Of course if every one started in on the same principle it would complicate matters, but it is only the "live" ones who will read this in The Grocer, so there will be others left to carry the oversupply for us."

Doesn't Oversell a Customer.

Sherbrooke, Que., May 27.—"A common error of judgment," said recently a retailer here, "is made by many grocers in selling a customer really more than he knows he can afford. It has a double effect. The customer in paying the bill thinks it over and probably decides the store is too expensive for him, or holds down his grocery bill in the future, paying more attention to it than he would have under ordinary circumstances, and thus eliminates the buying of some things he would otherwise have bought.

"It also makes him a little suspicious of the grocer, if he sees he is continually trying to force things on him, and taking it from all points of view, the policy is bad."

Vegetable Spray Sells Goods.

Winnipeg, May 27.—A novel vegetable rack has been recently installed in the store of R. L. Waugh, Winnipeg. It is a circular fountain of heavy galvanized metal. It has four circular racks and tapers off from the bottom, the smaller rack being at the top. Running from the floor through the central stand is the water pipe, through which the water flow comes out of a small nozzle and dashes against a flat piece of metal at the top.

This creates a water mist, which showers out and sprinkles the vegetables all round the racks. It is a perfect imitation of a fountain, and is attractive to watch. The fact also that it keeps the store fresh and cool is an asset to its usefulness. The main thing about it is that it sells goods. Fresh vegetables are always lying under the moisture, and present an appetizing appearance.

Invented a Silent Salesman.

Bowmanville, Ont., May 27.—A silent salesman of his own invention occupies a prominent place in Thos. White's grocery store. Along the outside edge of the counter he has placed a row of small glass honey jars which present the appearance of a long glass tube divided into sections. The jars are arranged end to end, held on the edge of the counter by round bands fastened to the counter and each contains a sample of goods in stock.

Sugar of different grades, teas, coffee, spices, raisins, currants, candy and many other lines are shown. This arrangement combines simplicity, neatness and cleanliness and while the jars are attractive they are not in the way. They are stretched along the counter's edge and each has a small label thereby increasing the effectiveness of the ideas. They are in such a position that they cannot fail to attract attention and the plan was carried into effect at a small cost.

Checked a Loss of $225 a Year.

Edmonton, Alta., May 27.—"It dawned on me all of a sudden one day when I was weighing starch, tapioca, spice, currants and raisins that I was losing money every time that pan went down and parcelled up the goods for my customer whom I hoped at least considered me liberal," said a local grocer a short time ago when asked his explanation for the new computing scales he had purchased.

"The average customer imagines that you are cheating her if you do not fill the pan until it goes down with a bang. If you begin taking out some of the goods to balance the scales she puts you down as being a miser. Well it struck me that I had played the role of the good fellow long enough. I was willing to give my customers the full value of their money, but I did hate to cheat myself. Even when I did take some of the goods out of the pan I knew that even then I was giving the customer more than he was paying for. It took a long time for that idea to get firmly planted in my mind. I had not thoroughly understood the old scales or I was careless. I'm not sure what it was but the next time a computing scale man came around I appeared to be but little interested. I wanted him to explain it in every detail and I bought this and will have another one of these days."

This grocer is doing a business of about $35,000 a year. That is how he is rated and he figured out a statement of the money he believed he had lost during one year with the old style scales. He averaged his daily business at $125, of which $50 or 40 per cent. was done over the scales. He roughly estimated his average weighing at a value of 20 cents. He therefore had 250 weighings during the day. His scales were none too delicate. They were the ordinary scales found in a very ordinary store, but if placed alongside a standard scale he knew his would make a showing against him. Thus considering everything he figured that he was losing one half an ounce on each weighing. On a day's work he was losing 125 ounces or 7½ pounds. Allowing 300 days to his working year he was losing considerable. His average pound was worth about 10 cents; his daily loss therefore was 75 cents. During his working year therefore, he lost about $225.

These were big figures to him and he was willing to knock off a sum to allow for his rough valuations which he at first thought were giving every advantage to the old scales. But even with the reduced sum he was losing far too much. It would pay for a couple of computing scales and his own investigations really turned his attention from his old scales which he keeps in a dark corner of his storehouse as a memento of other days.

Not only did he lose $225 by overweight, but he would have been ahead $450 with his present scale.

Keeping Out of the Rut.

Moncton, N.B., May 26.—"Often lack of success is due to the fact that one has fallen into a rut and is doing business the same way as fifty years ago," said a Moncton retailer the other day. "The grocery trade, in common with every other business enterprise, has progressed, and unless the dealer has progressed with it, reduced profits and losses are certain It is recommended that any dealer who finds that he is falling behind examine his business and himself as carefully as possible, with the view of discovering where his lack is. Perhaps his customers, for example, have changed. If they have this would necessarily mean that tastes, wants and purchasing potentialities have all changed. Often these changes come about so gradually that they are imperceptible, yet they make a vast difference in the business and sometimes reduce profits to the losing point.

"Such a condition is easily remedied. Get busy and get up to date. If you are far behind, if your trade is slipping away from you, make a rigid examination and determine where you can make a change. Sometimes a slight improvement or change will lead to important results in modifying discouraging conditions, and occasions will rise in which one or two slight changes of this character will start the business in other direction."

Front and Rear Delivery.

Ottawa, Ont., May 27.—There are those who maintain that the delivery of goods from the front of the store is an advertisement since the name on the delivery wagon attracts some notice and the wagon as well, providing it is well laden with goods.

Others contend that delivery wagons should only be brought to the rear of the store for various reasons.

F. W. Forde belongs to the latter class. He maintains that women coming in and out of the store are inconvenienced by the driver carrying out boxes of parcels, bringing back empty boxes, etc.

When done by the front door there are usually several boxes of parcels lying on the floor just inside the door and these are often in people's way. If they are left on the counter they inconvenience the salesmen and salesladies in doing up parcels.

Mr. Forde has two stores here. He visits both every day regularly and attends to his own books. In this way he keeps a close tab on how things are going along.

Visits for New Ideas.

London, Ont., May 27.—"A grocer is no different from any other business man and if he keeps his nose to his books from one week's end to another his vision will become narrowed to such an extent that his own trade is bound to suffer."

Thus spoke one of the trade from a neighboring town while in London recently and he explained his point.

"Even the farmer," he said "is not content to follow the methods which he was taught as a lad. Agriculture has to-day reached its proper level, and is conceded an art. Colleges have been erected to enable the tillers of the soil to learn the latest ideas and farmers hold meetings where they discuss their respective methods and each benefits from the experience of the rest. In almost every trade the same principle is being followed and in the grocery business the scope for improvement is as great as any of the other lines. New ways of doing business, labor-saving devices and general advanced notions are found in the progressive stores in the larger cities. Wherever I find no ideas suggested by our local merchants I endeavor to secure an excuse for a business trip to the city just to keep abreast of the times.

"A whole town can fall into a rut by its merchants being satisfied with their old methods when they know that in other places grocers are pursuing advanced ideas. When I pass attractively dressed windows here I feel their influence and I always go home with a number of plans that I know I can adopt in my own windows. I find the grocers in the city are delighted to impart the information I may be seeking. A day spent once in a while after this manner is by no means wasted, at least I never begrudged the time, as I also had some other business to attend to at the same time. But I have seen a few men in my own town, grocers and others, who seem to be afraid of losing something if they are away from the store for a day.

"The three methods I follow to keep up with the best of them is to read my trade paper, talk with other grocers and by occasional trips to get ideas by actual observation. Anything rather than to fall into a rut or drop behind the times."

This grocer apparently considered it necessary or dutiful that he should get away from his business now and then and he, at any rate, is satisfied that his system is an intelligent one and that it brings the desired results.

Are Samples an Asset?

Quebec, May 27.—"In answer to the above question I would say emphatically yes," said a local retailer. "As to why I think so there are several reasons. First they form a good advertisement in two or three ways. They show a customer that we keep such a line of goods, that the article is good (if it is), and they bring people to the store to obtain them.

"In the second place it is an asset to the store that manufacturers think enough of them to send the samples. That may be only a personal satisfaction, but it is a fact that the more a man thinks of his business and the more pride he takes in it, the better it usually becomes.

"Taken altogether samples are a decided advantage. To my mind it is the best way to start out a new line and I only wish more of it were done."

Against Buying in Quantities.

Vancouver, B.C., May 27.—The question of buying in large quantities and getting the cash discounts is one that deserves much thought declares a Vancouver grocer.

"You may get a fair discount on a large bill of goods," he said, "but still you may be getting more goods than you want for the time being.

"In such a case you are only tying up your money when interest might be accruing on it in the bank and that interest might be even greater than the discount.

"Or the money might be used in getting a better assortment which is always desirable in any business; but when it is tied up in surplus stock one simply has to wait for buyers in that particular line or sell off at a loss or small profit.

"I believe," he added, "that that is what causes half the price cutting we hear of all over the country."

He advises that merchants be careful in buying large quantities of one particular article at one time.

This Grocer Takes an Occasional Trip to the Large Centres For New Ideas.

Use Proper Sized Paper Bags.

Port Hope, Ont., May 27.—"Every opportunity for an economy should be carefully looked after in a well regulated paying grocery store," says a local retailer. "It is true that from an economical standpoint bags are not a very important consideration, but added to the slight advantage thus gained there is the important point of care, good taste and a desire to nicely arrange things. A customer does not appreciate carrying home a small quantity practically rolled up in a capacious bag. Clerks should see that all sizes of bags are in convenient places and should also be experienced enough to select the right bag."

Having thus expressed his opinions he added, "It's only a trivial matter when you look at it in one light, but there is a serious side to be reckoned with. If you are careless in one matter it breeds the same spirit in others."

To Prevent Gifts to Favorites.

Montreal, May 27.—A plan is under consideration by Walter Paul, the owner of two large retail stores here, to do away with the favoritism often shown by clerks to certain customers. By the term "favoritism" is meant the giving of a little extra value for their money.

There is no doubt that a certain amount of this is going on in every store where clerks are hired.

The scheme is simply this. The stores will be cut into departments and one man will have charge of each. At the end of the year a small percentage of the profits will come to him from his department. It is thought that this will make him keep his eyes open for mistakes, intentional or otherwise, in serving customers with his particular line. Whether or not the scheme will succeed is as yet undetermined, but there is no doubt of its success in other lines of business.

Why not use such a plan in the modern grocery, however small? The percentage will make any man more careful when it means money in his pocket.

Takes Pride in His Displays.

Montreal, May 27.—A good method of getting window displays that "work" is being used by a local firm. The clerks, about twenty in number, are offered a small prize for any window dressing idea that meets with the approval of the proprietor. This keeps them all reading good trade papers for ideas and using their spare time in working out something for the good of the business instead of idling. An incentive, even if small, is needed to keep up a continued interest in the welfare of the store. Where a good window dresser is not available some such scheme as this is essential to keep up the interest and pride of the employes in the store.

The Scale Versus the Dozen.

Ottawa, Ont., May 27.—The preference to selling goods by weight on a more advanced scale than has generally been done has a number of advocates here. Among them is W. York, past president of the Retail Grocers' Association.

Mr. York believes in selling ciscoe herring by weight. His reason is that a customer buying herring by the dozen usually makes her own selection from the barrel—providing it is handy for her—and she doesn't hesitate to secure the biggest. If the grocer selects them for her she looks askance at them should there happen to be two or three smaller than the others.

On the other hand if they are sold by weight no one can object. It doesn t matter then whether the large or small herring are taken from the barrel—the rate is all the same.

Mr. York also believed that selling eggs by the pound was the proper method. There were too many small eggs he maintained, to give satisfaction to close buyers. They often caused dissatisfaction and occasionally led to the loss of a customer.

A Trained Girl in Charge.

Brandon, Man., May 27.—A Brandon grocer, who has had over twenty-five years' experience in the business, is of the opinion that the confectionery branch of the trade should be considered as distinct from the others, because, he claims, it is not many grocers who make it as profitable as they might. For instance, he says, that as a rule grocers buy fine confectionery in too large quantities. He buys by weight, and, of course, sells by weight, and no allowance is made for deterioration or loss of moisture. Then, too, the goods are weighed out carelessly as a rule, whereas no scales can be too delicate in weighing confectionery.

"Many lines of chocolates," he says, "will turn white in hot weather and it is best to keep stocks low during the summer, and buy particularly carefully at all times in package goods."

He keeps a girl behind the confectionery counter and has her well informed as to the essentials of the trade. He argues that the trade, if it is worth consideration at all, is worth having a special saleslady to devote all her time to that department. It is not good business for a grocery clerk to wait on a child who has a few cents to spend, when there are customers in the store impatient to be served.

Why Clerks do Not Progress.

Quebec, May 27.—"Do you know," said a Quebec grocer the other day, "if some of my clerks would only wake up to the realization of the importance of work—the necessity for the use of their brains and their hands—they would be astonished at the rapidity with which they would be promoted, and at the increase in salary they would receive."

There's more than one grocer who feels just the same way. And, unfortunately, there are too many clerks who might be classed with the mass to whom the grocer's remarks allude.

Continuing, this retailer stated that he had to be down when his store was opened in order to ensure its being properly cleaned—although he had several clerks. More than once, he said, he had been obliged to turn down a clerk who had asked for an increase, simply because he was not earning more than he was paid, and frequently not that amount.

"What I want to see in my clerks," he finished, "is an ambition to amount to something more than mere automatons—passers out of groceries asked for by customers. I want them to use their heads, to figure out how they can save money and make money for me, and in so doing advance their own interests. When they are doing their best along these lines they will be making more money with me than ever they have before—and it will not be necessary for them to ask for higher wages."

Special Clerk on Confectionery.

Winnipeg, May 27.—There are a variety of ways of handling confectionery in vogue, but few of them are profitable. It would seem that the point upon which A. E. White, manager of W. H. Stone & Co., Winnipeg, puts emphasis, is one that would being results.

It is to increase the selling power of the goods. To do this the display feature is the most prominent one. Every week the most attractive window made from confectionery goods is put in and this system has proven a success. The public have been taught to look for that window and they have never been disappointed. Next to the design of the whole display, the ticketing of goods is a feature of the window selling agency. Every article in the window is priced. This not only brings people inside, but it saves time over the counter. The bartering is all done outside between the window and the customer.

A special clerk is delegated to look after the decorations both of the window and interior confectionery display, and with him it has become a well developed science. In this store, as a result, the confectionery business is a leading asset to the general business.

Unique Door-opening Device.

Bowmanville, Ont., May 27.—Thos. White, a grocer of this town is somewhat of a genius. He has arranged a simple contrivance by which standing behind his counter he can open his store door by simply pulling a string. If a customer is leaving with an arm full of parcels it is a thoughtful practice to open the door. Mr. White does this, but he simply rubs his Aladdin's lamp —pulls the string—and the customer passes out, the door closing of itself. Or a person may be entering and to his astonishment as he approaches, the door swings open as if by magic.

The string runs over pulleys from the rear of the counter and by an easy action the door is opened by a gentle pull. The string is scarcely noticed as it stretches along the ceiling. The idea is of special service to customers and thereby is an acquisition to his conveniences.

Extra Salesman on Saturday.

Emerson, Man., May 27.—An Emerson grocer who has an exceptionally heavy trade on Saturdays engages an extra clerk for the afternoon and evening. This clerk is on other work during the week and is glad to get the opportunity of increasing his weekly income by working the last hours of the week. The grocer on the other hand is glad to get him and can always depend on him coming to the store at one o'clock on Saturdays. He pays him well and gives him special charge of the farmers' trade, which is heavy on that day.

Special Clerk to Put Up Orders.

Winnipeg, May 27.—Charles Waring, manager Robinson & Co.'s grocery store, Winnipeg, believes the only way to keep the deliveries regular and systematic is to have clerks specially delegated to put up orders, and have them ready for the wagon when it returns for the next load. Not only does it facilitate the delivery, but it leaves the other clerks free to wait exclusively on customers. He argues that a clerk cannot come away from putting up parcels to wait on a customer, and wait on her properly. He is itching to get back and finish putting up that order from which he was forced to come away.

There should be a clerk, he claims, to take orders and another to put up those orders. It is two distinct lines of work, and must be treated as such if the whole business is to run smoothly.

Clerks Must Wear Clean Aprons.

Peterboro, Ont., May 27.—Cleanliness is a big asset to a grocery business. The average housewife is a stickler for clean floors, white linen, etc., and it pleases her to see the same scrupulousness displayed by others. R. C. Braund, a general merchant of this city while showing care with regard to his entire store, particularly demands of his clerks that they wear clean aprons. He provides them and also has them washed frequently, advising his clerks that he likes to see them used. While cautioning them not to be careless and purposely dirty the aprons he would rather see them discarded while only a little bit dirty than retained until they are unsightly.

"It doesn't cost much to have them washed," he remarked on one occasion, "and they pay for the work by the good impression they create."

Avoiding Friction in the Store.

Sherbrooke, Que., May 27.—"One of my worst troubles," said a local retailer, "is to keep my men down to rivalry from a purely business standpoint. In other words—the rivalry of salesmanship. Little jealousies creep in, particularly where a man deserves and gets a raise in salary, while some of the others do not, who perhaps have been longer in the store. It is very hard to make such men see wherein they are behind. Usually that is the reason they are behind.

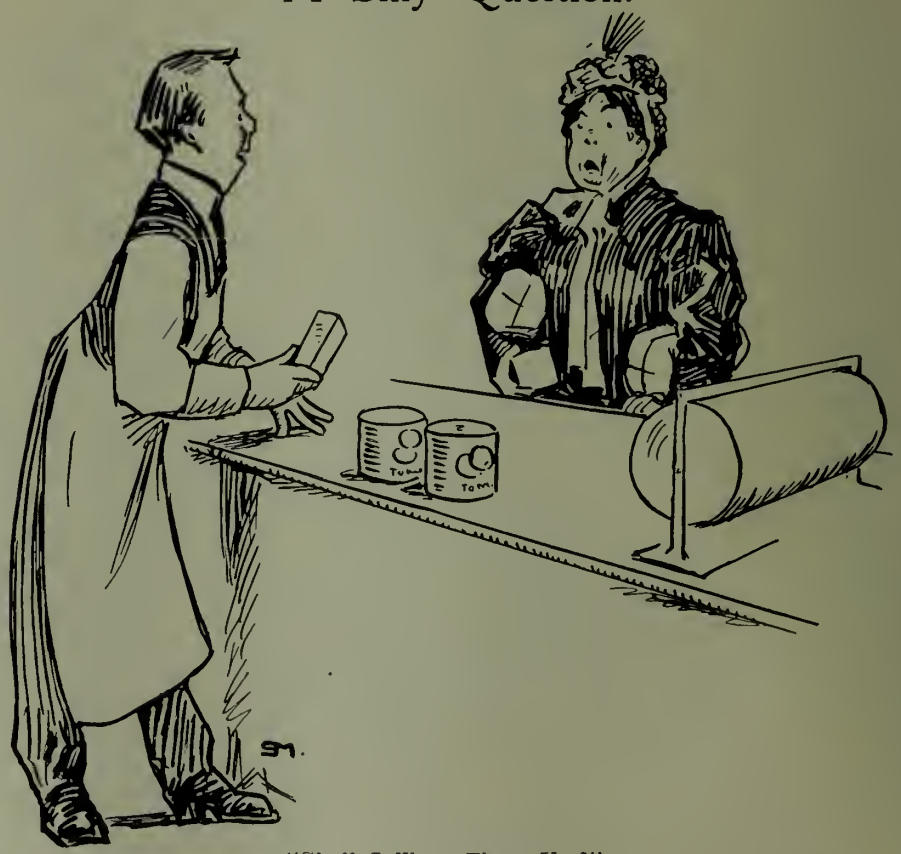
"As much as possible such feelings should be avoided. The pay envelope should be filled by the proprietor himself and the men warned against foolishly crowing over less fortunate ones. It hurts the store, and every effort should be made to keep unity in the employed body."

Want Book Guide to Buying.

Winnipeg, May 27.—Charles Christie, Winnipeg, manager for A. R. Christie, finds it valuable to keep a book handy at the office desk, in which the names of all articles are written that run out of stock. All the clerks know where this little book is, and when an article is found to be missing, when a customer is being waited on, the clerk jots it down in the "want book." This is found to be a handy, practical method of keeping the stock up and well under control. It not only insures against serious shortages, but it is a check upon too heavy buying, when it is known that the goods can be secured conveniently at a few hours' notice. When the traveler enters, the grocer can tell him at once what he wants, and what he does not want by immediately consulting this little book.

It serves, by the way, as a reminder to the traveler that the grocer depends upon this book for his needs and what the book says is decisive and final. For this reason alone the book is valuable.

A Silly Question.



"Shall I Wrap These Up?"

The Pure Food Problem

The Effect of Food Standards on the Retail Trade

They are Being Instituted in Canada For the Purpose of Preventing Fradulent Practices—Retailer Responsible For the Sale of all Bulk Goods—Compound Goods to be Allowed Subject to Label Conditions of Adulteration Act.

When Food Standards come into effect in Canada what will be the results so far as the retail trade is concerned and how will they be enforced ?

What part will they play in scientific retailing and how will the consumer be affected ?

To secure replies to these and other questions relating to Food Standards, a representative of The Canadian Grocer recently made a special trip to Canada's capital to talk to the man who knows more about them than any other in Canada—Dominion Government Analyst, A. McGill.

He says : There is little fault to be found with the food offered in Canada so far as the health of the people is concerned.

But that so far as fair dealing is concerned, there are great frauds perpetrated against the pockets of the people—that was the reason why it was decided we should have Food Standards.

To promote scientific retailing the grocer must be absolutely certain that he is buying pure goods when he asks for pure goods. He can then be positive about what he is selling.

But in the case of pepper it was different. Pepper is one of the most largely adulterated spices, the principal adulterants being nut shells, coconut, ground olive stones, buckwheat waste, flour and starch. None of these can be considered very harmful to the health, but when a retailer buys pure pepper from the wholesaler or a consumer buys it from a retailer, they should know whether they are buying "pepper" or pepper and nut shells.

"Lime juice ought to be the juice of the lime fruit," said Mr. McGill. "But as shown by Bulletin 197, it is adulterated by the addition of water. Also a considerable amount of the lime juice offered for sale consists of an addition of tartaric acid.

Example of a Food Standard.

"Bulletin 192 shows that copper (bluestone) has been used in the manufacture of some French canned peas for coloring purposes. With regard to copper in peas there is a difference of opinion. Some hold that the use of copper is dangerous in any amount. All are agreed that it should not be used above a ½ grain per pound—71 parts per million ; the standardization of peas making the amount of copper permissable not more than 71 parts per million would put an end to the trouble as the standard would be fixed.

"In cases where such materials are used in excess of the standard, an illegal act will have been committed."

The enforcement of Food Standards will be done according to the present Adulteration Act. The retailer is directly responsible for what he sells except in cases where the goods are in sealed packages—in that case he is simply a handler of them. He is responsible for all bulk goods he sells.

"But in order to protect himself," said Mr. McGill, "he can get a guaranty from the manufacturer as to the purity of the goods, but manufacturers wouldn't guarantee any broken in bulk."

"Who will enforce the law ?" was asked.

"The Inland Revenue Department will enforce it. There are 16 inspectors working throughout Canada, who are sending samples of articles they collect regularly to the department where they are examined and judged."

"Will compound articles be permitted ?"

How Compounds Will be Allowed.

"Compound articles will be permitted subject to label conditions as set forth in section 24 of the Adulteration Act," was the reply.

Section 24 reads :

Notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, no food or drug shall be deemed to be adulterated in the following cases :—

(a) Where any matter or ingredient not injurious to health has been added to the food or drug, in case such matter or ingredient is required for the production or preparation thereof as an article of commerce in a state fit for carriage or consumption, if the same has not been fraudulently added to such food or drug for the purpose of increasing the bulk, weight or measure thereof, or to conceal its inferior quality, and each package, roll, parcel or vessel containing every such article of food or drug manufactured, sold or exposed for sale is distinctly labelled as a mixture in conspicuous characters forming an inseparable part of a general label thereon bearing the name and address of the manufacturer ;

(b) Where the food or drug is a proprietary medicine or is the subject of a patent in force, and is supplied in the state required by the specification of the patent ;

(c) Where the food or drug is unavoidably mixed with some extraneous matter in the process of collection or preparation ;

(d) Where any articles of food not injurious to the health are mixed together as a compound, and sold or offered for sale as such, with each package, roll, parcel or vessel containing such articles distinctly labelled as a mixture in conspicuous characters forming an inseparable part of a general label bearing the name and address of the manufacturer.

"I contend," said the analyst, "that the word 'compound' should be printed on the label in just as large type as any other word on the label and if I have my way it will have to be.

"No grocer should sell a customer anything but pure pepper, when pepper is asked for, without telling her that it is not pure."

"If the word 'compound' has been printed on the label in type of the regulation size, would the retailer then have to tell the customer that it was a mixture and not pure pepper ?" he was asked.

"No I should think not," he said, "but if a customer took home say a can of cream of tartar and there saw the word 'compound' on the label she would not likely deal with that retailer again if he did not explain that the cream of tartar was a compound and not pure."

Pure Foods in the U. S.

Mr. McGill intimated that the great quantity of notices of judgments relative to the Food and Drug Act of the United States issued recently bore ample testimony to its strict enforcement in that country. A considerable number of these judgments relate to the adulteration and misbranding of peppers, vanilla extracts, lemon extracts, baking powders, vinegar and catsups.

It was also noted that the major number of the defendants acknowledged their error and were willing to have judgment entered against them with fines.

"We are progressing as rapidly as possible taking into consideration the importance of the issue," said the Chief Analyst, "and we hope that before July we will legalize the standards in milk and its products, meat and meat products, grain and its products and beverages."

Knowledge of Food Composition Needed in Buying

Practical Man Says This Allows a Retail Grocer to Buy Intelligently and Therefore Scientifically—Too Little is Known About Ingredients of Foods That Pass Over the Counter—Mistaken Idea Regarding Chemicals.

By Charles Adams.

Chemistry, either nature's or performed by the hand of man, enters into the formation of every food product we know, in some form or other.

It would be impossible in a single article to do more than touch upon some of the everyday performances of the chemist in his work of food preparation.

This article is simply intended to give the grocer a few facts he probably has not happened upon before, and to clear up a few little-uuderstood matters with regard to the chemistry of food.

For instance, take jelly powders. Every grocer now-a-days carries them, but how many know much of their preparation?

Take an ordinary bone; place it in hydrochloric acid. The lime is dissolved out and gelatin remains. The lime and acid form a substance useful to the cold storage man, making a brine which can be pumped through his pipes at a low temperature. Usually it is made in a different way for this purpose, but the substance is the same.

The gelatinous matter is purified and dried, when it is fit for the market. Sometimes a flavoring is added where desirable. Confectioners make large use of it in their products. It is to be noted that there is little difference between common glue and the gelatin of commerce, the distinction being in the amount of purification. Glue is, so to speak, a poor relation of the high-grade gelatins.

Gelatin has so many grades and prices that one simply has to watch results as compared with prices. The difference in grade simply means that one has been through additional purification. This fact applies equally to jelly powders. One will be found to make more jelly than the other, and a comparison, both of price and work done, will readily enable the grocer to select the best article for any given price.

With the gelatin a as basis, some additions are necessary to produce the final product, the jelly powder. One of these is a fruit acid, which is wholesome and refreshing, and usually is obtained direct from the fruit itself. Occasionally a chemical substitute is used, which is fully as wholesome, but does not give such a smooth taste to the powder. The incentive is, of course, economy, as the price of the artificial acid is about half the other.

Aniline Dye to Color.

The coloring used is generally an aniline dye. There is a fairly general prejudice against dyes of any description in foods, but it is a much mistaken one. An aniline color, when purified, is perfectly harmless, and the quantities used are infinitesimal, owing to the great coloring power of such dyes.

With these three ingredients, gelatin, coloring matter, and fruit acid, the powder is complete, and is then prepared for commerce in the packages sold over the country — a perfectly harmless and wholesome household article.

Grocers Should Study Goods.

When the man behind the counter reaches up to the shelf and hands a customer a package, say of strawberry jam, how much does he know about the real contents of the package?

Take the druggist, who is directly responsible for seeing that the proper ingredients are in what he sells—he has to make a thorough study of his stock in trade, even to taking a long course in drug study. Yet the average grocer of to-day knows little of what he sells, other than the price at which he bought and the price he asks.

Should you not, Mr. Grocer, also make a careful study of whatever enters your store?

Should you not have a practical knowledge of the goods on your shelves, in order to talk and sell your groceries intelilgently, know where they come from and, in a general way, how they are produced?

Take for example the strawberry jam above mentioned. The writer has seen in jam factories large quantities of low grade figs, more or less questionable apple pulp, barrels of glucose and bottles of artificial flavoring. These materials were to be made up into jam, and strawberry jam at that.

Now if of good quality, all the foregoing articles have a distinct food value, their only fault being the masquerade under another name. It is not necessory to wholly condemn the fig mixture, but a study of prices will soon show you whether you are getting true strawberry jam or a substitute.

It should be absolutely essential to you to know what you are selling. Then form your own policy, whether to stock up with both pure and the mixture, selling it as two grades, or to only handle the one line. It depends greatly on the class of custom you cater to. The customers should know what they are buying, and it will pay in the end, both morally and financially. The customer, who has absolute faith in the honesty of his grocer, is very hard for a competitor to take away.

Composition of Baking Powders.

There is a popular idea that any baking powder other than those made from cream of tartar and soda is injurious. But I claim that powder made from alum, acid phosphates and soda is quite as wholesome. After it has done its work the former has as a residue a chemical known as Rochelle Salts, a well-known aperient. Of course, the quantity is minute in an ordinary loaf of bread.

In the case of the alum powder, the residue consists of phosphate of soda (a true food), sulphate of soda, and hydrate of alumina, which latter is entirely insoluble, and passes through the system unchanged. Furthermore, the quantity of residue left from a baking powder, is so minute that the point of a penknife would hold all that a table full of people could eat at a meal.

Hints on Buying Spices.

Every grocer should know that when he is offered, say ground cloves, at about 2-3 the price of the whole article there must be "a nigger in the woodpile" somewhere. It most assuredly cost something to grind cloves, and naturally the price should be at least slightly higher than that asked for the whole, yet most grocers will accept the salesman's word that the stuff is pure, when he should know that such cannot be the case at the price.

If every grocer either ground his own spices or stated his determination to have pure ground spices, and pay the price necessary to get them, there would not be the necessity there now is for a new pure food law. There would be little trouble with the customers, once the situation was made clear to them, and the higher price would be paid willingly, as the spices would go just that much farther.

Pepper, especially, is frequently adulterated, and many samples of this spice have been analyzed, which contained not more than 25 to 30 per cent of real pepper.

So many articles of commerce are imitated in this day and age, with inferior stuff or adulterated, that it behooves the grocer to watch his business carefully in order to safeguard the good name of his trade, as well as the health of his customers. Good food means much more than good medicine, inasmuch as an ounce of prevention is worth several hundredweights of cure.

Chemicals With Food Value.

The fear of "Chemicals in Foodstuffs" is not so well grounded as most people think. Any chemical found in foodstuffs is practically always a "food" chemical. For instance, tartaric acid is made from the juice of the grape; citric acid from the juice of limes and lemons; apples contain an ether known as Valerian, which can be reproduced artificially, quite identical with that made in nature's workshop. The same applies to many substances which are called artificial. Vanilla is now being made artificially, and is chemically the same as the product of the vanilla bean.

Nature, nowadays, is greatly assisted in her work by the addition of certain "chemicals" to the soil, in order to supply her with the material necessary to build up a perfect grain, fruit or vegetable.

In the instances where treated foodstuffs require chemicals, as the acid of a jam or jelly powder, the baking powder of self-raising flour or prepared pudding, these chemicals are simply what nature supplies, are always carefully selected, analysed, and tested by the manufacturer before he allows them to go into his goods, and moreover, so accurately is this work done that most people, accustomed to the slipshod methods of the ordinary household, would be astonished at the care taken and the expense incurred to turn out a perfect and uniform article.

Where Careful Watch is Needed.

It is not the chemicals in his goods that the grocer should watch, but the actual cheapening of the goods by the use of fillers, which may be earthy, vegetable or watery. Chemicals, as a rule, cost too much to be used as adulterants. Certain seeds and woody material, however, which are not pepper, cloves or cinnamon, make good imitations of these spices, and the grocer should train himself to know when they are offered him in place of the genuine.

A simple method is to obtain some samples of pure spices and compare with those offered. The color is usually quite different.

As an example of a so-called chemical adulterant, borax is put into laundry starch. It is not only harmless, but I think it improves the action of the starch greatly, for laundry purposes. It costs fully as much or more than the starch and requires the labor of blending in addition.

Just a final word with regard to baking powders. There is a substance, a very decided "chemical," obtained from the purification of coal gas. This is carbonate of ammonia. The processes of its manufacture are so complete and perfect, that it is, in its finished state, a wholesome, and absolutely pure article. Its great value lies in the fact that, while apparently a solid white substance, it is in reality a combination of two gases, carbonic acid and ammonia, and when heated takes on the gaseous state. It raises dough perfectly and when bread is baked the gases have evaporated entirely, leaving behind no residue in the bread.

This substance is an ideal baking powder, but is so unstable a combination that it can only be used by large bakeries, where its value can be properly utilized.

Use Knowledge in Buying.

In conclusion, it may be well to emphasize some of the points in this article as applied to the retail grocer. First, learn all you can regarding your stock and its methods of preparation.

Use that knowledge in buying your goods and in talking them to your trade, and don't condemn an article because of chemicals without first making a study of the why and wherefore of it. There would be little necessity for the present pure food agitation if the grocer had insisted on buying pure goods and had educated himself to distinguish clearly between the harmful and beneficial.

A MANUFACTURER'S ADVICE.

"There is a lack of enterprise in pushing one's business," said a large manufacturer recently. "Sometimes the proprietor allows himself to become interested in other things and to a certain extent neglects his regular trade. It may be that he has a nice horse he likes to drive. It is possible that he has an automobile, or he may have more or less fondness for a ball game. All these pleasures are legitimate, and when moderately indulged in are beneficial. But neither these nor any other diversion should be permitted to take one's attention from one's business so completely that it will lack the inspiration and spirit of progress whch the proprietor alone can impart. Indulge in diversions moderately and do not permit them to intrude upon your trade affairs.

"Failure to advertise is reponsible for many failures and discouragements. Advertising is an important department of modern business and cannot be neglected without serious injury to trade. Purchasers of any variety of commodity will go where dealers have enterprise enough to advertise. Vigorous and judicious advertising has been known to mark the turning point between failure and success, and in more than one instance has made a store that was losing immediately begin to gain and ultimately yield a good profit. Advertise judiciously, advertise vigorously, advertise continuously. It may make the difference between a losing venture and a profitable investment."

MAKING PARTNERS OF EMPLOYES

By Kendall Banning.

A business office in New York's financial district for several years has had the reputation of attracting efficient employes and retaining them for long periods—as long as the office required them. The partners of the firm put all employes on a profit-sharing basis, and the profits have been sufficient to hold them. The scheme is simple.

At the beginning of each year, the firm makes up a "budget" or estimate of expenses for the coming twelve months, based on the amount of business transacted during the year just closing, plus the ratio of increase that may reasonably be expected. Each employe, from office boy to manager, is promised, as a bonus, all profits in excess of this amount, up to ten per cent. of his salary. Profits in excess of this ten per cent. revert to the firm. The result is that everyone connected with the firm takes a personal interest in bringing in new business.

This method has proved so effective that the firm has shown a consistent growth each year. So confident is the management of exceeding the "budget" that it has made a practice of setting aside, on the books, ten per cent. of each employe's monthly salary check. This amount is retained in the bank until the close of the year. Then, if the business warrants, checks for the ten per cent. on the entire year's salary are turned over to the employes. Thus, a salary of $3,000, for example, is paid in monthly instalments and, at the end of the year, if the "budget" has been duly exceeded, an additional check for $300 is paid to the employe, who thus becomes a partner in so far as he actually participates in the profits of the firm.

The plan is of obvious advantage to the employe; it gives him a substantial stimulus for effort. It is of advantage to the firm because it enables it to retain its employes. It capitalizes their social and business connections to the extent of attracting patronage. Every employe is, to a limited extent, a partner—and a salesman.

In this store the business was started in New York in 1840

Why a New York Grocery Lived Seventy Years

Seventy Years Ago the New York City Directory Showed Names of 571 Retail Grocery Stores—To-day There is Left But One Which Has Been Doing Business Continually and Under the Same Name — The Reasons for This Analyzed—May be Adapted to Present Businesses.

By E. M. Woodley in "System."

Two grocery clerks were about to start in business. They regretted that they knew so little about the other grocers of their city, New York. Their friendly employer, interested, offered this advice :

"Don't trouble yourself about them. Not more than three or four of them, right in your neighborhood can possibly be your competitors. Confine your attention to them."

The two young partners discussed this advice.

"I wouldn't start in business," said one, "if I really believed I'd be so insignificant that only three or four groceries would consider me a rival. I'm going after every one of the 570 in this city."

This was seventy years ago, in New York city. Three years before, this young man had come up from the country and had gone to work in Benjamin Albro's little grocery at 268 Grand Street. Two years later the second youth became a clerk in the same store. And a year later the second opened a grocery of their own at 35 Carmine Street—the five hundred and seventy-first grocery store in New York.

Studied the Competitors.

One of the partners had been storing up ideas during his apprenticeship. But working hours of five-thirty to ten leave little time for outside investigation. Now, in spite of his old employer's advice, he began to study the other fellow. For the next few months he spent all his spare time visiting grocery stores in the guise of customer.

His final conclusions he stated to his partner :

"I haven't yet found a store that does things right. In the first place, these New York grocers are not good buyers. They go on the principle that they can work the stuff off, even if they do get a lot of undesirable goods. When they buy, they have no standard.

"In the second place, they don't make their stores attractive. The people must have groceries, and they buy where they find it most convenient ; but there isn't a store in the lot that offers any particular incentive to attract customers from outside its own little district.

"In the third place, they don't all treat their customers right ; some misrepresent, adulterate goods, make promises without any intention of keeping them. They hustle to sell goods, but they let their customers look out for their own interests. They don't get into the right touch with people."

So here, at the start, the partners, Joseph Park and John M. Tilford, laid down the principles that have governed the business for seventy years. And within a year or two of that beginning, the store did have among its competitors a large number of groceries. Over a considerable portion of New York the people had learned that this store was a desirable place to trade when a particular quality of goods was imperative, or when some special service was necessary. And now this store competes with nearly every grocery in the metropolis, for the name of Park & Tilford is on nine branches.

Believed in Personal Touch.

How did the New York buying public acquire this information ?

The partners' scheme was personal touch. Refusing to consider their territory limited to a few square blocks about their store, they sent men out to ask for trade, to talk to the housewives. In this way, they demonstrated first that their store was more than a local institution. And for sixty-five years afterward, this was the way they conducted an ever-expanding advertising campaign. This is the way they conduct it to-day ; for while they now use printer's ink their printed advertising is built on and adapted to their old method of personal touch.

The five chief essentials of acquiring publicity by personal touch, as defined by the management, are these :

First—Quality of goods handled.

Second—An attractive store, but not "repellently attractive."

Third—Quality of the men who are to come in contact with the firm's customers.

Fourth—An adequate and aggressive system of personal contact.

Fifth—Absolutely reliable service.

The methods by which these principles have been carried out are here analyzed. And a policy and methods which have built up the one business which has survived for seventy years, must afford ideas and suggestions that every merchant can apply in his own business.

The first point—quality of goods handled—was one of the most difficult the original founders had to attain. Having announced this essential as one of their standards, they found they had to fight for it. As buyers, they quickly got the reputation of being cranks.

Testing and Inspection System.

Unable to sell inferior goods to this firm, certain dealers saw the opportunity to build up a trade in superior goods. The standard was fixed for them to reach and they began to match it. Then, the firm is no longer on the defensive.

To-day the head of the firm carries this principle to its utmost. He refuses to handle goods on experiment, and, having established brands which he knows to be uniform and reliable, he is extremely slow to change. If there is experimenting to be done, it is not the firm's customers who are asked to do it. Belief here is that the steady expansion of a business is synonymous with the greatest conservatism in this respect. The theory of the house is that one of the surest mediums for favorable publicity is a reputation for reliability of product. It reasons that a business house might better put a customer to inconvenience by not carrying a specified article, than to sell such article in an unsatisfactory condition.

To uphold such uniformity of product, a fixed system is needed. The manufacturers and wholesalers who supply the house are kept up to standard by a system of purchase inspection in which there must be no element of chance.

All goods are checked immediately upon their receipt for quality and quantity. If there is anything about the goods that raises even the possibility of doubt on the part of the testers or inspectors, the articles in question are sent to their respective floors, where they are again carefully examined by special experts.

All general lines—staple groceries, canned goods, coffees, teas, raisins and every other food product except brands of prominent manufacturers advertised by brand name—are mercilessly examined, and must meet quality of previous grades or original samples submitted, and must rank finest in their respective grades. If not, they are rejected. The same careful examination is made of specialties—cigars, for instance.

The firm realizes that high quality cannot be secured merely by the request of the buyer. The inspecting and testing system must supplement the mere policy.

There is another element, too, that enters into this matter of buying high qualities—keeping price down. The mere buying of high quality is no advantage to the merchant unless he can buy for the same price that another house pays for inferior quality. Expertness and a knowledge of markets enable close buying. An official of the house thus states it :

"Buying heads must be expert in their lines. They keep in active touch with all products, and by comparison of samples of finest qualities submitted by many houses, plus their own knowledge, can determine whether the goods being obtained are indeed the finest. Then as to prices : the daily market reports are carefully followed, and confidential reports received daily from brokers and other houses."

The firm considers its retail selling price quite as important as the buying price : to charge more than a price prevailing throughout the city, is considered an offense equal to selling inferior quality—an offense that operates directly against the firm's policy.

The Personal Touch in Displays.

In attaining the second essential to publicity by personal touch—an attractive store—a long study in effects has been made by an analysis of the question :

"What is the real definition of an attractive store ?"

This depends first on the people to be attracted. A grocery window filled exclusively with table luxuries, within the reach of the rich only, might make a pleasing display from an aesthetic standpoint, but it would not attract a more general business to the interior of the store. A shoe window showing only patent-leather goods would scarcely draw the man who wanted a pair of heavy water-proof shoes.

If a house has only the one class of customers, and wants no others, then the show window becomes simplified. But if it has various classes, the question is one of determining what sort of window will attract buyers as a whole. The window trimmer must put himself in the mental aspect of the average person outside who pauses to see the display. If this person is a rich man, will he be impressed with the fact that here is a store where he can procure not only the luxuries he desires, but the more modest necessities, as well ? If he be a man of the average, will he be frightened away by the sumptuousness of the window ?

Although catering to the high-class trade of New York, the firm looks to the upper well-to-do class for a large percentage of its support. It is apparent, therefore, that a really attractive store, from the standpoint of business making, must not appeal to one class to the exclusion of the other.

The same truth applies to the interior of the store. It is far from the purpose of the business to make the stores museums of high priced articles. Experiments along both these lines have demonstrated in dollars and cents the drawing power and repelling power of interior store arrangement. A happy medium has been found to lie in the blending of various classes of goods, so that all prospective buyers would be attracted.

In deciding these questions, the rule is adopted to make the firm's stores a reflection of the truth. The firm sells both classes of trade and a store, like a person, may carry too boastful an atmosphere.

Cleanly Handling an Attraction.

Another element to the attractive store, often neglected by grocery houses has been considered : punctilious cleanliness. Not only is it the object to display the goods attractively, but to handle them attractively.

Cheese, for example, is cut on a marble counter, and is wrapped in oiled parchment paper, without being unnecessarily handled. Oiled paper is placed against the butter and the cut portion is turned on paper and wrapped without coming in contact with the hands. Knives are cleaned constantly, scoops continually burnished, and other implements and receptacles kept immaculately. In the bottle-washing room, after being cleansed, every bottle must pass inspection before a gas jet. And this policy of spectacular cleanliness is made to take in the employes who handle goods.

This is really part of the third essential—quality in the men who are to come in contact with the firm's customers. And the firm's employes are the medium for reaching the fourth essential—an adequate system of personal contact. In extending business through personal touch with the public, the firm looked beyond mere amiability and diplomatic handling of people. The system was also aggressive, creative, business-building.

To-day the firm's personal-touch business getters are of two classes—solicitors of new customers, and solicitors of the daily order from existing customers.

Between seven-thirty and eight o'clock every week-day morning, this quiet but aggressive power is set at work among the homes of New York.

The Order-takers and Solicitors.

This staff penetrates to the kitchens of the metropolis. To-day the most exclusive homes open to them. But this end has not been easily achieved. If the aggregate history could be written of the seventy years of battling for business by this laborious personal touch, the sum total of discouragement and rebuff would be enormous.

The solicitors of new trade are an organization by themselves, devoting all their time to this work, while the other class of solicitors—the order-takers who visit customers already secured—are called upon at times in the double capacity of taking orders and canvassing neighborhoods for new customers.

Solicitors do not carry samples, but take out the general catalogue as a guide and argument. In this catalogue a system of grouping is followed that begins the list with things used for breakfast and ends it with desserts. The reader goes through the articles in logical sequence, without a confusion of products. An index also supplements this arrangement. As fast as the solicitors turn in the names of prospects and customers, catalogues are mailed to them. New accounts are very closely followed up, both by correspondence and personal calls; the idea is to develop the legitimate purchasing ability of each customer to its maximum.

In the selection of solicitors the greatest care is maintained. They are classed as salesmen, subject to all the requirements of a difficult art. They are required to know the firm's goods as accurately as a road salesman should know. Any misstatement is an unpardonable offense.

But this securing of business by personal touch is only the beginning in the firm's system of extending publicity by its intimate and satisfying contact with customers. Having obtained the order or secured the new customer, the next step is to fill the order—fulfill the promise on which it was gained.

The firm always felt that this was the most important function of a business. Many houses neglect it; often extraordinary laxity is manifested.

Delivery System in Service Most Important to Customers.

The purpose has been to give the delivery system the rigidity and elaborateness of a railway train schedule—and probably better lived up to. Here, too, perfection is maintained by a rigid inspection system.

This delivery system serves a daily average of about 25,000 separate orders in New York, not including the extensive mail-order business. The Seventy-second Street store has made deliveries in one day of 3,500 orders. Each store maintains its own delivery organization, with its exact routes and time-tables. How precisely these routes are laid down is shown by the following schedule of a wagon operating in Brooklyn and Greenpoint :

An attractive store in display and arrangement, the second essential of retailing success, is shown in this view of one branch

"Beginning at Houston Street ferry, to Grand Street, to 51 Broadway, to Kent Avenue and Eighth Street, Wilson Street, Penn Street, Flushing Avenue, to 750 Park Avenue, to 708 Green Avenue, to 567 Putnam Avenue, to 202 McDonough Street. Turn to 1710 Fulton Street, to 465 Halsey Street, from 502 to 836 Hancock Street, 517 to 850 Madison Street, 703 to 854 Gates Avenue, 780 to 980 Lafayette Avenue, 449 to 1089 Broadway, to 543 Grant Street, to 50 Bushwick Avenue, to 200 Graham Avenue, from 215 to 500 Driggs Avenue, to 980 Lorimer Street, to 825 Manhattan Avenue, from 1 to 250 Greenpoint Avenue, Java Street, Eagle Street, to Greenpoint Avenue, to Twenty-third Street ferry."

This one wagon repeats this trip, continually. At any given point on the route, the housekeeper, when she learns the schedule, need not trouble herself with fretful watchings.

This delivery system is augmented by a corps of special delivery boys, maintained at each store, to fill emergency orders received by telephone or in person.

"A trained and pleasant-mannered solicitor is a definite force in securing for us the right sort of publicity," said an executive of the house. "But the cheery voice of the delivery man, as he deposits his bundles on the kitchen table, at the time prescribed, is far more potent as an agent for future business."

Working on these principles, the business grew rapidly, not as a department store grows, but by a closer, more intimate personal touch with the people. The policy was the reverse of that of a department store—the reverse of concentration.

From the beginning the firm went to the people, sought them out in person and wove its business among them. In 1847 the business had outgrown its original quarters, and a larger establishment was opened at Ninth Street and Sixth Avenue. Here the headquarters remained for more than ten years, when the first Broadway store was established. Between that time and this, new stores have been opened to keep pace with the northward growth of New York.

The well-knit and effective organization of the house has been a factor in its success. But only as it has carried out the right policies. And so of the greatest significance to every merchant and worthy of study are the five factors that have made this success, because they are absolutely known to be the causes of the growth of this business.

No printer's ink advertising was done until five years ago. Not that this disparages advertising. For as a store official said, "Our success would doubtless have been much greater and earlier had we advertised all along."

And yet these retailers have always advertised : they have kept in touch with the public. They have carried quality goods and given good service—and have told the buying public about them. They have gone out looking for the buyer and forced this story on him—they have made good on this service.

That is advertising. And it is just as ready for you and usable by you, no matter what or where you retail, as the columns of your local paper.

Some Straight Talks to the Slovenly Inclined

Bold Comparisons Between the Retailer Who Courts Failure and the Man Who Carries on the Ideal Business—An Instance of How One of the Latter Class Has Climbed From Zero to a Turn-over of More than $40,000.

By T. H. Mortimer.

What do you think of your business, Mr. Grocer? Are you in it simply and solely to grind out a daily existence as well as you can or are you following it with your every energy and thought centred upon it because you know and realize that to wrest success from it in the truest sense of the word, calls into play all your ability and concentration of attention and action?

Probably you belong to the first class and you are grouchy and disgusted because you have not been reaping as large a profit as you expected. Perhaps you belong to a middle class in which is listed the grocer without initiative, whose business is running smoothly, thanks to the locality or some other reason,—certainly not because of any strenuous efforts you have put behind it. Those grocers who can be catalogued in the third list may be considered the pride of the trade, for it has been due to their efforts that the modern grocery business has been advanced and elevated from the level of the little store of olden times at the cross roads to modern establishments run on scientific principles.

Millstones About Their Necks.

Did you ever stop to ponder upon the vast difference between the farming methods of some penurious tiller of the soil who became anchored on an eastern farm and tied himself to it in a futile effort to win more than a mere living, and the westerner who has hundreds of acres under cultivation — becoming wealthy in a few years?

The easterner barely made ends meet in his first twelve months and thereafter it was but a repetition year after year, similar to the existence of some grocers whose businesses have become millstones about their necks, forcing from their breasts all hope of success and the energy necessary to attain it.

Yes, it is a far cry from the one-horse grocery store that is found today in striking contrast to the thriving establishments that breathe the progressiveness and cheerfulness of the proprietor.

Some one has said that a man's business is as big—or as little—as his mind ; at any rate the success of a grocery business depends almost entirely upon the grocer himself. He must first comprehend that he is dealing in a business that demands his very best endeavors.

The Necessary Requisites.

It might possibly be called a game and as such requires the science of salesmanship, the shrewdness necessary to buy well, the personality that wins customers and the care that holds them ; the artistic temperament to arrange windows and interior effects to give the best results and a dozen other accomplishments, all of which unite in the person of the ideal and successful grocer.

Is it any wonder that there are failures? The real wonder is that there have not been more businesses shipwrecked when the question is looked squarely in the face.

A Concrete Instance.

The writer knows a grocer whose cheerfulness is proverbial. If business is dull at any time, instead of brooding or getting "in the dumps" he turns his attention to re-arranging his goods, and in various ways brightening his store, improving labor saving devices, or possibly going over his books, thus keeping in close touch with his office work.

And he is not a slave to his work by any means. Although he began with a few dollars and is now rated at about $40,000 he finds time for holidays every summer, follows the news of the day and is a close reader of his trade journal. As a grocer he is almost of the ideal type and his success has been largely due to the fact that he realized that his business demanded careful and scientific attention to details, progressive ideas such as are followed by the most prominent members of his trade, and above all a love for and trust in his business. While he may have felt blue at times when he sat down to think over situations that were annoying, still, when he returned to work the next morning his customers found him as cheerful as ever. A man like him spells success from the very beginning.

Grocer Tells How He Changed from Credit to Cash

The Difficulties he Had to Overcome and His Methods in Doing so—Used Circulars and Newspaper Space and Presented a Strong Argument—Granted no Favors Even to Sure Pays—An Increase in Business.

By Stanley Williams.

STANLEY WILLIAMS.

The merits of a grocery business run on a cash basis, as compared with one run on the credit system, are constantly under review. There are advantages to be cited in either system, but until one adopts the cash system it seems hard to realize what a different business it is.

At the request of a representative of The Canadian Grocer I will endeavor to explain how I changed my credit business to a strictly cash basis. I might also state that I have had several letters from grocers of other towns asking me to explain to them how I effected the change and the results of the new system.

First of all, I would like to go back to when I started in business. When I purchased my stock from R. J. Goring, I opened up accounts with all of his customers that he had found to be all right. Any with whom he had trouble I simply dropped.

Now the question of how I was to increase my trade presented itself to me. To whom to give credit and whom to refuse was the great problem. I was very careful as I had been in Sarnia six years and knew a good many people.

But what in most families is the method pursued? A monthly account is opened, all items desired are ordered from the soliciter, no attention being given to the price or quantity received and no account being kept of the cost. The housekeeper has little idea how much the orders amount to.

The monthly bill is presented. It is much larger than the customer expected. Then in a good many cases we hear this: "I can only give you half of that today, but will make it up next pay day."

If the account were $30 and a customer paid $15, can she pay $45 next month? How often we get $5 on a $50 account accompained with an order for $8 worth of groceries to be charged. And then grocers will say that you can sell a family more groceries on credit than you can for cash. Very true, but is there any object in selling a customer more goods than he or she can pay for?

I have yet to meet a grocer who does not complain about the credit system and how hard it is to collect accounts.

Conference With the Clerks.

On the first of October last, I discussed the question with my clerks, and told them my plans. I secured their opinions on the matter, then framed up a strong argument in favor of the cash system. I first used my space in the daily newspaper, and cards in my window announcing the fact that the business would be cash after Nov. 1st. Then in a day or two I mailed five hundred letters to customers and people whom I thought would be interested in the cash system. I sent them the following letter:

Sarnia, Ont., Oct. 10, 1909.

Dear Sir :—As a customer and friend of ours, we know you are interested in what we do, and in our well-being. Therefore, we like to take you into our confidence. What we are going to tell you about we believe is as much to your interest as ours.

In the past this store has been liberal in extending credit. Most of our customers, like yourself, paid promptly. Others did not. We lost what they failed to pay. Now, we have determined that on and after November 1, 1909, we shall sell for CASH ONLY—that means the payment of the money when the goods are bought or cash on delivery. No credits; no bookkeeping; no collections; no disputed accounts to lose us friends. We've placed the date far enough ahead so all our customers can easily adjust themselves to the new plan.

Here's where you'll be benefited: We're going to take what we lost on bad accounts heretofore, and what we paid for collections and bookkeeping, and deduct it from our cash prices. Every time you spend a dollar here you're going to get several cents worth more than we or anyone else could give you under the credit system. It means saving to you, saving to us, and no bad debts.

We honestly believe you'll welcome the change. You'll get more for your money and have a better command of your finances. There will be no bills to pay for "dead horses." We'd like to have a talk with you about this. Come in and let us explain more fully.

We thank you very much for the trade you've given us, and are sure we'll have better opportunity to serve you than ever heretofore.

Yours very truly,

STANLEY WILLIAMS.

Then as I met and dealt with customers. I took the first opportunities to explain the new system, and why we were adopting it. I also risked my life so far as to visit some 250 in their homes and was told nearly that many times that it was impossible for them to pay cash. They never had to pay cash and could get all the credit they wanted elsewhere, etc. To make it brief, I asked the railroad employes especially to do two things for me and then I would be satisfied.

1st.—To keep the money they intended to pay me on account, whatever amount it might be, and pay cash for one month.

2nd—To come and tell me after paying cash for one month that they had reason to feel that the benefit wasn't mutual, and I would give them a receipt in full for their account.

Now, we had customers who were usually a year getting their back accounts paid up. But now they are paying as they go and how nice it is for hard-working men to know they haven't their money spent before it's earned.

All Treated Alike.

We had a number of customers who were just as good as cash, would pay the first time they were down-town, or every week or every two weeks, whatever the case might be. They thought the cash system was adopted for the other fellow, and not for them. The great question in my mind was: Can we let some few continue the old system? It was a bold step to take, and one which required a great deal of courage, but after due consideration, I decided to treat all alike, rich and poor, then no man could say to me, "You gave my neighbor credit, and refused me."

The new rule was strict. All goods had to be paid for at the counter or on delivery. All orders telephoned were marked C.O.D. on the top near the address. The driver carried his own change, and after each load was delivered he turned in the amount of the bills on the C.O.D. file.

We lost some of our best customers, as they simply refused to pay on delivery, and the driver returned the goods. I might say we had six orders returned on the first cash day. This was the trying time to see the good customers go who could pay cash if they chose to, but here is the one point I wish to emphasize: I have every reason to believe that if we had given away to special customers and let them continue the old system, our trouble would have never ceased. But the very fact of us refusing people with money, spread rapidly, and was our first big boost. People knew then that we meant the contents of our announcement when we said that after Nov. 1st—CASH.

Economical people realize to-day that there are heavy losses with the credit system and they appreciate that expenses connected with collecting, bookkeeping and bad accounts must come out of the profits, and they know who pays it—not the merchant, as he knows when he is figuring his expenses, that he must allow a fair amount for this.

Brought Inquiries From Customers.

So they came to our store to see if we could show them advantages that the credit man couldn't.

Our trade has increased in the four months since we adopted the cash system 20 per cent. over the corresponding months of the previous year.

A word about the C.O.D. orders. Customers tell the delivery man that they are more than pleased that he collects at the house. A good many want to pay cash and with the convenience of the phone, and the driver having all necessary change, it saves them walking down town.

To increase your business under the credit system simply means to take a chance on a few more customers. If you open up ten new accounts and lose one, you simply increase your book accounts and you get the pleasure of doing the extra work. But under the cash system, you sell every one, rich and poor. The more goods you can sell the better, and every night you either have the money, or the goods on the shelf, and how much easier would it be to sell your stock than to sell your book accounts?

Now, there are many more good strong points about the cash system that I feel merchants should find out for themselves,

Secured a $75 Order and a New Chinaware Buyer

Galt, Ont., May 26.—There are many ways in which a merchant can use tact in getting new customers. Very often it happens that merchants appear so anxious to obtain new customers that the prospects decline to buy in their stores at all.

Here is an example of how a grocer's idea of fairness brought him extra business, which is but one actual occurrence: A woman from a distance accompanied her hostess to the store, and while she was making her purchases, the proprietor, to whom this woman was introduced, showed her through his store. As they went along, he pointed out some of his fine chinaware. She was so well pleased with the excellence of the goods that she felt inclined to buy some. The grocer, however, who understands human nature, and who has a keen sense of fairness, refused to take her order, for the reason that he did not show her through the store for the purpose of selling her goods.

She was so pleased with the treatment she received, that she remarked to her friend after they left, that she never saw such nice goods before, and she would like to have some, but, "would you imagine," she said, "that Mr. —— would not take my order, because he showed me through his store as a friend of yours and not as a person who came to buy?

"This is certainly a surprise to me. In most of the stores you are afraid to look at anything for fear you will be insulted if you do not buy. I was never treated so kindly in any store. No wonder you like to deal there. Before I go away I will go in to buy, for I want some of that chinaware."

The kindness on the part of this grocer and his prefect fairness to this lady resulted in a $75 order, and a regular customer every time she repeats her visits here. It pays to be courteous, and not to appear sometimes too keen to sell to a person under certain circumstances.

ALWAYS AN OPPORTUNITY.

Do not lose advertising opportunities —they come to all of us. Here is an illustration.

Brand new dollar bills or most anything in the way of new money arranged neatly about a show window attracts attention. A dollar hat man in Milwaukee recently placed six or seven new dollar bills in his window and was foolish enough to leave them there after he closed up at night.

The store was not on a well-lighted thoroughfare, and one night some fellow put a brick through the glass and got away with the new bills and a hat. Next morning the hat man put up a card which said:

"The man who threw this brick is a thief, but no more so than the man who charges you $3 for a hat we sell for $1."

And a colored woman had this comment to make:

"Ain't dat foolish to bust a good window just for to make a advertisement!"

Some employers remember, but a larger number forget, that the clerk has the same right to want a desirable boss as the boss has to want desirable help.

The Proper Handling of Credits Protects Business

Retail Merchant Claims That 'Cash and Credit' is the Ideal System if Right Methods are Used—Maximum Limit for a Particular Account is Suggested—Getting on Friendly Business Terms With a Customer and Holding His Trade.

By B. H. Thomas.

Is there a grocer behind a counter today who can boast of a fairly good business and who at some time in his career did not stop to ponder upon the question of discontinuing the credit system and of re-establishing his affairs upon a strictly cash plan ?

If there are any who have not been worried over this problem and the perplexities connected with it they may count themselves extremely fortunate for they have escaped one of the worst features of the grocery business.

Bad debts ! That is the skeleton that rattles every time the average grocer opens his little safe and takes therefrom his ledger that he may once more study the situation. As he pores over the pages of figures in the quiet hours of the night in the hope of arriving at some solution of this problem that has been worrying him for months, too frequently the words stare out at him in their bold black type—Bad Debts.

At the end of an entry a page and a half long he finds that Brown owes him $134.58. He knew it was there. He could turn up the page with his eyes shut, for it seemed that every time he looked for an account this and many others like it seemed to present themselves with annoying recurrence.

He asks himself for probably the fiftieth time "How did I ever let them pile up that much ?" And as he stares vacantly for the moment at the pages, his fingers buried in his hair, he suddenly recalls the draft that the boy had left that afternoon for the last consignment of canned goods. Brown is not the only offender, although he is the worst. But the others might as well have taken the same amount. What signifies a few more dollars' worth of goods added to bills of these lengths ? He falls asleep at night with the solution as distant as ever and perhaps in his dream, Brown, Jones, Smith and other delinquent customers appear in fantastic shapes carrying off his store on their shoulders.

He rises next morning cheery and bright under the influence of the weather for instance, and dashes into his preparations for the day's work when his mind recalls that dream and his old troubles return to plague him for another day.

It is after being worried in this manner that hundreds of grocers have given serious consideration to the question of establishing a cash system, resolving to profit by the experience they have passed through.

They Abused the Credit System.

They have failed to make a success of the credit system. They have allowed it to be abused by Mrs. Brown and other customers of the same kind but, worse than that, these grocers have been parties to that abuse. "He that contemneth small things shall fall by little and little," may be well applied to trade.

That bill of $134.58 was not accumulated in a month nor yet in three. It is not necessary to go into details to show how it did grow, for that is doubtless a fact within the knowledge of the average grocer. The question is how to prevent it.

If a grocer has a good system of collecting accounts he will show no desire to adopt the cash plan in preference to the method he is following.

Credit Limit on Customers.

Here is one way of safeguarding a business against the evil of bad accounts. John Smith, a mechanic, comes into a grocery store, gives an order for a list of articles and asks for credit. The proprietor in a tactful manner enquires as to his identity, where he is living, etc., and finally asks Smith if he may be considered a customer. The grocer then explains that he has a credit system that has proved satisfactory to his other customers. A certain limit is placed upon the credit to be given each person for their mutual convenience and protection. Smith agrees and places his limit at $25 a month.

The grocer has an account or credit machine in addition to a cash register and enters Smith's name on a ticket in the register with $25 at the top. The order is written on a duplicating pad and one half is placed in the book-keeping register.

The other is sent with the articles to Smith's residence with a holder for the slip. The customer should be informed that this should be placed in his kitchen or some such place.

Total Always up to Date.

The first order amounts to $4.15. Mrs. Smith calls a few days after and makes a $2 purchase. On each slip the top line is stamped "Brought forward" so that the figures will be in the dollars and cents columns. The grocer turns up his register to the John Smith file and on the new bill writes $4.15 in the "brought forward" place. The whole is added up and shows clearly that Smith is indebted to the grocer for $6.15. This second slip is placed in the register, on top, and the other goes to the Smith home where it is placed in the holder. Thus the business goes on. Smith and the grocer each know their relations to one another at all times. On pay day the former says to his wife, "Well there's that bill, I guess you'd better pay it before it gets any bigger."

It may be nearing the end of the month and the Smith purchases are coming close to the limit. The grocer would scarcely hold out for a few dollars but Smith fixed the limit which he kept within during the first month and as he now threatens to exceed it his family will naturally be more careful.

These figures and this case exemplifies the system in a general way. The limit may be $10 or it may be $50. It may be monthly or weekly all depending upon conditions ; for if Smith is paid weekly it is advisable that he pays his bills weekly, and so on.

Makes Customers Sure.

Under a systematic credit system the grocer is sure of his customers. They are not wandering around buying where ever they take the fancy. Some grocers have found that on pay night Smith has a number of bills to pay but he may not have enough money to pay all of them at once or he may have sufficient to meet them but will have only a small remainder. The butcher is nearest on the way up town and he is paid first. Then the boot man and on down to grocer who may be last and thereby receives only part payment.

By the system outlined the grocer and Smith have been simultaneously keeping their books' and each knows how he stands with respect to the other. Smith knows to the cent the amount of his grocery bill and before leaving home he has decided to pay it.

Some customers like to keep account of their purchases and have a hook on which to place the bills. It often happens that one is lost and becomes forgotten. The rest is totalled and Smith goes down to pay his bill only to find that he owes more than he knew.

"Well here are all my cheques," he says, and often amounts have been questioned and sometimes the customer refuses to pay for one order charged against him. Under the credit or account register system this is impossible for if Smith misses one bill, he notes by the next that one is missing and not only remembers it but asks for a copy of it when another order is given.

The system creates a friendly and business relation between the grocer and his customer. This mutual understanding eliminates 90 per cent of the evils that may arise through the credit system.

By exercising tact the grocer will not offend his customer in any way and if the latter is desirous of paying for his goods he will want them paid regularly in order that his account will not get beyond him.

Different From the Usual Method.

Under the ordinary way an account is let run dependent upon Smith calling to pay it.

He generally does not know the extent of his indebtedness and other bills have to be paid. The result is that he owes his grocer $40 or more before he realizes it. He is not only surprised, but he may be angry that it should be let run so long. The system explained harmonizes relations with good customers and those who object to the system are generally not worth holding.

There are, of course, some customers of excellent standing to whom it may not be wise to suggest a credit limit. This must be decided by the particular grocer as must other special cases.

The average customer prefers the credit system. Suppose you are going to open a store and two towns are under your consideration. In one the grocers are doing a cash business in the other the credit method predominates. In which of these do you think you would meet with the greater success? In the former town you should soon have a flourishing business, because, as it has been pointed out before, the cash grocers have in most cases a wandering and uncertain trade, whereas in the other town the grocers are holding their customers by the credit system. If your credit system is systematized and under control you are not going to lose much money. What is meant by the credit system is of course, cash and credit, which I claim to be the ideal method if properly handled.

THE SELECTION OF MEN.

By H. Gordon Selfridge.

Many serious questions must be considered in selecting men. Honesty is one—a matter, perhaps, to be decided only by records. Loyalty is another. Unlike honesty, this is easily cultivated, if as easily sacrified in a day. Enthusiasm is important. In some places it is frowned upon—regarded as bad form. Yet only by stirring up a man's enthusiasm are the fires of his energy kept alive. If a young man feels he wants to go deeper into the business all the time, to give it additional thought, energy, and intelligence, to damp his enthusiasm is to kill his value as an employe.

Preventing Losses in a Retail Credit Business

A Book-keeping System in Actual Use by a Retail Grocer Which He Claims Serves Him Well—Every Credit Customer Gets Her Total Account Up-to-date With Every Bill of Goods —Separate Check-book for Each Regular Purchaser — A Check on Large Accounts.

By H. R. Daniels.

Generally speaking, the success of any system or method in connection with the modern retail store must be measured, first, with regard to its influence on the growth of the business, and secondly, by the amount of work involved. Obviously any plan which will promote the former with a minimum expenditure of time and labor, must be the ideal one, and this is precisely what we claim for our system of keeping accounts.

Close observation on the part of the writer has confirmed the impression that much profit is annually lost to the average retail store through defective bookkeeping. This loss may be direct, as in room to christen the cash—and, before he gets home, a big share of his money is converted into tanglefoot. There's financial stringency in that household for a week or two afterward; accounts pile up, and debt gets a lead on that particular family that it will take maybe a month to wipe out.

Merchants Partly to Blame.

"But the most complete, effective and best equipped dead beat factory is that run by the merchants themselves. Not all of them—not so many of them as a few years ago—but still enough of them to convert well intentioned people into slow pays and furnish lots of work for me and my kind.

"Suppose a man goes into Watson's store—you know Watson, a generous, whole-souled, well intentioned fellow. The man buys something, finds his pockets empty, and says: 'I'll settle on Saturday night, sure.' What does Watson answer? Why, he just laughs, like a whole-souled jay that he is, and says, cheerfully: 'Don't bother yourself, Mr. Jackson. Any time will suit me.' And Jackson, when pay-day comes and he sees something he would like to buy, just takes Watson at his word, puts off paying, forgets all about that little fifty cents, and feels sore when Watson reminds him, if Watson ever does remand him, and swears up and down that he paid it the following Saturday night, as he promised he would.

"I can show you in my safe a stack of little accounts incurred in just that way.

"The next step, of course, is to add a second item to the first. Then comes the running of a regular account. Some merchants encourage people to run accounts, laughingly assure them their credit's good, open-heartedly tell them to take anything in the store and settle when they're ready. The people who buy on credit buy more freely than those who pay cash, and as a result of encouraging credit buyers, a larger bulk of business is done.

Fixed Time for Settlement.

"And it's all the merchant's fault, in not emphasizing the fact that the goods bought on credit must be paid for, and in conveying the contrary impression that any old time will do for settling up.

"If I were a merchant and doing a credit business, I'd never let an article go out of my store on tick unless there was a fixed day by which settlement must be made. Probably I'd put things more politely, but I'd see that my meaning was perfectly clear. My patron would get his monthly statement of account punctual to the day; in fact, I think for the ordinary wage earner a weekly statement every pay-night would be a splendid innovation. And it would be a pretty warm day that I'd let the impression creep out that money didn't count with me.

"Long credits may mean a larger bulk of business; but the gain is sometimes a loss, owing to the large percentage of bad accounts which creep in. The merchant who insists upon cash, or else upon regular, monthly settlements may not do so much, but he's doing the customer a mighty good turn, and his net profits are more.

Not Infrequently Does the Collector Get His "Calls" From Those Who Allow Their Accounts to Run Too Far.

Methods of Handling Them.

"So much for the making of dead beats. Now, as to handling them.

"That's just a question of individuality. The collector must be able to read his man—or woman, for lots of them are women—and select his treatment accordingly. Slow pay is a disease with different phases. Some you may drive, others you may lead. Some yield at the first assault; others require a long and tedious siege. If you understand your debtor, you'll find out his weak point all the quicker, and can concentrate your attack upon that one point.

"The really troublesome people aren't the poor people, the class who are hard up. I've met with more difficulties from people with pretensions and with money in the bank. I have accounts here against people who could pay to-morrow, if they wanted to.

"If a fellow who owes money shows any disposition to meet me half way—to do something—I make it a practice to give him the chance. I say: 'If you'll call every week at my office, I'll let up on you and quit dunning. Of course, if you don't pay so much, I'm on your trail again.' It pays a collector to have an office, and office hours just for such cases as that. He is able to offer to the man who is willing to do something toward settling a consideration in return—the consideration being, of course, that the collector ceases to haunt his door. And I do not try to conceal that I am a collector. That helps, with a good many. They agree to make weekly payments, rather than have the neighbors know that the collector is after them.

"Then there are the people who dispute the correctness of the account. What can I do? I just tell them to go straight to the merchant and arrange with him; that if they don't, I'll be around next week as usual. Just before my weekly call I drop in, see the merchant, and enquire. In nine cases out of ten, Mr.

the case of uncharged items, or indirect, as in the case of a dissatisfied customer who is prejudiced against the store by the feeling that her account is incorrect.

After much experimenting with various systems we have evolved a plan which practically eleminates these objectionable features, and which, in itself, is the essence of simplicity.

Our method is to employ an individual check-book for the account of each regular customer. The best book for this purpose is a fifty-page one, as this greatly reduces the size of the cabinet, besides being less expensive. The book itself differs in no wise from the ordinary counter book, excepting that the words "Past Account" are printed at the head of each slip. The customer's name is neatly printed along the edge of the book, which is filed alphabetically in the cabinet. This can readily be constructed by anyone possessing a little ingenuity.

The divisions to receive the books should be large enough to permit of the easy entrance and withdrawal of same. The sheets which form the sections should be made of tin cut by the tinsmith, and fitted into slots previously made with a thin saw in the frames. A space should be left in the lower right hand corner for an indexed file to contain transient accounts.

How it Works Out.

Now, as to operation: Suppose that John Jones requires a bill of goods. We take his book from the cabinet (which should be conveniently located behind the counter), and turning to the last entry, note the balance, if any. If a debit exists it is entered on the new slip as "To" past account, if a credit "By." The order is then taken and the bill balanced in the usual manner.

No Disputing of Accounts.

Thus it will be noted that the customer gets a full statement of his standing with each bill of goods. Disputing of the account is impossible as the acceptance of the bill each time is equivalent to an acknowledgement of same. This we have found to be a splendid feature, as frequently, under the old way a customer would come in to settle a bill of some months standing, and upon being told the amount, would dispute it. Then again we have found that this method has a tendency to hold down large accounts, by acting as a constant reminder to the customer.

Another valuable feature is the automatic handling of the accounts, the books being fully posted and balanced when the order is taken. The result being a tremendous saving in time and labor, to say nothing of the advantage of always having the accounts ready when called for.

For transient accounts we use the regular counter checkbook. The slips are torn out and placed in the indexed file before referred to.

In conclusion we would state that we have had the above system in operation for some months, and find it admirably adapted to every contingency and recommend it to any merchant doing a credit business.

A Collector's Troubles With Slow and Poor Pays

Slipshod Methods of Some Merchants Who do Not Keep Their Books Properly—The Peculiar Classes of Customers That the Collector Meets—Why There are Dead Beats and How to be More Careful With Them.

By Victor Lauriston.

"There is no one thing so strikingly different from another thing as the actual work of a debt collector is from what the average person thinks it is.

"Lots of merchants even, who ought to know, look upon Mr. Slow Pay as a sort of armed citadel, which it is my duty to overpower and loot by open assault. They look upon all 'dead beats' and near dead beats as of one of three familiar types—the man who can pay and won't pay, the who can't pay and would pay, and the man who can't pay and who wouldn't pay if he could. But really, there are not two debtors in the whole wide world precisely alike. In collection, as in everything, the human element counts for much; and emotions play as a big part in the problem of paying or of dodging payment as in any other walk of life."

So spoke the Collector. It was his 'At Home' day, which he spent in his little, dingy, second storey office waiting for those who had arranged otherwise to call upon him and cash in their weekly dues. Naturally, he had plenty of time to converse.

"I am handling accounts for a majority of the merchants in town," he added, thoughtfully, "so I ought to be in a position to say.

"Why do people become dead beats? Well, there's a variety of reasons, but when you get down to rock bottom, it's largely in their bringing up. Of course, some are born dead beats. It's in their blood. You might as well try to eradicate the disease as dodge Halley's Comet if it's coming this way. But the born kind are the exception; and it's the made variety with whom I strive the hardest and accomplish the most.

Causes of the Dead Beat.

"There are lots of things at the bottom of dead beatism. Early home training has a lot to do with it. It may strike you as curious, but the very people from whom collecting is the hardest are those who have never been taught and don't appreciate the value of money. They get it—they spend it on things they don't need—and the grocer, the baker, the candlestick maker and all the other store chaps who have been jays enough to give them credit, have nothing to do but whistle for me.

"Then, of course, there's bad habits. This isn't any temperance lecture for now and then I have temperance people among my best customers—people who contribute so much to the church that they haven't anything left to pay their honest debts. And, just speaking of temperance, Watson, the grocer, told me of one case the other day.

"There's a very religious minded family just wild on missions. The husband's a day laborer and his wife sequestrates about half the family income for the benefit of Chinese and Japanese missions. This family has had a standing account with Watson for ten years, and he swears it's never been less than $100, and usually is nearer double that amount.

"Well, last week when the account reached high water mark, Watson dropped a polite note to the wife, the head of the house, asking her to let him have something on account. Next day she came trotting in with a promissory note which she wanted him to endorse. He thought this was better than nothing, and was just putting his name across the back when she paralyzed him by saying:—

"'I'm so sorry we can't pay that account of yours, Mr. Watson, but we've pledged ourselves to give $50 before the end of the month for a missionary to Burmah, and we've only got $25, and we thought seeing how you've always been so good to us, you wouldn't mind endorsing a note for us so we can raise the other $25 from the bank, and—'"

"Well, Watson doesn't remember any more after that, except that he closed right up then and there.

"Now that's an extreme case. But where there's one case like that, there's a hundred where the shoe is on the other foot. A man gets his wages, invites a couple of friends into the nearest bar-

Debtor hasn't shown up. It's a fair assumption then that the "dispute" is all a bluff. Firmness is needed, and firmness is called in.

"You can never tell just when you are going to strike gold or silver in this collecting business. I have haunted slow pays for months wthout realizing a cent; and then, just when I'm on the point of surrender, they pay up. There's evil in the best of them and quite a bit of good in the worst of them, and precious few that you can't induce to respond if you strike the right chord.

Conscience at Work.

"The other day I called on a woman across the track. I was out that way on other business, else I wouldn't have wasted the time. I had haunted her for weeks. She had the reputation of being a confirmed dead beat, and she had through all that time lived loyally up to her reputation. My call was chiefly for the cruel satisfaction of worrying her a little.

" 'I haven't the remotest conception that you're going to give me any money, Mrs. Blank," I told her, and it was the truth. 'Why,' I added, 'they all say that you couldn't pay them if you would and you wouldn't if you could.'

"She flared up in a moment.

" 'Who says that?' she demanded, red as a lobster when it is boiled—and she was just boiling, and no mistake. 'Who's been saying that about me?'

" 'Why,' I answered, 'all the merchants in town say it. Pete Wilkins, the hardwareman, and Watson, the grocer, and—why, they've all got accounts that aren't worth the paper they're written on.'

" 'Well,' she fairly screamed, 'you just tell them all that I'm an honest woman, and—how much is that account?'

"I told her. And right then and there she dug down into her pocket book.

" 'Here's five dollars,' she said, 'and if you come around next Monday morning I'll give you the rest.'

"And she did it—confirmed dead beat, too.

"There was another woman I had to deal with—had a small account against her from Wilkins, the hardwareman, for $5.50. She declared she'd paid it all but 67 cents. Wilkins said she had paid just 67 cents. I told her I would bring young Wilkins over, and go into the whole matter with her. Wilkins didn't want to come, but ultimately he accompanied me there. He went over the whole account, reminded her of the time she paid the 67 cents, just what she said and what he said. And then she let loose.

"I never heard such a torrent of abuse in all my born days. She called him pretty nearly everything in the air above and upon the earth and in the waters under the earth, told me I was no better, and wound up by telling us both to get out of the house. Then, to finish off, she flung in something insulting about his sister. He was raging, but I managed to get him out of the place without any blows.

" 'Just wait,' I said. 'When she cools off she'll feel ashamed of herself, and she'll pay that account. You'll have your money inside of a week.'

"He pretty nearly swore at me. But I had given the woman too much margin. Inside of two days she called at the store, as nice as could be, handed him the money, and got her bill receipted. In a little while she'll be dealing there again, even if he insists upon cash. Troublesome conscience—that's all.

Tragedy of Bad Bookkeeping.

"Probably the ghastliest feature of all this business is the way in which some of the merchants send in their accounts. The fellow who hasn't any system of rendering accounts, who allows an account to drag along six months or so, and never goes after his customers except when he himself is pressed for money, is bad enough; but as a rule he has his books straight, and everything down in black and white. But he's not a patch on some chaps, who haven't the remotest conception of what bookkeeping means.

"I have accounts handed me that would be laughed out of a court of law. Not infrequently there will be only one date from beginning to end, and that the date when the account was last paid up and the merchant started out with a clean sheet. Again, for a six months' account there will be maybe half a dozen dates. Some grocers' accounts in my safe, charge families with buying thirty pounds of butter on a single day in June—though they make up by not charging for more butter till August or September. Again, the entry, 'To Goods bot' will cover a $5 or even $10 item which should be recorded in detail. Often the details and the total don't agree, three dozen eggs at 28 cents a dozen, coming out 86 cents, or maybe 76 cents—these careless grocers cheat themselves as often as they cheat their customers. If I total an entire account, my figures often fail to agree with the merchant's.

"It's all due to a mingling of slipshod methods and actual ignorance. Probably the only book is a ledger; or if there's a daybook, ledger entries are made only once every other month. The grocer, in the hurry of waiting on a bunch of customers, forgets to make any entry at all till several hours afterward, or maybe next day. Then, memory proves fickle, though he does his best. When a man doesn't know whether he's sold Jones two pounds of butter or three, what is he going to do? And if he errs on the safe side and makes it three, what is Jones going to do when, as a matter of fact, the purchase is only two pounds?

"And, often as not, such people forget to give credit for payments on account. A man will drop in and pay his bill; the merchant will wipe the amount off the books, mentally—but it still stays there, in black and white. The customer gets his bill, declines to pay, I am called in, there is a dispute—and, if the matter is ever straightened out, I get the blame.

Use of Counter Check Books.

"Counter check systems are doing a lot to educate the slipshod and ignorant men behind the counter; but when a man is at bottom careless, the most scientifically devised system will be worse than useless. It's one of my painful duties to straighten out the kinks which such misfit merchants have made.

"There's only one certain cure for it all," concluded the collector, "and that's—but here! If I go on boosting the cash system, the shelf will find one more occupant, and that occupant, minus a job, will be Yours Truly."

And, with a regretful grunt, he turned to greet a weary housewife who wandered in with her weekly instalment.

PHILOSOPHIES OF LIFE.

Man comes into this world, says a philosopher, without his consent, and usually goes out of it against his will, with the trip between exceedingly rocky.

When he is little, the big girls kiss him; when he is big the little girls kiss him. If he is poor, he is a bad manager; if rich, he is dishonest. If he needs credit, he can't get it; if prosperous, every one wants to do him a favor.

If he is in politics, it is for graft; if he is out of politics, he is no good to his country. If he does not give to charity, he is stingy; if he does, it is for show.

If actively religious, he is a hypocrite; if he takes no interest in religion, he is a hardened sinner. If he is affectionate, he is a soft specimen; if he cares for no one, he is cold-blooded. If he dies young, there was a great future before him; if he lives to old age he missed his calling.

Claims That Selling for Cash Means 30 Days Net

Writer Maintains This Interpretation is the More General One —Thinks That no Business Can be Successfully Conducted on the Cash-Down Method—Looking After Accounts to Prevent Losses.

By H. D. McMullen.

There seems to be somewhat of a mistaken idea among some of the trade as to what is meant by the term "cash." As defined by ordinary dictionary definition, it simply means that casn is paid at the time of purchase for an article.

The broader meaning, however, of anything up to 30 days, is the better, and more generally accepted one. Credit simply refers to anything allowed to exceed this limit. With this kept in mind the question of cash, as against credit, becomes much simpler.

It seems to be the universal experience of retailers, as well as wholesalers, that no business can be successfully conducted on an entirely cash down basis. This is peculiarly true of the average retail grocery store. The reason for this is plain. Women form the large proportian of buyers, and most of their buying is done from day to day as articles are needed by the household.

To pay cash down for all these small items would necessitate a fairly large sum of ready money being kept in the house, which is not at all necessary, and forms a source of temptation to burglars.

Business men like business methods, and the accepted method for payment of accounts is by check at the end of the month. A good proportion are regular in seeing that these accounts are cleared up monthly. If everyone did so there would be no reason for this article. It is perhaps impossible to make all men equally careful in this regard, but there are some points by means of which the grocer can help himself, without hurting the feelings of any of his customers.

How Troubles Arise.

Often it is the case that the man who owes the bill has never even seen it. It has been addressed to his wife, who, perhaps, is somewhat careless about financial matters, and she tosses it to one side, thinking it is nothing for her to bother her head over. In this way two or three months may pass before the grocer plucks up enough courage to ask for his account direct. The average man is rather naturally annoyed to have a bill two or three months overdue, which he has never seen, and asks with some show of temper, why it had never been presented before. It puts the grocer in a pretty hard place.

Either he must say he has sent a statement several times, which is the truth, or that he didn't want to be continually bothering him about it. In the first case the man either thinks him a liar, the statements never having reached him to his knowledge, or, suspecting the truth, he has given his better half a short talk on finance, with the grocery bill as an example.

As a result the unfortunate grocer stands a good chance of losing the account. Remember, it is chiefly the women who decide where groceries shall be bought, and any offence to them, however slight, usually has its direct effect on the quantity of goods they buy of you.

The solution of this problem lies in the fact that—as far as the money part goes—it is the business man with whom you usually deal. This in itself suggests the remedy. Send all bills direct to the man unless otherwise instructed. Good business men appreciate the necessity for keeping down running accounts, and will not be found any more unreasonable than you are yourself.

Watch the Statements Closely.

So many grocers have a deadly fear that they will lose a good account by sending in too many statements, that they go to the other extreme and after the first, do not send another for two or more months. This will, in the end prove disastrous to any business. Money is lost every day those accounts are overdue. A personal call and a friendly suggestion that the bill may have escaped a man's notice, will do more to keep on good terms with him than letting his bill run six months.

If an account is to to run over thirty days by previous agreement, is is only fair that interest should be charged. No bank will be found that loans money without interest, and no one has a right to leave the grocer holding the bag, so to speak, while he is using the money that should go to square his month's bill with him, unless he pays for such accommodation.

Every grocer who has been long in the business has had at least one chance offered him to buy up a lot of necessary goods cheaply for cash, when he was not able to collect sufficient of his back accounts to take the offer. Money will make money but the cash must not be simply on the books. It must be in the bank, or some similar depository, where it can be used at an instant's notice.

Preference for Cash Business.

In a recent conversation, one of Montreal's largest retailers made the statement that he would rather have $1,000 counter cash business than twice that amount of long time accounts. By the time collection expenses, stock depreciation, and the general, somewhat intangible loss, due to money tied up, had been taken into account, the extra profits were more than eaten up.

Country merchants should have little difficulty in making their collections, as most business in smaller centres is conducted on a cash basis. Farmers in recent times, are, as a class, ready to pay cash down for what they buy. Also country merchants and their customers are usually personal friends socially—a state of things practically impossible in a large city. In such a case it is much easier to make a little personal appeal if necessary. Accounts are smaller, thus are much more likely to be immediately settled.

Taken as a class it is certainly the city grocer who has to be particularly careful about his accounts. His customers are mostly strangers to him, as far as personal knowledge of their reliability is concerned, and they have so many interests that do not touch people somewhat isolated, that a "poor little thing" like a grocery bill is often forgotten unless—the grocer looks after his business.

STORE CHARACTER.

It takes years to develop a distinctive store character. Has your store one? It is not a matter of such moment in what line you develop it, but your store should be pre-eminent in at least one thing. To have the "best" and always the best in any one line will give you an anchor by which to hold the buying public. This can never be done in a month or a year. It has to be fostered and advertised continually from year to year, and even then you must be always on the qui vive that no one takes it away from you.

Rigid examination of all one's tendencies and a determination to do business regardless of untoward conditions will generally be sufficient to remedy any difficulty which may arise in a retail grocery business. Outside influences may be made beneficial, but it is the work done inside that is, after all, most potent in modifying the conditions that reduce, or destroy, profits.

Merchants Underselling the Mail Order Houses

Why Dealers Located in Country Districts Can Generally do This and the Advantages They Have in Advertising—List of Retail Prices Showing That a Village Merchant Can Undersell the Catalogue Stores—Some Scientific Methods That May be Used.

By Wm. Bryans.

It is an undisputed fact that the mail order houses in the larger centres are fast growing rich with the enormous trade which they are receiving from all parts of the country, that by right belongs to the home merchant. It is also well known that this trade has been growing larger of recent years and will likely continue to expand unless the smaller merchants who are suffering, determine to keep the trade at home. A considerable amount of the trade of the mail order houses comes from the smaller towns and villages and consequently the merchants in these places suffer to a great degree.

But the merchants who have suffered most are those who have done nothing to combat the somewhat trying circumstances. If the mail order houses are enticing away their customers, it is wholly their own fault.

Some of the merchants have tried to do something to keep this trade at home, but only a small percentage have started at the work with a determination to win out. If all had made up their minds to win and kept persistently at it, they would now be enjoying a much larger patronage. A great many have the idea that loyalty to the town should keep the trade at home. But it will not. People will buy where the prices are lowest, quality and service considered. Many merchants who have suffered have waged campaigns in which they appealed to the people in mottos such as "Trade in your own town," and "We help pay your taxes," and many others that have proved useless. If you want the trade, you must appeal to the business instinct of your customers, showing them that you can sell as cheaply as the mail order houses, and impressing the fact so clearly in their minds that it will not wear off.

Country Merchant's Advantage.

It is a fact that most merchants in the smaller towns can underprice the mail order houses. The mail order houses may sell a few articles below cost in order to bait the public, but taken straight through the home merchants have them "beaten to a standstill." If they have not there is certainly something wrong. The expenses of the mail order house are enormous. They pay out thousands for merely issuing their catalogues each year and all the other expenses which they have but which the local merchant has not, must be met; and certainly the people who deal with them must pay them. In the small town, rent, wages and many other items which soon count up are much lower, and if the prices are not right, the merchant wants to take a look into matters and find out what is wrong.

Another great advantage the home dealer has over the mail order house is the fact that he can show the goods. The mail order house says: "I will sell you a pair of boots like this picture." The home merchant says: "I will sell you this pair of boots for——, look at them, feel them, take them home and wear them and if they are not all that I claim for them, you may have your money back."

But the only way to combat this is by showing clearly to the people that you can sell as cheap as or cheaper than the mail order house. There are a few who through obstinancy will always deal away from home, but if you can show the people of your town that you can sell the same quality goods at the same price, you are bound to get their trade. But the fact that I wish to clearly impress is that "you must show the people."

Using the Same Weapons.

As you cannot personally meet all mail-order buyers or get them into conversation on this subject, the only way is by judicious advertising in the local paper. Most people read the local paper and most of them read the advertisements. It is by extensive advertising that the mail must order man gets his business and you must fight him in the same way.

But in order to convince others that prices are right, you must first be convinced yourself. This ought to be an easy matter if you compare catalogue prices, freight added, with your own. The next step is to firmly make up your mind that you can and will show the people of your town and thirdly, you must persistently stay at it until you have fully accomplished your object.

It is not meant that a merchant should spend all his profits on advertising, but a small amount of money will go a long way if the arguments you present are well worded and to the point. Throw yourself into the work with enthusiasm. Put your very thoughts before the people in plain common sense language. That is all that is needed to procure the desired result.

There is certainly a grand opportunity. Before people look at the catalogue house goods, they must pay down their money. If the goods are not satisfactory they have them on their hands while the mail order house has the money. It is true that people will accept goods from mail order houses that they would not from the local merchant. Show them that it costs a mail order house more to sell a dollar's worth of goods than it does you, merely mentioning the fact that it costs some mail order houses more than $100,000 a year to issue their catalogue and that this must be added to the prices.

The mail order houses have handsome and also expensive cuts in their catalogues, accompanied by fine descriptive language in order to lead on the prospective buyer.

Ask your customers who helps pay their taxes? Who trusts them when they haven't the money and helps them when they are in hard times? Who takes their produce from them and gives them goods in return, just the same as if it were cash? Certainly it is not the mail order house.

Submit a schedule similar to the following which was taken in a village not one hundred miles from Toronto; it works out the same in your own town:

	Mail Order Price in Toronto.	Freight.	Total Mail Order Price	Price in Village 100 miles from Toronto
New Orleans Molasses, 1 doz. cans	$1.10	05	$1.15	$1.10
Tomatoes, 1 doz. cans	1.00	07	1.07	1.00
Soap, Box	4.75	21	4.96	4.85
Raisins (Val.), 28 lb. box	2.25	06	2.31	2.10
White Beans, Bushel	2.25	11	2.36	2.15
Flour, 1 cwt.	3.50	09	3.59	3.40
Heavy Printed Linoleum, Per yd.	.60	03	.63	.55
Corn Starch, No. 1	.09			.08

Evaporated Apples	.10			.10
XXX Cider Vinegar	.40			.35
Natural Wool Underwear Suit	2.00			2.00
Boys' Hockey Toques	.25			.25

You will see that prices are equal without freight, etc., added and in some cases a little lower.

A Wonderful Concession.

Some of the mail order houses pay freight on goods amounting to $25—sugar, cereals and some other articles exeepted—but any merchant would allow a customer a fair discount if he bought goods, with sugar and cerals excepted, to the amount of $25 and paid cash.

A Spring Seed Window Dressed by Kirk Bros., Bracebridge, Ont., Grocers.

To Increase Business Through Window Displays

Ideas of First-Prize Window Dresser in The Grocer's Christmas Competition—Too Many Lines Should Not be Shown at One Time—Effect of Motion and Show Cards.

By E. J. Kirk.

If the same regularity and careful attention is attended the trimming and keeping of good show windows as are given other details of an average grocery business there is no reason why a marked improvement in trade should not be experienced.

A merchant often, rather than exert himself in changing the display which has been before the people possibly a month, will set to work an inexperienced boy. The business suffers a loss, as a result of a poor arrangement of goods, since the character of a grocery store is judged materially by the manner in which goods are handled and how they are displayed to the public. The matter of good display should hold no small place in the every-day work connected with any grocery store.

Many a business has been cultivated and increased from mere nothing to immense proportions, by constantly keeping before the people, by way of show window displays, a class of inviting goods which tempted a housewife to give her first order. There are instances where very humble starts have been attempted, when the merchant had very little more stock than would fill a large window.

The constant persistency with which his attractive displays of groceries was held before the people gradually made him famous with the buying public.

Courteous and careful treatment of the customers and their wants are essential features in the holding of trade, but when by its attractiveness the window has succeeded in inducing a new customer into the store it is doing the good work for which it was intended.

a grocer should first choose a class of seasonable goods. Avoid showing too many lines at once, as this is confusing to the eye and often ruins the effect of a well-arranged window.

It is possible, though, to make up a variety window, with very good effect, but great care must be exercised in the blending. A mixed display might be made up of goods, such as ham, eggs, lard, canned vegetables, pickles, cheese and greens, but such lines as teas, cereals, confections, onions and soaps, should never be placed together.

By giving each class of groceries on the shelves and in the warerooms in their turn and season a prominence in the windows, and making a strong feature of each line displayed, it establishes in the memories of old and young the names of all special lines a grocer carries and gives a favorable impression of the business methods.

The writer would suggest, in stores where electric power is available, the running of motion displays. They are no doubt the most effective. Some little object moving in a window will arrest the attention of both young and old.

The ordinary fan motor can be used to good advantage, and one can save power rates by attaching a wire from one of the electric lamps. The fan motor will run any light display and is to be found in nearly any grocery store.

Show cards are the chief factor in making prices prominent, and to the writer's mind for planning a nice window they are indispensable.

Trimming a Window to Attract June Brides

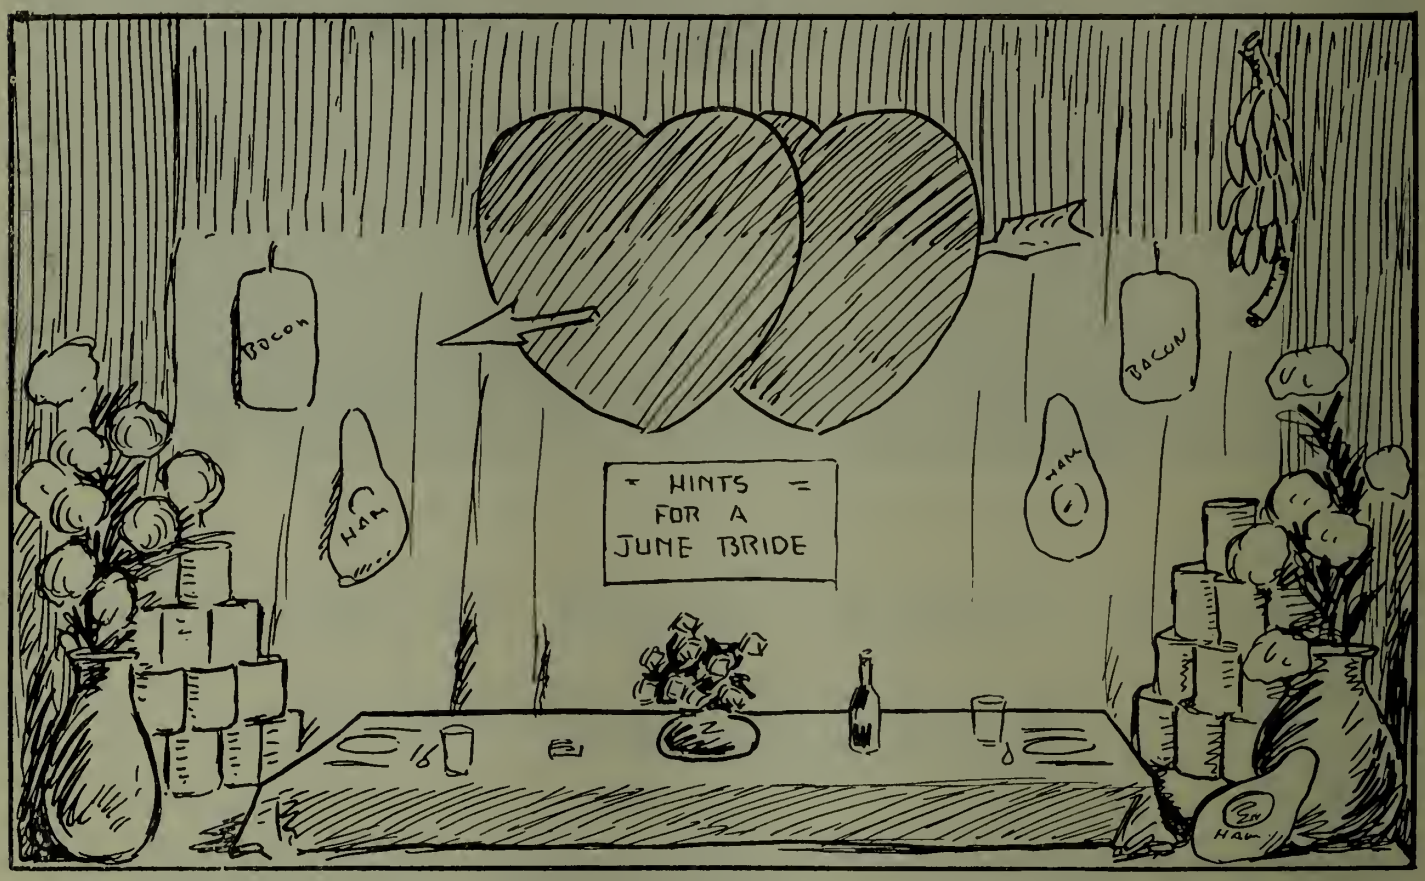
Splendid Opportunity to Use Originality — A Model Suggested That May Be Easily Worked Out or Changed to Suit Different Ideas—Goods That Can be Shown — Preparing the Background.

Grocers should remember that June is a month of many marriages and therefore will see countless new homes established throughout the length and breadth of the country. This creates new trade and every grocer should make it a point to secure as much of this new business as possible.

Personal application is one method by which grocers secure new customers from among the ranks of the newlyweds. An attractive window will however not only appeal to this year's June brides but it will also bring back many of those who made the important step years ago.

An Idea Illustrated.

The Grocer's artist has struck a happy thought for a window, which, if carefully carried out, should not only be seasonable but should be dainty and appealing. It consists of a table set for two with two chairs facing each other. At each side of the window vases of flowers (preferably bridal roses) are noticed and back of them are canned goods. Cooked ham and bacon are shown in conspicuous places. The background may consist of cheese cloth, muslin, etc., with a show card bearing the words "For June Brides." Two hearts pierced by the same arrow emphasize the idea which is suggested. These hearts may be cut from red paper or may be purchased for a small sum from a stationer.



A Suggestion for a June Window to Attract the Attention of the June Brides.

The Table Arrangement.

This is only one of countless arrangements that may be secured. For the ordinary window do not get a big table and do not get one of those miniature kind that Santa Claus brings the baby at Christmas. There is a happy medium to be secured. The table is not the important part of the window but good judgment should be exercised in the selection. A lily-white tablecloth should be used and only the plates with knives, forks and spoons. A vase of bride's blossoms in the centre of the table will add to the effect.

Any flower would serve of course if these cannot be secured. Do not abuse the opportunity to display too many goods on the table. Pile up unassociated articles and the whole ensemble is lost.

Place a bottle of pickles, a jar of jam or preserved fruit, a can of mustard or any of the table necessities in daily use where they will be most effective. Use only one or two at a time and if you follow up the window you can change them every few days for other articles. It might be suggested that near the centre of the table not far from the flowers would be a good location for some of these goods. Turn the labels toward the street. Do not put the show cards in too conspicuous positions. Let your window be of such merit that it suggests and will be understood without a card. Put the card in nevertheless for there may be some people so dense as not to grasp the significance of the display.

If you cannot prepare a background similar to that pointed out do not fail to arrange a window anyway. You can secure bride's blossoms and can attractively arrange them rather profusely with a show card something like this, "June for Bride's Blossoms and Happy Brides."

Do not leave a window as if it had received only half your attention. Even the children have a sense of appropriateness that will pick out the flaws and it is then a question whether it had been better not to have made the attempt.

A Good Advertisement.

But there is no reason why a grocer should not have an appropriate June window. He should take the time to dress it for his window affords him a good advertising medium. In regard to advertising the June-bride seasonable goods in the newspaper it has already been pointed out in The Grocer that some of the trade arrange special sales. They select a list of articles which are required in every home and offer the entire lot at a bulk price.

If a particular store adopts the practice of maintaining the show windows according to the season with special arrangements from time to time the receipts in the office should show appreciable advances if other conditions are favorable.

The Window the Sole Asset of High Class Fruiterer

This Merchant Would Have to Give Up Business if He Could Not Use His Window—Location Has Considerable to do With Amount of Trade Secured—Baskets of Assorted Fruits Displayed Regularly.

It is an absolute fact that the store window is a money maker.

There are few merchants, however, who will go to the extent of saying that if they didn't dress their window they might just as well go out of business.

That is what Wellwood, the high class Toronto fruiterer, claims.

His window is dressed every Monday and Thursday by a professional window artist, J. H. Brown. It is dressed to sell goods and it does.

Mr. Brown stated recently: "We sell only the goods that are shown in the window; if we want to run off any line we display it and it sells."

To gauge properly the general value of this window, one must be apprised of the conditions under which Wellwood sells fruit.

His store is on the main street and in the business centre; in view of the fact that it carries only high quality fruit it has little competition and it is seen by practically every person who walks up or down the side of the street it is on.

Thus its position is a big feature in making sales.

Apart from these conditions, however, the Wellwood store dresses windows that are always "high class pictures." They have the varieties of fruit with which to do it, the good taste to make a distinctive window and to know how to attract passers-by.

The store, too, has gained a reputation among the best families in Toronto by always giving them the best goods. No fruit is allowed to leave the store unless it is known to be absolutely sound.

It has also gained a reputation among visitors and tourists—these people inquire from hotels where the best fruit can be purchased and they are sent to Wellwood's.

But the window comes first in originally creating the desire for their fruit. The owner has to pay a very high rent every year and as he depends entirely on his window and the reputation created by backing it up in allowing only quality goods to leave the store, he necessarily sells a lot of fruit.

Brief, pithy window cards are used regularly, these being written by Mr. Brown. Since comparatively high prices are charged—and Mr. Wellwood finds the people he serves are quite willing to pay them to insure fresh, sound fruit of the best possible quality—not many price tickets are used. But whenever anything of special value is on sale they are invaraibly made use of.

One of the features of the window usually is the use of attractive baskets filled with assorted fruits. Many of these—which range in price from 50c up to $6 or $7—are sold as gifts for sick people, birthdays, the "best girl," and picnics.

It will be observed that there are drapings in the illustration shown. These were special last week in view of the death and funeral of King Edward VII. All such special occasions are taken advantage of.

The store interior is always attractive in harmony with the window. It may be also stated that Wellwood's make it a point to get fruit for sale that is out of season.

Good and Poor Show Cards and Effects of Each

Writer of Them and Believer in Their Value if Properly Presented, Gives Specific Instances, Backing up His Contention — Their Relation With Price-Tickets—The Essentials to Closely Observe in Writing Cards in Order to Make Them Effective.

By J. L. Wyckoff, London, Ont.

Are you getting all the profit you should from your window display ?

The mere fact of displaying a certain line of merchandise in your show window and placing a card upon it, is not all that is necessary to make your window trim a big success. Your other advertising should co-operate with the window ; every possible means should be taken to create a desire in the mind of a possible customer to possess your goods ; instil the fact into the mind of your salespeople that the goods on display in your window are the ones you want especially pushed.

Get them enthused over the articles displayed in the window, and a mere suggestion to the customer of the article on display will usually make a sale. Why ? Because the customer has probably read your advertisement in the newspaper or other form of advertising, which you may be using, saw the goods displayed in your window, and finally upon entering the store the suggestion of the clerk "creates the desire to possess the goods."

The window trim should be changed at least once a week and show different price goods each time ; if you advertise and display high priced merchandise one week, follow it up the next with a lower priced article and in this way your window display and advertising will appeal to all classes of people.

When the Sale is Over.

If your are having a special sale of a certain article try the above plan of co-operation between your advertising and your salespeople and you will be greatly surprised with the result. But here is one point to be remembered—the moment the sale is over, clear up the remnants and put them back into stock at regular prices. Don't allow the special price, if there was any, to drag on after the time specified in your advertisement. If Mrs. Brown should want more of the same article the morning after the sale, quote her the regular price—this will impress the fact upon her that she was getting good value and in this way you educate the public to know just what a "special" means in your store.

Extra Business From Show Cards.

The show window and interior of the store could be made more attractive to the eye of the customer by the use of neatly written show cards, and price tickets that give the price and tell something about your merchandise in plain, readable figures and letters.

These cards could be made by the salesman in his spare time, or a certain time each day or week could be set aside for this sort of work. The greatly increased business which would be derived from a liberal use of cards and price tickets would amply repay for the time spent.

A Believer in Price Tickets.

People are mostly interested in the price. No matter whether a high price or a low one is quoted, it is the price which usually draws the trade ; if the article has not a price card attached, the chances are that the customer will not bother to ask, but on the other hand if the card is on the article, she will notice it and if the price suits she will buy. The merchant should take every means to get this chance sale and the most inexpensive method is to have the different articles on display marked up with plain easily read price cards.

Hints on Writing Cards.

There are three essentials that are necessary for the most successful show cards. The first is to have the inscription short and with convincing arguments that can be read at a glance by every passer by, and therefore, written in a plain easily read alphabet. Avoid as much as possible fancy letters as these are more difficult to read than the plainer ones.

Secondly the grocer should be very careful of the composition of the card. This is very important. Good spacing and layout will make an attractive card even if the letters are not accurately drawn.

The third, and perhaps the most important, is to be sure that the card is clean ; erase all pencil and finger marks with a sponge rubber or if the rubber will not take off all the marks, dip the rubber in a little powdered pumice stone and rub the soiled places lightly, but be careful not to rub the letters with the pumice or the paint may come off as well.

There is nothing that does more to spoil the effect and selling power of an attractive and artistically trimmed window than slovenly and carelessly made price tickets and show cards.

Some Noteworthy Experiences.

When on a recent visit to Toronto I spent one morning noting the effects of different window displays had upon the passing public. In two particular instances I was greatly struck with the artistically trimmed windows of two confectionery stores and from an advertising and selling point should have been winners.

In the first display noted there was one thing which marred and lost sales for that store—and that was the appearance of the price cards. Every article displayed in that window had a price card attached. But the cards were so dirty with finger marks by continual use that instead of creating an appetite for the goods, an opposite effect was produced.

Dirty Cards Repelling.

At this point there were scores of people passing every minute and in order to note the effect this display had upon the passing public, I stood for fifteen minutes at the curb in front and venture to say that out of a possible seventy-five that looked in that window only one went inside—the others looked at the display and then passed on.

An Attractive Card for a Coffee Display—Reduced from 16 x 19 inch size.

Show Card and Price Ticket Combined ; Note the Enticing Wording—"Made from Fresh, Ripe, luscious Concord Grapes."

It was not the poor quality of the goods that did not appeal to the public for the quality was the best. In my opinion the reason was just some dirty price cards stuck on some high-grade confectionery. This window display had the same effect as some nicely cooked food served up on a dirty dish would have on a person's appetite, and there is no doubt that others seeing that window received the same impression.

Going further along the street I came to another confectionery store. There were not as many cards used in this window as in the previous case, but those used were neatly made and judging by the number of people going into the store after looking at the window display, they must have well repaid the management for the time and trouble spent on those cards and on the window trim.

The Conclusions Drawn.

These two instances are given just to illustrate the importance of the appearance of the price card. It either makes or kills the selling power of a window display. In the first illustration it would have been better not to have had any cards at all than to use dirty ones ; and the second case proves that neatly written cards will sell the goods.

More Business Done in Summer than in Winter

Methods a Montreal Retail House Follows to Strengthen its Summer Trade — Watches Camping Parties, Clubs, Week-end Parties, Emigrant Trade and Transients — Have to Employ More Men During the Summer Season—Suggestive Scientific Hints.

It is refreshing to hear of a retail grocer doing more business in summer than in winter, especially after hearing the numerous complaints about the slack summer season, the difficulty of keeping the clerks busy, etc.

Fraser, Viger & Co., Montreal, are doing such a business. The volume is such that additional men have to be taken on for the summer months, and even then longer hours are necessary to fill all the orders.

The secret lies in having carefully studied summer trade, and then experimented until the proper combination was arrived at to obtain that trade. It has taken years of study and development to arrive at the present stage.

Here is their claim: During the hot months all who can afford either the time or money or both, leave the towns and cities for the country, or a summer resort. It is rather an unusual thing for such a resort to have a high-class grocery. As a result, with proper methods of packing, shipping, etc., it is not at all hard for a grocer to retain his customers even if they emigrate to a cooler spot for a holiday.

With this basic fact in mind, Fraser, Viger & Co. started a campaign to hold the camping trade, first of their own customers, then gradually acquiring new ones through making a specialty of that class of trade, and from this beginning has sprung a summer-resort mail order business of large proportions, which is at its best from May to September.

An account of their methods in building up this trade will undoubtedly prove of value to every live grocer, as there are possibilities for all to hold at least a fair portion of their regular trade in the slow season.

Watch Five Separate Items.

According to Alexander Davidson, manager of Fraser, Viger & Co., their summer trade is subdivided into five classes. These are, in order of importance, camping parties, clubs, week-end parties, emigrant trade and transients. Of course, these are exclusive of their regular city trade, which follows the normal course in summer and which drops off considerably.

As to the first class, it is composed largely of old customers, who have a hamper packed to take with them and then send follow up orders as needed through the holiday. Week-end parties come in this same class, and have proved good trade producers.

The club trade has been a gradual mail order development through the adveratising provided by furnishing camps, etc., and becoming known as people who make a specialty of selling high-class goods by mail.

The emigrant trade consists of packing baskets for emigrants who are going across the continent, and is, of course, peculiarly a sea port trade. The method of obtaining such trade is to have some of the dock hands send the emigrants who inquire for such a place, to the store. This has been practised by the aforementioned concern for some years.

Transient trade is procured in a similar way through hotel men. Of course, time is necessady to build up a business of this kind, but the class of trade is so high, that it is a profitable and growing business.

Some of the methods pursued are perhaps new to most of the trade. A specialty is made of preparing and packing hampers of all sizes and varieties. These hampers are largely made by the Indians in the Chateauguay region. They sell anywhere from $5 to $8 each, but are refilled time after time, and thus in the end are not so expensive. A new hamper is being made by a German concern. It has a zinc lining and a separate compartment for ice. In this meats and perishables can be kept for 36 hours without spoiling. In a camp it is often used as a refrigerator, and thus may be almost said to pay for itself.

Fraser, Viger & Co. have made such a specialty of camp supplies that they now outfit them entirely. Tents, blankets, fishing tackle, in fact anything used in a camp, even to the cots and furniture they will supply, and are doing a large business in these lines already. They issue a catalogue, which makes it easy to order, and as a special inducement, will prepay express charges on any order from $25 upward.

Special Baskets Prepared.

For week-end excursions a special line of baskets is necessary. Some of the requirements are candy, fruit, crackers, cheese, etc.

During the season melons form a large item in this out-of-town trade. They have been sent to London, England, several times, and have arrived in first class condition.

In conclusion, it is a fact that instead of laying off men or letting them take holidays all summer, more men have to be taken on and holidays are postponed until after the rush is over, which means late in the fall.

A special department has had to be organized to handle the orders, and special shippers have to be taken on to make sure that the goods are perfectly packed.

Of course, not every grocer has the same opportunity that Fraser, Viger & Co. have, but there is the chance to hold a portion at least of one's customers and to gradually build up summer trade, until it does more for you than barely pay expenses.

GETTING CONFIDENCE.

Inspire confidence in your customers and you have won half of the battle. The grocer who has the most customers is the grocer whose goods give the most satisfaction. Do all in your power to let your customers feel that they are receiving value for their money. The most successful men state that there is no surer method of building up a good business than by this simple but necessary plan.

It simply calls for honest dealings and in this regard the following advice given by a large fruit grower is applicable to those who are connected with any business in which they are dealing with the public:—

"Honesty in the display of samples is not so much good policy as an absolute essential to success. Sticking steadfastly without a hair-breadth deviation to the principle of displaying the fruit 'as it is' with no monkeying or tampering with samples, no topping, dressing, throwing out of rots or artfully concealing ugly little nests in the boxes has in one short season built a foundatio of confidence among the buyers that with every succeeding year will become a greater and greater asset to the shippers.

"The man who fools an auction buyer with a doctored sample is fooling himself a great deal worse. He has made an enemy for keeps where he might have made a friend. He makes a few cents more than he ought at one sale, to lose a great many more cents than his fruit—not he—deserves at many subsequent sales. With his own fist has he blacked his own eyes. The auction buyer whom he has stung never forgets and never forgives."

Effects of the Policy of Giving Short Weights

It is the little things that count in life.

Did you ever know that this was first discovered by a grocer of the old school, who was prone to one of the failings that are here and there met with, even in this enlightened age? He was a short-weight-artist and because he fooled some of the people some of the time he became a hardened sinner and imagined that he could fool all of the people all of the time. One day he was having a big bargain sale in sugar in accordance with the announcements which he had sent throughout the neighborhood in the daily paper.

'Nineteen pounds of the finest ground' for a dollar—and sugar was dearer then than it is now—had been hurled in big type into every house several days before, and the good housewives were eagerly waiting for the day. They were preparing for the preserving season, which would soon be in full swing.

This grocer worked hard all the previous day, filling up the big bags, but instead of giving exactly 19 pounds he kept to himself out of each bag one quarter of a pound. Sometimes, however, he gave the exact amount, but it was rarely. The most of his customers in their homes that night spoke of the grocer as a hustler and deserving of general patronage. The grocer had made it a cash sale and with a smile of satisfaction he carried a stout roll of bills to his bank the morning after, and returned well satisfied with his most recent stroke.

Weighed the Sugar Herself.

But there was one woman who had scales in her house. No one knew why, not even herself, but it is likely she had secured them out of mere curiosity, it being her great failure—as with the majority of her sex. She found that she had received a little less than 18¾ lbs. She was not angry at the loss of that amount of sugar. Had she spilled it out of the bag she would not have thought of it.

But she was annoyed by the fact that the grocer had actually duped her—had received part of her money for nothing. That day she called at his store and in a firm tone—suggesting winter time and ice—asked for her bill, paid it and departed without scarcely answering the remarks of the grocer. She met a neighbor and related the story to her and took the greatest delight in spreading the report that the grocer had cheated her out of a half a pound of sugar. One neighbor passed it around to another, in the course of casual conversations, and that ¼ pound grew in proportions to two and three pounds, and estimation for the grocer sank proportionately.

The grocer did not go broke just then but he was not held in the same high regard as previous to his big bargain sale in sugar. Slowly rumor did its work. That little word passed around, aroused suspicion that he was doing the same in respect to his other articles, and he sank from his high position, as a leading merchant to the level in which it was doubtful whether he was making money or not.

The Grocer is Blamed.

It is strange that anything done by clerks or employes is always blamed against the grocer. All these little things—they are countless in number—mitigate against a business just as little acts of carefulness, thoughtfulness, kindness, gentlemanliness, etc., all help to create a feeling of sympathy for the store and help to build up and cement a strong flourishing business.

What a Mailing List Will Do to Increase Trade

Every retailer, no matter how small or great his business, or how few or numerous his customers, should have a mailing list comprising all the names of those who trade regularly as well as those who trade with him occasionally. For convenience sake it might be well to divide the names of those who are regular customers from those who trade spasmodically, but at all hazards have a complete mailing list.

This can be had at very little cost to the merchant if he will only take time to compile the same as he goes about his other work. For instance if a regular or spasmodic customer calls at the store and the name and address is not known to the retailer, he can easily gain these facts by engaging the customer in conversation, which will make it necessary for him to give up this desired information, and by casually writing the name on a paper at hand the merchant has the information desired without the knowledge of the customer. At leisure these names can be compiled and finally a complete mailing list of the trade is at one's finger's end. It would then be well for the merchant wishing to be real aggressive to get a list of the persons living in his community and who do not trade with him. This will make three lists, which can be used to very good effect if the dealer is so inclined.

How to Interest the Public.

The merchant can use circulars in addition to newspaper advertising to place his proposition before his trade. Those who are trading with him regularly will come perhaps without spending additional money to secure their business. A letter now and then merely to show appreciation would be well, but upon the ones who come occasionally and those who do not come at all he can afford to spend a little cash now and then to open up trade relations with them.

The quotation of special prices, well worded invitations to call and inspect new lines, or old ones about which the customer is not familiar, improvements in the store, special sales in the various departments and a thousand other things can be used as pretexts for writing the trade and every time they receive a letter they either consciously or unconsciously are drawn near your place of business.

There are a great many merchants sitting on their counters and store boxes whittling and complaining about the mail order house stealing their business when these mail order concerns are securing the trade by no stronger process than the ones enumerated here. They simply keep up a line of correspondence with the consumer, calling attention to their stocks in a thousand ways and in this manner keep up a friendly relation between the consumer and the mail order house.

Mr. Farmer is led to believe the mail order people are his friends on account of their friendly way of treating him. Some even form the idea that they would be received with open arms and readily recognized if they were to call at the office of the mail order house, so strong is the fictitious friendship built up between the mail order house and the consumer.

If the mail order concerns can create this feeling among so many thousands of customers, is it not possible for grocers knowing most of the trade personally, and they knowing you to be honest in everything you say and do, is it not possible for you to produce even a greater feeling of friendship between your trade and yourself if you will make the best use of the advantages offered you by these more aggressive methods?

The Methods of a Successful Retail Advertiser

The Canadian Grocer Prize Winner For Two Consecutive Years Gives His Ideas—Comparisons Between Poor and Effective Advertising — Condemns the Cutting of Prices and Advertising the Fact to Sell the Goods—The Headline Has Much to do With the Effectiveness.

By Forsyth Jr., Dartmouth, N. S.

The question that agitates every merchant's mind is, does advertising pay? Well, it can undoubtedly be made to do so. In a newspaper of a recent date I noticed the advertisement of one of our most up-to-date Halifax grocers, offering delicacies suitable for the New Year's dinner. The space will cost, I have no doubt, $100 per year, and I have no hesitation in saying that the only man who makes anything out of such advertising is the publisher.

Another merchant I know of (not a grocer), comes out frequently with about half a page of exciting headlines followed by a list of prices about half the ordinary price of the goods he sells, and about two or three times annually has a closing out sale. If this man gets any profit out of his advertising I do not think it will be for very long.

Another uses a cut supplied by a company perhaps a thousand miles away, and fills in a few words of his own; the cut would be equally suitable for gimlets, gooseberries or godly books. I do not believe this attracts much business.

Thos. Edison was once showing some person through his workshops and the visitor on seeing several hundred unsuccessful inventions remarked, "Then all this has been wasted." Mr. Edison said: "Oh, no, I now know of several hundred ways not to do it." So the next best way to knowing how to do it is to know how not to do it.

I have been frequently exasperated by ad. critics telling how to advertise. Boiled down it amounted to about this: Get some very low prices on a few lines and advertise them in strong attractive language and watch the crowds come. I have never thought it much of a trick to sell 25 lbs. of sugar for a dollar and to spend money advertising the fact that I was doing so only seemed to be burning the candle at both ends.

My object has been rather to sell more goods at regular prices and I believe sensible advertising will do this.

The Objects of Advertising.

Advertising may be roughly divided into two classes :

First—A statement of something that you have for sale that will serve as a reminder to any person wanting the article.

Second—A description of articles calculated to make the reader want or think he wants them.

I enclose what I consider a good example of the first class—a horse for sale. It is as follows :

NOTICE—For sale a horse which is a mare, and is ten years old, weighs 980 pounds and will be sold for 6½c a pound if one purchaser takes the lot. She is a good worker and her faults (if any) will be gladly narrated by the neighbors. Forsyth Jr.

This advertisement did not (yet) sell the horse, but it brought enquiries, which is about all that an advertisement of the kind could be expected to do. It is worded in such a way that a person reading the first line would finish the ad. whether he was interested in a horse or not ; and if he heard a friend enquiring about a horse he would be sure to remember that he had seen one advertised.

But while this will do once in a while for groceries, the second class is more frequently in demand. I believe it is a fact that the great majority of people are living upon a far too limited menu which could be very largely increased with benefit to the grocer and the customer and without very much additional expense. Here is the opening for the grocer. Suggest things people are not using much of and could use to advantage. Suggest ways of cooking them. Practice describing your goods and their possibilities. Read advertisements ; they are the most interesting part of most magazines. When you find an advertisement that grips you, that makes you want to buy something you have no need for, study it. Do not be afraid to copy it ; very few of us are original. Those of us who think we are, are mostly deceiving ourselves, and the next best thing to being original is to know a good thing and to appropriate it to our own use.

Always Mention the Price.

Before you start to write your advertisement, take a good look around your store and make a list of the goods, (seasonable goods) you want to advertise, and then get away from everybody where you can have an opportunity to think. Describe them as well as you can, but do not be too wordy, and don't omit the price—which need not be a cut one.

If you have a good leader to offer, so much the better. I have spent some money upon cuts and have had a good number free from manufacturers, but I rarely felt that I could spare the room for them, always preferring to fill the space with what I had to say.

It is a good plan to note carefully what the manufacturer has to say about his goods. You can frequently get a much better description than you could make yourself. Carry a book in your pocket to jot down ideas that may occur to you, happy phrases and the like. Do not be too economical with your space.

Try to specialize on one line.

THE PERSONAL ELEMENT IN BUSINESS.

The personal element is an important factor bearing upon the success of the man who is dealing with the public. The grocer is included in the list, and from the fact that all his business is done with the public, he should be up with those in the front rank. To him, the following talk, which a large business house has recommended to its travellers, and other employes may be applicable:—

You must, of course, know your stock of goods—but yourself—how about that factor in the problem?

You will never do yourself justice as a salesman until in cold blood you have taken stock of yourself. Take pencil and paper to-day and write down in the — and + columns your good and bad points as a salesman.

Why? Because you ought to use your good points to the limit, and begin a systematic campaign on overcoming your faults.

Let's get down to cases. Are you industrious, optimistic, thorough, quick, observant, patient, always courteous, tactful, clear in expressing your thoughts, able to concentrate?

Do you always keep your temper, talk too much or too little?

Do you gossip, exaggerate, or bluff?

Are you loyal to the house?

Now about your health. Can you improve it? Are you sleeping enough? Do you east sensibly? Do you exercise regularly?

Now, let's be brutally frank and talk about personal appearance. Are you as immaculately clean as your job will allow your hands and nails, clothes and shoes to be?

I'm not preaching. This is a chat about an inventory which I take myself periodically, and I never do it without finding that I must keep building up where my defenses have fallen away.—By R.N.S.

Advertising Key-note to Quebec Grocer's Success

Pays Personal Attention to Newspaper Copy—Good Circulars Pull Business if Properly Distributed—Plain Windows Effective, While Well-lighted Night Displays Sell Goods.

"I make no secret of the key to my success in the grocery business ; it may seem curious to you that I should do a business of such volume in this rather poor location, but, when you know how it is done it is not surprising. I have built up my business, held it, and will continue to hold it—by advertising."

There is a grocer in Quebec city who has ideas of his own, and this is one of them, which he related to a member of the staff of The Canadian Grocer not long ago.

He is one of the leading grocers of the province, and his name is Elzear Turcotte.

Mr. Turcotte's name is not unfamiliar to readers of The Grocer, for illustrations of his store, and some description of his methods have appeared ere now, but his ideas on advertising will be new to readers, and undoubtedly will contain many grains of wisdom worthy of consideration by successful grocers, as well as the ambitious who hope to reach the goal.

"When I started here seventeen years ago," said Mr. Turcotte, whose store is on des Fosses and Grant Streets, "there was a large consuming public in the vicinity, but the gradual intrusion of manufactures has resulted in nearly all my old customers moving to other sections of the city.

"I realized when I started that advertising was essential, and I did not hesitate to spend money in this way when I had it. The first year yielded me sufficient to allow of a small investment in advertising and I commenced. I have kept it up ever since.

Attention to copy lc

"I advertise in numerous ways. The daily papers, English and French, I utilize every issue, running generally, a six inch ad, which I find suits my purpose admirably. I give special attention to the preparation of copy, attending to it myself, and endeavoring to tell the public something every time. I impress upon them the fact that they can get the best, and save money, at Turcotte's. In view of the fact that they come here to buy, from all over the city, I believe I am justified in concluding that the advertisements are effective. I do not believe in the policy of letting the newspaperman look after copy unless he does it well. I find that I have to prepare all my advertisements in order to have them satisfactory—I cannot leave the work to my clerks, even much as I would like to.

Circulars Pull Business.

"Periodically I circularize the people residing within a certain radius of the store. An attractive piece of literature, telling a direct story, and offering special inducements, is prepared and sent around. This pays me.

"Another advertising idea which I have found most profitable is through the medium of my windows. You will be surprised to learn that I am not a great believer in artistic displays—perhaps because I have not the time to dress my windows elaborately, for I have ten of them. But I find that I can always sell goods by simply making a display, very plain, but showing just what I have inside. Price tickets on the goods are most helpful, in my opinion.

Night Window Publicity.

"And speaking of windows, one of the strongest methods of advertising, one of the most profitable, and, at the same time, most frequently neglected, is through the use of electric lights at night. Now, every night, as soon as it gets dark, every one of my ten windows is brilliantly illuminated—and the lights are on till there is nobody passing. Day after day I find that people come into the store to purchase goods they have seen the evening previous in the windows. You may have remarked that it is rather dark on some of the streets hereabouts. This was an opportunity for me. My store extends a block in length on either street, and I figured that if this portion of the street were well lighted, through my window lights, people would pass my store in preference to taking the dark streets. This is what they do—and I secure much publicity of the best kind at a very small cost."

Mr. Turcotte keeps thirty clerks busy, and has a delivery system which covers the city thoroughly, and his success makes his remarks of particular value to the merchant on the look out for suggestions that have been tried and proved profitable.

QUESTIONS MERCHANTS WILL DISCUSS.

At the Annual Convention in June of Retail Merchants' Association.

The eleventh annual Ontario Provincial Convention of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, will be held in Kingston, Ont., on June 21st and 22nd. With the special act of incorporation passed during the session of Federal Parliament just closed and with the legislation to regulate trusts and combines recently introduced by Hon. McKenzie King, the executive claim they now have opportunities of improving the retail trade of Canada. Future happenings will tell. Among the subjects that will be discussed during the convention are the following:—

"The advantages to be gained by supporting the merchants of your home town."

"How farmers can make their farms more attractive and valuable by co-operating and understanding the aims and objects of the retail merchants' organization better."

"How the local press can be made more valuable to the retail merchants, and why they should support its advertising columns."

"The injurious effect that the bargain counter advertisements of the Toronto dailies have on the growth of the cities and towns."

"The cause of the increased cost of food products from the practical standpoint of the merchant who knows the conditions."

"Why Co-operative Stores are commercially unsound."

Every merchant who has a trade grievance will have an opportunity of presenting it.

The Kingston retail merchants are making preparations for entertaining the visitors.

E. M. Trowern, 21 Richmond St. West, Toronto, is the secretary of the association, and is sending invitations to the various secretaries who will issue a general invitation to their members to be present.

NEEDS TO BE EDUCATED.

Mr. Honey Mooner (at lunch)—"Dearie, there's something the matter with this tea; it's hardly lukewarm."

Mrs. Honey Mooner (apologetically)—"Yes dear, I know; but, you see I couldn't risk having it any warmer. The box was labeled 'Gunpowder Tea.'"

Never forget that every statement you make in writing an advertisement is sure to be tested. A lie is always wrong. It is not even excusable in an advertisement. A lie will be detected, and the house which tells it will be held responsible. There is, furthermore, no sense in lying about your goods. It is not necessary in order to sell them. Even exaggeration is foolish. The very purpose of your ad. is to induce people to come in and look at the goods—and if there is any mendacity they go away not only disappointed but disgusted.

Make the Newspaper Ads. Newsy in Style

Criticisms of Advertisements Submitted, Given by The Canadian Grocer's Ad-Writing Specialist—Place as Much Value as Possible on Any Special Offering — Feature Certain Goods With Their Prices.

By W. F. Ralph.

It is good policy to try to instil news value into retail grocery advertising, and the lines handled in a grocery store readily admit of the introduction of this feature. The stock of a grocery store consists of articles that are used daily by the people and the qualities of which are ever present in their minds.

As an instance of this quality of news interest consider the small ad. of Smith & Ball. In this case the advertiser has utilized his opportunity to feature potatoes at a special price. A special price on a staple article invariably excites the interest of housekeepers. There is nothing else about this little ad. that is particularly attractive, at a casual glance. But the word "potatoes" with an unusually low price attached is, in itself, sufficient to draw the interest of the buyer.

An Ad. From a Picton, Ont., Daily Newspaper.

This ad. contains another news feature that does not seem to have been made as much of as it deserves—the offer of three herrings with every twenty-five cent purchase. The ad. might easily have been improved by giving this item a little better display. This could be done by omitting the present headline and the items appearing immediately above and by insetting a rule box. Within the box could be placed the matter referring to the offer with a simple headline like "Don't Miss This."

The item concerning shirts and overalls does not add to the attractiveness of the ad. and these goods could be emphasized more forcibly by forming part of a special ad. devoted exclusively to the non-grocery lines handled by Smith & Ball.

The same firm has submitted a half page Christmas goods ad. which suffers chiefly from being overcrowded and by the lack of any special features, specially displayed. Probably none but those whose time hung heavily on their hands would attempt to read right through an ad. so solidly set. The large space used could have been made much more attractive by omitting one half the lines mentioned and giving the other half better display.

The advertisement of the Good Co., Lethbridge, Alta., reproduced here occupied twelve inches double column, and appears to lack in points of particular interest. The subject matter of the ad. admits of considerably more snappy treatment. To begin with the headline seems a little too long and is rather of too general a nature to occupy the most prominent place in the ad. Suppose the ad. writer took as the basis of his headline the fact that a carload of new goods has been received, and opened up his ad. something like this: "More Dainties From the East;" or, "Eastern Delicacies for your Table." Follow the headline with a brief paragraph something like this:

"Another carload of high class groceries has been received the contents of which awaits your attention in our store. Come down soon and make your selection while the stock is most complete. Just as an example of what we can do to help you in giving your table that dainty variety which is always desired by the bright housekeeper, note this list:"

Employes Giving Away the Business Secrets

Injuries Caused by the Talkative Clerks — Often Responsible for Losing Good Store Customers—Necessity of Merchants Using Care in Selection of Clerks and of Educating Them Along Scientific Lines.

By W. E. Mantony.

"Talk business," is a business axiom, but there's a right way to talk business—likewise a wrong way.

It's years ago, but even to this day I can never pass a corner grocery without thinking of the man who poured three or four city lots and a couple of houses into one, and the girl clerk who told us all about it. The man was once a farmer, and the farm bought him his city lots. His store was bright and clean—at Christmas time, and maybe once in the spring ; and he used to dun his debtors whenever he needed the money, but not otherwise. A girl clerk with a tongue a yard long often did the dunning.

Evidently on this occasion she felt that in dunning she was sinning horribly against good taste, and that so flagrant an offense as asking for her employer his just due demanded something by way of apology or explanation.

"Mr. Douglas is horribly hard up, you know," she gushed, "and he really needs the money or he wouldn't ask for it. He's had to turn back a couple of drafts already this week, and there's a note to Tomkinson for $210 coming due to-morrow."

The lady of the house expressed her sympathetic concern, coupled with the hope that now the spring was coming on business would pick up.

"Oh, I don't imagine it will," candidly confessed the girl. "Mr. Douglas has never done much business there. It doesn't seem as if the location were good, or something. He's been going behind right along. Why, he's lost three lots and two houses trying to run that grocery. He'd sell out only the stock is so run down, and the business has got to be so small that nobody feels like taking it because it would be just like starting new and building it all up again."

This was just one customer. Imagine that clerk dunning five or ten every day, and gushing in like manner to every one of them. Advertising—well, it just advertised the luckless Douglas into insolvency, whither he was speeding fast enough anyway. For, when all is said and done, the average buyer, odd though it may seem to the casual looker-on, prefers to patronize the successful business man and shuns commercial communion with the failure. It's doubtless, instinct, with a little layer of logic piled on top, the logic being that the grocer who goes into the hole does so because of shoddy methods, and shoddy methods imply shoddy goods.

In a long experience with clerks of all sorts, in all lines of business, I have never met a clerk who approached that one in capacity to divulge to all the world what should be business secrets. Hence, she must have been the astounding exception that, by striking contrast, emphasizes the good judgment which as a general rule characterizes the clerk's words in discussing his employer's business.

The Banker the Only Exception.

Nevertheless, the horrible example is one that every clerk in just beginning should hold steadily before his mind's eye. For every clerk is a putative business man, who may some day, and bably will, conduct business for himself. And one of the first essentials of a successful business is the ability of the Man Behind to keep a straight face and tight-sealed lips when troubles threaten. To his banker in times of financial stress as in all other times he should disclose his business affairs with the utmost frankness, because the banker has interests kindred to his own, can usually advise him wisely, and in any event can be counted upon for secrecy. But the banker is the one exception to the rule.

The average young clerk is enthusiastic. Every day he enters into the possession of new facts regarding the business in which he has embarked and the firm with which he is connected. In his anxiety to pose before his friends as one well informed, the temptation is all powerful to disclose all he has learned each day to admiring friends before he seeks his weary pillow. As rapidly as the mysterious book of business opens before his eyes, he longs to read off everything revealed by its pages to those who are interested in him and his work. The naturally reticent clerk can tell how, time and again, he has confided to some one facts which, a moment later, he would with better judgment have sealed in his own breast. And if the clerk with good judgment experiences and surrenders to the temptation, what must befall the clerk whose judgment is in whole or in part a missing quantity ?

Giving Away Business Secrets.

Down east I knew a young man who held and still holds a job as bookkeeper in a retail store. In a small city the bookkeeper not infrequently does a turn at clerking now and then, and when the monthly accounts are made up trots around town with them —partly for the sake of the airing, partly because there's no one else to do the work. The music of his own voice is dear to this clerk ; and I have known him, after collecting an account or even after merely presenting the bill, to sit down in the debtor's kitchen or parlor as the case may be and impart a wealth of information regarding the accounts he has to collect, the debtors who pay slowly and those who pay quickly, what excuses they give and what is their probable reason for getting behind. If the debtor isn't shrewd enough to infer that his failings will likewise be narrated at the next port of call, then he is far denser intellectually than the average of the great army of debtors, and if he doesn't see that clerk depart with a more or less healthy grouch against the man who employs him, he isn't human.

The fact that where merchants' association collection departments and the accompanying delinquent lists are maintained the information these departments secure is limited strictly to members, should be a pretty good guide of conduct for the clerk who has to do with his employer's accounts. Trade etiquette and the prospect of similar return favors justify one merchant keeping his fellow merchant informed regarding the non-paying idiosyncracies of the people who buy from him, but whether John Smith is a dead-beat or not is none of the general public's business.

It might, theoretically, be better for all concerned were the contraction of debts constituted by law an absolutely public matter, just as are the proceedings of a police court. But the whole trend, alike of legal decisions and of business practice, is in the direction of secrecy.

BRINGING BACK CUSTOMERS.

Perhaps it is a little brightening up that the store needs. Unless watched carefully the interior of the store will become shabby and more or less forbidding. No one likes to purchase goods at a mussy or dirty store, and this observation applies with especial force to a grocery store where a considerable portion of one's food supplies are obtained. Keep everything clean. Keep it bright. Keep it arranged in an attractive way. The extra effort required doesn't amount to much and the effect is almost incalculable. Customers will return again and again to a clean, well kept and attractively arranged store, when they will never go back to one that presents the opposite appearance. The influence of this particular of business is more far reaching than seems possible, and for many years never had any attention devoted to it.

Leaks in a Grocery Business Which Can Easily be Averted With Closer Attention—Judgment in Buying Counts for Much —Hints on Arranging Stock, Weighing Goods, Sweeping, Etc., Given by a Clerk.

By A. H. Atkinson.

Attention to the smaller details of a business decides to a great degree, the success of the enterprise. Perhaps this is more true of the retail grocery business than any other. At any rate many grocers are daily losing money in ways that might easily be averted if they instructed their clerks to attend closely to the small store leaks and watched them themselves.

Grocers claim that they cannot weigh 100 lbs. out of a cwt. of sugar. As this is one of the most staple articles and as the profit is generally small, much attention should be paid to it. There is a tendency to give overweight, and in many establishments too large a quantity of the sugar is spilt over the counter and floor in the process of weighing.

Sugar should be weighed in spare time so that there will be no occasion to spill any or to give overweight. Sugar, too, should always be stored in a dry place so that there will be no loss on account of the sugar hardening or sticking to the bag.

Another article the clerk should be careful of, is the paper bag; more so as they are given away. The different sizes should be arranged in a rack so that there will always be the required size on hand and that there may be none scattered about the floors. It should always be remembered that goods look smaller in quantity when placed in a large bag, and there should always be a roll of paper of short width in which to wrap the smaller parcels.

If a grocer handles oranges and lemons but does not sell large quantities, always keep them wrapped as they are much more liable to spoil with the wrappers off. This fruit, too, should be placed in a prominent place in the store, so that it will be turned over quickly and if a case of oranges or lemons with some spoilt is received, always pick the fruit over, removing the bad ones, otherwise they will spoil the fruit which they touch.

Care of Smoked Meats.

Smoked meats should always be wrapped in air tight paper as they dry out a great deal if exposed to the air. Keep the surplus stock in a cool place. For cheese, the new glass cheese cases are more preferable than the old upright cases as the cheese will not dry out as quickly.

Inattention to stock causes enormous losses in many grocery establishments. Not only are many articles spoiled by lying a long time on the shelf, but nearly every article in a grocery shop deteriorates with age. Special precaution should be taken to place old goods to the front where they will be sold first.

Goods such as yeast cake that is especially affected by lying on the shelf a long time, should not be opened until the old stock is completely sold out. Be sure and place goods that sell only part of the year in a place so that they will be all sold before their season is over. Judgement should be used in purchasing goods when the selling season is about over. It is better to buy a small quantity and sell it all than too much and have part left on your hands.

Scientific Management.

In order to successfully manage a grocery store, a grocer must keep his stock complete and still not overbuy and have goods become old before sold. Buy articles that sell slowly in as small quantities as possible, even if the price is a little more. One can usually get a shipment of groceries in a day or so and it is not therefore necessary to overload. A grocer should keep his stock fresh.

If you keep your sugars and cereals in barrels, always see that the covers are on, as they keep them clean from dust and dirt from the counter. A good cover may be made by tacking ordinary cotton over a hoop that will fit over the top of the barrel.

Any line which is at all liable to leak from the vessel it is in, should be placed on the bottom shelf and away from other goods.

We find that grocers still continue to place meats and butter together in the refrigerator and this in many cases spoils the flavor of the butter. Butter should be wrapped in extra large oiled paper so that it is completely shut off from the air.

Grocers who handle coal oil should take great pains to have it placed by itself so that it will not damage other goods, and to keep it well covered as coal oil evaporates a great deal in a short time.

If package tobacco is handled it is well to always keep a jar with a sponge in it, well filled with water in the case. A juicy vegetable or apple if placed in the caddy with chewing tobacco, will keep it soft and moist.

When goods are placed in the cellar, they should always be put on a platform, as dampness will make wrappers on goods look old and in some cases spoil the goods.

Brooms ought to be displayed brush upward in racks made for the purpose to keep them in shape and so that the corn will not become broken.

Hints on Sweeping.

Another thing to which I might draw the merchant's attention is sweeping—the grocer's daily task. Nothing makes goods look worse or more unsalable than being dust covered. In sweeping the broom should be drawn along the floor and not sprung out in a manner that shoots the dirt ahead and raises the dust. There are also many sweeping compounds made now that make sweeping easier.

Although the smaller items count a great deal, perhaps there is nothing as important as judgment in buying and close attention to the stock.

Keep on friendly terms with your store neighbors. Take time to visit around among them a little. It will pay you in more ways than one.

The politeness of the salespeople in a store ought not to be five dollar or ten dollar politeness, but the politeness that is born of common courtesy.

Where one man has succeeded by sheer good luck ten have succeeded by sheer pluck and in spite of plenty of ill luck.

It is all right to be sociable and chatty with a customer, but be sure you know how much of this to mix in with the business talk without spoiling a sale.

Salesmanship and its Relation to Retailing

The Salesman is Born Not Made Says One Retailer—Development Comes With Opportunities—Methods a Retail Salesman Uses to Sell the Goods—Where the Other Fellow Falls Down—The Value of Judgment and Personality.

By Frank Mather.

Some men are born endowed with brilliant faculties which elevate them to positions impossible to the average mortal.

Music has had its grand old masters; literature too, painters and sculptors there have been whose sublime achievements will perhaps never be equalled. In the development of electricity, it has been the privilege of but a comparative few to fathom its possibilities and to perfect them. In mechanics, in the conquering of the air, in every walk of life there have been the favored few possessing a peculiar adaptability which the rest of men have designated genius.

Salesmanship may be catalogued in the list of arts and its importance to-day may be entirely attributed to the great strides that have been made in business. Recent years have resounded with an unbroken echo of the word 'system' which has wrought amazing changes in business methods and the present century prides itself upon its advancement in this regard.

An Important Link.

But in the completed chain connecting the manufacturer to the consumer, no link requires more careful attention in its forging than that representing the salesman. To-day, perhaps, there is a traveler trying to sell battleships to Brazil; another is selling locomotives in Chili; a third is talking binders in Russia; another is pushing canned goods in Montreal and still another is selling general merchandise in a small store at Hogg's Corners.

A manufacturer said recently that he was at his best in attending to that part of the business but he feared that he would soon be insolvent had he to do the actual selling.

But, while pointing out the important part that salesmanship plays in the great game of commerce this is intended to deal with its potentialities in only one branch—the grocery business.

"The salesman is born, not made," was the opinion expressed by a prominent grocer when asked his views recently. This does not preclude the possibility of a clerk becoming a valuable man behind a counter. If it did grocers would find themselves with but few assistants for the ranks of "to the manor born" salesman are at present not over populated.

Becomes an Early Issue.

Salesmanship sprouts in boyhood. Reverting back to your school days you can remember the lad who always had more trinkets than others. He did not get money from home to buy them for his parents in almost every case needed every cent for household necessities.

The necessity of depending upon himself cultivated and strengthened his natural bent. If he had a knife it seemed to be sharper and more useful than others. Had he an alley it would almost win marbles itself. His tops seemed to spin longer and in fact everything he possessed seemed different to similar articles owned by other boys. He was continually trading and bartering and invariably received the long end of the deal.

The average successful grocer is a fair salesman. If he is not, he deserves commendation for steering clear of the rocks of failure. Realizing the importance of good salesmanship he should impart his ideas to his clerks if only for the selfish reason that his business will be strengthened thereby.

"I first try to get my clerks interested in my business," I heard a merchant say the other day. "The deeper interest they show the more valuable they are. It probably means that they should be paid more and it is also a matter pretaining to themselves for they will secure a closer insight into the grocery business.

"To secure their enthusiasm I take them at times into my confidence. It may be that I will get a good suggestion now and then, but it particularly creates a kindly feeling that must be engendered to build up a strong business."

Actions Louder than Words.

"There is no use in preaching to them. Action count every time. Instead of saying: 'I want you to take as deep an interest in the business as if it were your own,' do things from time to time that will keep the enthusiasm alive and keen.

"I tell my clerks the cost of practically every article and I have found it profitable. For instance a woman asks for butter of a particular kind. Now, if you have another butter that is equally good but which returns you a better profit it is surely worth while telling the customer that it is good butter, that it is a cent cheaper and that she will find it satisfactory. Do not misrepresent. If it is inferior tell her so or don't mention it. Give her the butter she asks for rather than run the risk of displeasing her by not being candid.

"Butter is simply an illustration. It represents almost every article in the store. Don't give this liberty to a new clerk. Wait until you are satisfied that he is worthy of the trust. Once he is allowed to suggest in this way, however, you will find that he will take greater interest because it enables him to test his salesmanship. Suggesting is a practice that should not be followed too often and careful judgment must be exercised.

"A good salesman, however," went on the grocer, "naturally possesses the faculty of judging rightly.

"A customer will be pleased if she finds that she can secure a class of goods that is not of inferior quality but is a trifle cheaper than the kind she has been getting.

"Know your goods. To suggest in the manner referred to demands that the clerk knows exactly what he is talking about. Having satisfied himself he should be cautious. Ask an intimate friend to try the cheaper kind and if opinions agree then it is safe to suggest.

"Some grocers do not tell the cost price to the clerks. I intimated to mine that this was a privilege, and I have never regretted this step, in fact I am satisfied that it is a good one.

Bonus to Encourage Clerks.

"Encourage the clerks. They will appreciate it and it will be an incentive to do better. I have adopted the practice of giving a bonus at the end of the year. It is reckoned according to each man's sales. It helps to foster enthusiasm. Besides it is advisable to hold out a financial inducement. Clerks are only human, anyway, and this is but another form of encouragement.

"I allow the weekly half holiday during the summer months and in the matter of hours I try to be as considerate as possible. When clerks are bringing suggestions to you; when they prevent waste about the store and remain of their own accord after hours or take it upon themselves to keep the windows well dressed you can then feel satisfied that they have the proper interest.

"But to teach them tact, good common sense, patience, cheerfulness, the art of accurately judging a person's character so as to deal with him or her in the right way, is difficult.

"These are natural gifts, but of course must be developed. The true salesman possesses them all.

"Salesmanship is a big broad subject. Why there is one part—I call it hypnotic suggestion—that alone is of utmost importance. Some clerks have the method of suggesting articles with the result that nine times out of ten the original order is doubled or trebled and the customer departs pleased that she was thus reminded. Another clerk tries the same thing and fails. He might even name the self same articles but wouldn't make a sale.

Could Sell Mud at Times.

"I remember talking to a traveler one day on this subject and he remarked, 'There are times when I could sell mud if it were decently labeled.' I was glad he was carrying a good stock otherwise more than one grocer would have suffered for he certainly knew how to sell and he never loaded me up either."

The grocer thus concluded, "To be a good salesman you must know your goods, and know their prices. You should not have to ask some one else; you must love selling them; you ought to feel that you would rather get five or six good orders than have your supper; you must know how to suggest extra articles and know when to stop. Then you are only beginning. After that it depends upon your personality. You may acquire the necessary tact and judgment but without personality the trade will hardly point to you as a natural salesman.

Essentials to Salesmanship in a Retail Store

Handling Various Customers and How to Obtain Their Permanent Good-Will—Knowledge of the Goods Required and Methods of Securing It—The Kind of Salesmanship That Attracts and Sells More Goods.

By H. D. McMullen.

The requisites for a good salesman seem to be practically the same, no matter what line of business one enters.

Recent conversations with men who were pointed out as the two best salesmen in their respective stores, threw a little new light on this large and already much discussed subject.

In the first place there was a considerable outward difference in the methods of the two. The first was a well educated man, with a good address, polished manner and a general talking ability. Perhaps his usual line of conversation would not appeal to the average hard-headed business man, but it must be taken into account that the majority of customers are women, as far as the retail grocer is concerned.

The man must evidently have been a good reader of all the latest "best six sellers," or at least if he wasn't he had read mighty thorough reviews of them. It was not often he spent sufficient time to talk of such matters, but when he did it always had a good effect. He talked well about his goods, and nearly always managed to sell the highest grades kept in the store. He did not sell to so many more customers than the next man, but his customers were of the wealthier class, to whom he evidently appealed, and their orders were worth several smaller ones.

As far as actual working knowledge of the store stock, there were a couple of his fellow clerks who could have given him points and then left him behind. He was there to sell as much as he could, and his performances in that line proved that he was of the stuff of which salesmen are made. He relied on his personality for making customers, rather than on the store, its goods, and his knowledge of them.

True Type of Salesman.

The other man referred to was really the truer type of grocery salesman. He knew just where everything in the store was, knew a lot about the history of each article so far as its manufacture and source were concerned; he even had at his finfers' end recipes for preparing delicious concoctions from his wares. A suggestion here and there from him helped his customer with her buying, and it was all done rapidly yet not hurriedly. There is a great difference, by the way, between these two words. Speed is an essential in a modern store, and yet to hurry a customer is the worst of judgment. Conversation about the weather, etc., have no need of being indulged in. There is plenty of material for the necessary conversation in suggestions as to what to buy, how to prepare it, and any number of other points having a direct bearing on the sale. A customer will think more of the salesman if he shows a thorough knowledge of his trade and has helpful suggestions ready for her than if he attempts to interest her in something entirely foreign to the business in hand. There may be an exceptional man who can make use of such conversation to promote sales but he is the exception, and not the highest type or salesman at that.

Personal acquaintances are on somewhat of a different plane. With them, topics of mutual interest are perfectly in order, but the large percentage of custom is from strangers or acquaintances made in the store.

There are many elements which go toward making a salesman. Perhaps the most important one is to know what you are selling, its price, where it is kept in the store, and its uses. If you know every article in the store well enough to make an interesting talk about it, you have the most important element for your position.

Perhaps the second requirement is a memory for names and faces—know your customers when they enter the store and address them by name, and you have gone a long way toward making a friend and steady buyer.

The ability to talk to the point, which in many lines comes first in the list, is probably not deserving of better than third for a grocery salesman. It is of the greatest service in pushing new or additional items. The man who can convince a customer she wants certain goods she isn't sure she does want is a valuable man to his employer. But to do so he must know the goods, and he must have a knowledge of his customer to a certain extent. Given these three requisites a man should be able to keep his sales well above the average, even if he has only those three.

A Strong Point With Women.

Personal neatness is of great assistance, and in fact the untidy clerk is an unnecessary adjunct in the grocery business. Cleanliness appeals to women in a marked degree, and the man who looks after this detail has a much better show than the one who doesn't. To go into a store and be waited on by a clerk who hasn't shaved for a couple of days, and has forgotten to wash his hands that morning, gives a bad taste to the customer and the poor, inoffensive goods usually take on a suspicious appearance.

Politeness in all things is essential. It is really a part of all the other requisites. A surly, ill-mannered clerk will lose customers for their very fear of having to be waited on by him. No grocery can afford to have a man who does not always show the proper attitude toward a customer.

There is no need of being servile—simply a placing of the customer in the place she should be, that of the buyer. You wish to have her buy. Then it is ridiculous to imagine you will help matters by trying to show that you got out of bed on the wrong side that morning. Ordinary, every day civility is all that is necessary.

Ideas of Others Valuable.

A careful study of one or more good trade papers will always help the salesman. The exchange of ideas carried on by such a medium gives a new light on an old subject and helps over many an awkward place. There is always something more to be learned about your business. Never forget that. Talk to the older men in the business and you can always pick up some hint that will help.

A general study of prevailing market conditions is a necessity to the ambitious salesman; and who isn't ambitious? Very often such study will enable one to give his employer a timely hint about the prospect of a rise or reduction in price of some article. Remember that no one is infallible. Even the best men in the trade sometimes make mistakes, and the man who saves such a mistake is going to be better looked after than the one who doesn't.

In conclusion just remember that the store's welfare means yours and that anything you do to advance its interests is going to help you and, vice versa, anything injuring the store injures you, and you can't go far wrong.

TURN-OVER ONCE A MONTH.

What may appear to be an innovation in retailing, is the endeavor of H. E. Weldon, Winnipeg, to turn-over his stock as far as possible once each month —twelve times a year. Those who have practised for years a turn-over of three or four times a year until they have made themselves believe that it is impossible to do otherwise, will no doubt be interested in Mr. Weldon's policy. The main part of the management which Mr. Weldon depends upon to carry this out is the buying. Being in the same city with several wholesalers, it is not necessary to order such a quantity of any lines of goods that cannot be sold out within thirty days. As a consequence he buys in small lots, and in this way finds no difficulty in taking the regular discounts, and never allows the wholesaler to have any credit.

Mr. Weldon admits that the complete monthly turnover is not realized yet, but believes that as business grows, and the matter of stock control becomes a finer science, that it can be accomplished.

Because one has always done things a certain way is no excuse for continuing to do them in that way after it has been proved wrong.

Try imagining yourself in your clerk's place and see what kind of an employer you are making. The good employer gets the good service from his clerks.

The service of a clerk must pay a profit just the same as the goods sold must. If you are paying a clerk a salary equivalent to all the money he makes for you, where do you come in?

Getting Full Value From the Store Telephone

How it Should be Used to be Made a Profitable Investment—Its Relation to Salesmanship—Should be Attended to Only by a Careful and Capable Person—The Limit Which Must Not be Exceeded—Retailer Predicts Big Future for it in Scientific Retailing.

"Taking orders over the telephone has grown to such proportions in the grocery business that it is admitted one of the most important departments, and as such demands an attendant who will get as much business as possible out of this convenient invention."

J. F. Holloway, proprietor of a grocery store at 1265 King St. West, Toronto, felt that he was voicing an opinion that was shared by the progressive grocers throughout the country when he said that.

"Everybody realizes the rapidity with which the telephone has spread its influence, until to-day we are dependent upon it in countless different ways. In our business it has made itself felt particularly during the past few years, and I believe it is really in its infancy.

"If the rate can be reduced and placed within the reach of the masses it is impossible to estimate the extent to which it will be subscribed for. In any case the telephone is not going to lose its hold on the people and we can take it for granted that the present growth will experience no diminution.

Reduced to a System.

"The adoption of the telephone as a business channel in the grocery trade followed in the natural order of events, although it has taken time to reach its present development," he said. "Every morning at a particular time we telephone to the most of our customers for their daily orders.

"Of course, we make previous arrangements with them in this regard, for some do not wish us to call every day, while others desire two services a day. This is a small matter and is easily adjusted.

Getting Big Orders.

"A clerk calls at the residence of those who are without telephones, according to the long established custom, but I believe that of the total number of orders received in a day the telephone brings in about two-thirds of them. For several reasons customers prefer to 'phone in their orders. Since they are paying for the service they want to get the value of their money from it. It is convenient to them and altogether from their standpoint is, I suppose, to be desired. The telephone having come into such general use it is obvious that the person receiving the orders must be thoroughly capable.

"When a customer sends in a list of goods, there is a great possibility of her ringing off without any suggestion from the salesman of articles she may need. The clerk will ask: 'Now, is there anything else you need to-day?'

"'No, I think not, thank you; Goodbye.'

"In almost nine cases out of ten there are other things she needed, and intended to ask for but overlooked or forgot when asked for her order. It is right here that the possibility of losing business arises. Under the old system your clerk was at the rear door of a residence or in the kitchen, and if he knew his business, it was a rare occasion that the customer remembered when it was too late in the afternoon that something had been neglected. The important point under the telephone system of present day methods is to prevent the customer ringing off before the clerk has suggested articles in the same manner as under the old way on the rear doorstep. If this is not accomplished there is a strong possibility of the grocer losing a certain amount of trade every day from each customer through the telephone system. In that event the new way would prove a detriment to the grocer rather than a boon. Of course, if the customer recalls an article she needed, as a general rule, she immediately phones.

"She should be thoroughly familiar with all the goods in the store, the prices, the quality, etc. She must be tactful—and should possess as keen a sense of salesmanship as any of the clerks."

"But there is still the morning suggestion problem.

Capable Girl Answers Phone.

"With book-keeping systems simplified to a great extent a girl is not encumbered with them and in fact has a certain amount of spare time. For a number of reasons it is desirable that, if at all possible, she should receive the orders. As a first requisite she should possess a pleasant voice.

"There is a quality to particular voices to which one likes to listen in contrast to those which grate on the ear, creating a feeling of aversion. This is a minor point, but details are important in business.

The Gift of Salesmanship.

"If your book-keeper is taking the orders, she should be thoroughly familiar with all the goods in the store, the prices, the quality, etc. She must be tactful, and to get the most out of her position should possess as keen a sense of salesmanship as any of the clerks. When she has obtained an order and the customer begins to think of other things the girl should suggest along this line, 'We have fresh strawberries in this morning at 15 cents,' or 'fresh vegetables,' or 'Do you need any canned goods?' or 'Have you run out of cereals?'

"The right person can cover considerable ground, and do it in such a way that the customer is not bored.

"The clerk should have sense enough to know when to draw the line. But as regards that old time question, 'Is there anything else, to-day?' it should be an unknown quantity, for the usual answer is a hestitating 'No,' which really means 'Well, I can't think of anything just now.'

An Important Question.

"The right person at the grocery end of the line can be of great service both to the customer and employer, and if the office girl is trusted with the work she should be capable. If she is the saleswoman you want, she is worth paying a good wage, for in other positions she would receive a good remuneration and have shorter hours.

"If there were a school to train girls in this work she should be a graduate, although in most cases the business sense is inborn and needs but a little direction.

"The telephone question is certainly an important one and demands careful attention in order that, while the customer is getting the convenience, the grocer will not lose any business.

"There are grocers who receive the telephone orders themselves, but the particular method employed depends upon the individual grocer's personal ideas and doubtless many plans are followed with gratifying results. In any case the question is of such importance that it is worthy of the grocer's most careful attention."

Annual Turnover More Than Thirteen Times Stock

Basis on Which Montreal Grocery Firm Works—Gross Profit Between 20 and 25 Per Cent. With Net Profit About 7 or 8 Per cent.—How the Store and Cellars are Laid Out and the Equipment—Quick Delivery System for Phone Orders —Business Methods Used.

Fourteen years ago two young men, cousins, collected $400 each and using the total $800 as their capital, started a grocery business in Westmount, Que. The start was made in a tiny store 15x30, at 4122 St. Catherine St., which they occupied for only one year.

Little improvement was effected by their first move. The second store was little larger than the first and no better situated. However they stayed there until 1900, three years, and were successful. In fact so much so that when, in that year a chance occurred to buy the fine corner property, 4120 St. Catherine St., 25x110, just opposite their original stand, they were in a position not only to do so, but to build a fine store on it in addition. In the new quarters business grew by leaps and bounds. In 1902 the quarters had become far too small, and it was found necessary by the partners to buy the adjoining lot, also 25x110 feet, thus making the finished store 50x110 feet.

As the business grew it was soon found to be more economical to house delivery wagons and horses in a stable of their own, so the partners acquired a lot immediately back of the store and put up a fine fireproof building 50x50, in which are full accommodation for the eleven horses and seven wagons now used.

As to the firm itself, it is as before stated composed of two cousins, Thomas C. and George A. Dionne.

In a recent conversation with the former regarding their success and to what it might be ascribed, he said that "it was the result of personal supervision combined with careful buying, and a large turnover at a comparatively small margin of profit."

Turnover Thirteen Times the Stock.

Regarding the latter part of this statement he gave the following data: "We carry a stock of only $15,000 and yet our turnover last year was fully $200,000. The largest stock we have in the store during the year is naturally at Christmas, and that was only $20,000, so you can see at a glance what I mean with regard to the amount of turnover. It is a poor month when we cannot turn over as much as our entire stock."

In reply to a question on the margin of sale Mr. Dionne said: "From 20 to 25 p.c. is all we attempt to make on the goods, and we find this gives us net seven to eight per cent. on our annual turnover of $200,000—in other words $15,000 a year.

Their Store Equipment.

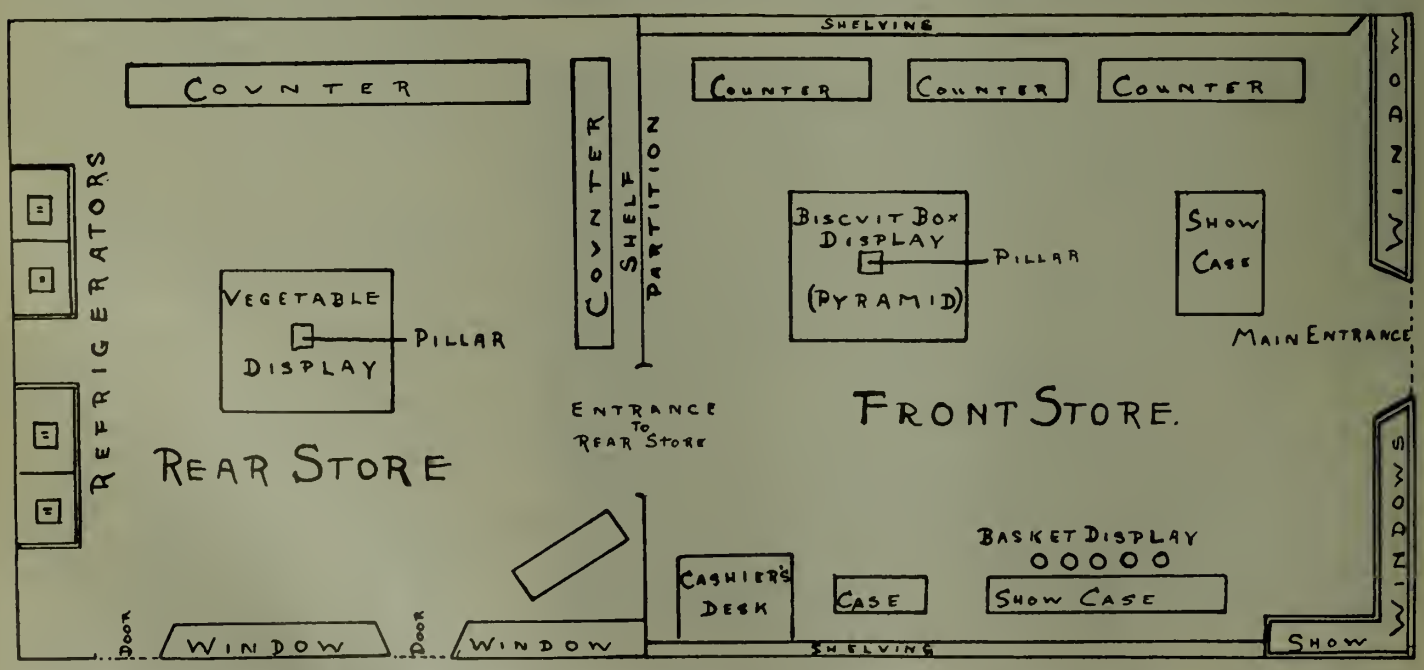
In the beginning of the business the partners had no assistants. All the work was done by themselves. Now they employ a staff of thirty; there are five phones in the store. The horses are eleven in number and the wagons, seven. This is certainly a change from the original $800 start.

A cashier is employed who receives all cash for sales, thus avoiding chances of mistakes among the clerks, to a large extent.

The business, as far as possible, is conducted on a cash or seven day credit basis, but of course, catering to the best class of Westmount trade, it is impossible to insist on these terms, so a good many thirty day accounts are carried.

There are a large number of points about the store which are unique. The most important which strikes an outsider is the roominess. The interior arrangements help to intensify this impression.

Probably the accompanying sketch will show how this is accomplished better than any description. Great use is made of the shelving space, but goods are kept well out of the central part of the store except for one large central display, which is changed from time to time. The scattering of a few show cases helps to give the idea of roominess, and yet with no sense of poverty, or lack of materials for filling up the store. The shelves, loaded with all varieties of eatables in profusion, entirely counteract any such impression.



Front and Rear Store Plan of Dionne & Dionne, Westmount, Showing Relation of Counters and Silent Salesmen to Entrances.

There is an air of comfort and room about the store, which is seldom seen.

Fish and Meat at Rear.

The front section of the store is devoted entirely to the regular grocery trade, while the rear part is a fish and meat market. Most of the vegetables are also sold in the back, as the refrigerating rooms are there.

Of these refrigerating rooms there are two—the one used for meats and fish, the other for fruits, vegetables and butter. They are large, each being 10x10 and are capable of storing considerable of the stock of these articles kept by the firm. The remainder is kept for them by the cold storage concerns.

The Cellar Enlargement.

One of the most systematic and in many ways perfect cellars is under Dionne & Dionne's store, that can be found in Montreal. The rooms are large in the first place, lighted throughout by electricity, and in them everything has its place.

There are two different sections. The one for vegetables and perishables of all sorts is kept in a somewhat colder condition than the other part by the simple expedient of having the two refrigerating rooms spoken of previously, just above it. In this section are arranged bins of varying sizes to hold the different vegetables. They all face the centre of the room and enable the clerk to obtain quickly what he has come for. In the larger cellar everything has its place. Imported goods are in one section, canned goods in another, broken packages of all kinds in another, and so on.

A unique feature used which is seldom seen, is a barrel rack. A heavy wooden stand, almost a partition, is equipped with arms running out like the top arm of the letter K. These arms are so placed that an opened barrel will be held between them and yet be at an angle sufficient to keep the contents from rolling out. They are placed at such a height that other barrels, unopened can be placed under them, which device also places them at just the right height for their contents to be most readily accessible. They are great space economizers, for, as every grocer knows, the barrel is about the bulkiest package in his store room and takes up a great deal of valuable room.

Plan of the Stables.

A word is certainly due the model stables in use by this store. They have cement floors throughout their two stories. The walls are one foot of solid masonry and the doors are covered with heavy sheet metal.

On the second floor are the stalls and fodder. The horses mount by a corrugated pathway which winds up through the central portion, and is wide enough for two abreast. On the main floor are kept the wagons. Windows are plentiful, and there is a light, comfortable, and healthful air about the whole building.

As to the growth of the business, it has been little short of phenomenal. Politeness to any and every customer in the store, no matter what their appearance of wealth or otherwise, may be, is insisted on by the proprietors. Speed is also commended, and suggestions for economies in time are often put forward by the clerks. The general appearance of the store is a matter of pride to both employer and employe and pains are taken by all to keep it looking right at all times.

Up-to-the-Minute Phone Service.

The phone service is a feature. Special wagons are kept for phone orders and prompt deliveries insure satisfied customers. The five phones are busy most of the time. Energy and push are self-evident factors in the store's success. In that atmosphere a customer unconsciously feels that it is not fair to waste the clerk's time, and thus selling is greatly facilitated.

Staple Articles Handy.

Those articles, such as tea, sugar, coffee, etc., which are included in most orders are placed right at hand, while articles only called for at longer intervals are relegated to the less accessible shelves and bins. In this way much time is saved, and time is money to every grocer.

The windows, seven in number, are always kept neat, and good displays are made, though so far this has not been followed up as some grocers do. The truth is there are few experts in window dressing among modern grocers, and it takes an expert to continuously keep up original and striking displays. "Failing to get the exact man we want," said Mr. Dionne, "we encourage the clerks to think up ideas and then put them into our windows.

"By this method we obtain a number of good windows, which we change as often as possible."

Altogether it is a pleasure to enter a store where system and courtesy walk hand in hand as they do in the store of Dionne & Dionne. At the present writing they are paving the way for further enlargement by buying the lot directly back of the store, thus making a lot of 50x190 feet, which gives them plenty of room to expand.

The first annual trade excursion of the Buffalo Wholesale Merchants' Association was held recently through many cities and towns to the south and east. It was designed to enable the heads of the wholesale firms in Buffalo, which deal with retail merchants of the cities visited, to get into direct touch with them. Souvenirs were passed around all along the trip, and by seeing their customers in their home towns under natural conditions and talking to them personally, instead of through a third party, the wholesale merchants considered they were better able to understand and appreciate the local business. Over twenty-five cites were visited and nearly 400 miles were covered in the trip. The wholesalers were well pleased with the trip and cordial relations were established with their customers in the various towns and cities.

THE TAX ON PEDDLERS.

A Brandon, Man., Grocer Thinks It Should Be Greater.

By Geo. White.

A peddler is a man who pays a mere pittance to the community for the right to sell goods to the consumer. He calls from house to house, carrying a few lines of goods that have a good profit, having no stock of any account, and very little capital invested in the business. At times he cuts the price on the storekeeper.

A peddler does not meet all the wants of consumers, whereas a merchant does meet their requirements. A store adds to the value of the real estate in the vicinity in which it is established, because it meets the immediate wants of the consumer; the merchant is there at reasonable hours to supply those wants, thus he is a much greater benefit than the peddler.

Then why should he have to pay more for the privilege of doing business than the peddler? In general the store stands for the public interest and the peddler for his own sole interest. Consequently the peddler should pay a tax in the community according to the business he does. If he does not handle as much money as the store keeper his profits are greater because he has little expense, and he has the same chance, if not a better one of doing business with the public as the merchant. Therefore I claim that considering the chances of each for doing business the peddler should be taxed the same if not more than the merchant.

I do not believe it is right to let "foreigners" have a license to peddle through our country and get all the information they want about it — which may prove detrimental to our interests in general. The information they gain in this way is often worth more to them than the profit they make on the goods they sell. No doubt peddling is a great source for getting information.

Talking Up and Selling New Lines of Groceries

New Brunswick Merchant Uses His Shelves as Salesmen—Makes a Window Display When New Goods Arrive—Store Plan to Aid in Giving Good Service—Package Goods Opened in Basement—No Foodstuffs Left on Sidewalk.

"I believe in making my shelves do duty as salesmen and consequently I keep changing the stock around at frequent intervals, so that my customers will not always see the same goods when they come in. When I get a new line, I usually put a display in the window at once, and then, if it is package goods, I keep them in a prominent position on the shelves in the front of the store. When the demand seems to be falling off I shift them to the rear and replace them with something else."

This was the substance of the reply made by Walter Gilbert, proprietor of Gilbert's Grocery, St. John, N.B., when asked what system he adopted in placing the various lines of goods that an up-to-date grocery has to handle in these days.

Mr. Gilbert insists on his clerks bringing to the attention of customers every new line that he purchases. He tells them to take pains to show goods but not to attempt to force sales. Often some lines will be shown to customers with no apparent result until some days have elapsed. Then there will be a call for "that new stuff you were showing me."

This grocer does business on the principle that one can never tell when seed judiciously sown may bring forth fruit, so he keeps on sowing.

St. John has many fine grocery stores and Gilbert's is claimed to be one of the finest. It is about 35 by 40 feet, situated on a corner in the business section of the city. It has five good sized show windows, which are always neatly trimmed, a tiled floor, fixtures finished in mahogany with scrollwork at the top and marbelized glass panels dividing the different sections.

The ceiling is finished in mahogany with large square panels of marbelized glass and when the lights are turned on the effect is striking. Silent salesmen showcases, computing scales, machines for cutting cheese, ham, bacon, etc., a cash register and two telephones, are utilized in carrying on the business.

Packages Opened in Basement.

There is a large basement and a warehouse at the rear for handling heavy goods. All package goods are taken into the basement through a window from the sidewalk and are opened below. There is an entrance to the basement from the centre of the store, though this entry is artfully concealed by a large fixture with shelves at the sides and a table top.

A small room back of the main selling counter is utilized for storing delivery boxes and it proves a convenient arrangement. The office is situated upstairs in the warehouse at the rear with a window overlooking the store so that anyone there can see all that goes on in the store.

Mr. Gilbert employs three lady clerks and one man in addition to the teamster. He has two telephones so that customers can get in communication with the store at almost any time at short notice.

By a systematic arrangement the delivery of goods is carried out with little delay after an order is received.

No Goods on Sidewalk.

Mr. Gilbert is strongly opposed to the practice of displaying goods on the sidewalk in front of the store as he claims it does not help sales but rather hinders them owing to the untidy appearance of the goods after they have been exposed to the dust of the street for a time.

He believes in changing his window displays frequently and also in having attractive advertisements in the local papers. He watches for the arrival of The Canadian Grocer each week and says he gets many helpful suggestions from its pages.

J. J. Higgins, known as "the man from Seattle," said:

"We have a blackboard in our meeting rooms and when we have time after our sessions, I make it a point to get up to that board and do some kindergarten work. The points we try to bring out are the cost of doing business, the shrinkage of goods—a point many grocers forget—and then we get at it. We find the average cost of doing business is 17 to 18 per cent. A great London statistician has found that the average cost all over the world is 18 p.c. The reason the great department stores and chain stores cannot put the small retailer out of business is that they cannot cut down this cost of doing business. When you know this cost and the percentage of shrinkage we can find what the profit is and the system is most helpful.

"It requires intelligent co-operation to get the best results. The trade press has done much to bring about such a co-operation. Remember in this organization we are only trying to eliminate some of the savage features of warfare. On the Pacific coast we strive only for the trinity of interests, the retailer, jobber and manufacturer, and our plan has done much to restore the proper relationship between these factors."

At the convention of National Retail Grocers at Springfield, Ill., last week,

Self-confidence is a quality that is desirable and necessary in making a business success, but don't get it mixed up with that self-satisfaction which is a vastly different thing.

The Relation of Store Architecture to Service

Ground Plan of a British Columbia Store Built With a View to Paying Scientific Attention to Customers—Necessity of Having Some System When Building—Business Often Depends on Store Site.

The grocer who uses science in retailing must have a conveniently laid out store. He must pay attention to store architecture when he decides to build or if he purchases he must rearrange his counters, office, store fixtures, etc., to obtain easy access to the goods he has for sale and more particularly to those which are in the greatest demand.

Time and attention should therefore be given to the designing of the interior of a new store which is intended to be utilized by a grocer who desires to be up-to-date and practical.

Every detail should be carefully thought out in order to produce an interior which will provide convenience to give satisfaction and the finest service to the general public.

A western Canadian store which was planned with the express purpose of giving the best possible service is that of The Saunders Grocery Co., Victoria, B.C., the ground floor of which is shown herewith. It was built in 1890 on the same site on which the first Saunders store was erected in 1866.

The present block including this store is constructed in a substantial manner of brick, stone and cement dressings. It is two stories high and there is a deep, dry cellar under the whole block.

Choosing a site for a store is also an important matter. That of the Saunders Grocery Co. is an ideal one, fronting on Johnson St., within two blocks of the railway depot. The thoroughfare passing it is an exceedingly busy one but the side street as shown in the illustration gives every facility for unloading heavy goods direct into the warehouse.

Casks, etc., can be taken into the yard, unloaded through the back doors into the storage room and taken by hoist to the floor above.

In the warehouse everything is in order as well as in the store. There is a wall shelf for surplus goods and a box enclosure a foot from the floor and 6 feet high for cereals, fitted with sliding doors. Toilet rooms are also located there.

Store Interior Lay-out.

The store proper has two large show windows along the front, separated by the doorway, the floor of which is of tile. To the right are two counters 16 and 20 feet long respectively, the first containing a glass pastry case and a cash register. At the end of the second counter and at right angles to it is located a show case for fancy soap. Wall shelves surround the whole.

On the opposite side are cheese and bacon counters, confectionery counter, butter refrigerator, wine and spirit department, wine office, and the general offices.

The store including warehouse is about 96 feet long and 40 feet wide. With the yard at the rear the total length is about 120 feet.

Chief of all the features are the conveniences supplied which tend to give a service that every customer will appreciate.

The Saunders Grocery Co. believe this to be one of the necessities of store architecture if customers are to be held by scientific service.

FROM MAKER TO RETAILER.

At the recent convention of the Ontario wholesale grocers, a number of resolutions which had been passed at a previous meeting of retailers were submitted to the wholesalers. One was as follows: "That it is the opinion of this meeting that it is not in the best interests of the grocery trade that some few retail houses should have the right to purchase in large quantities direct from the manufacturer and that this privilege be not allowed to all."

Objection to a portion of this clause is raised by Colin McNab & Co., of Dartmouth, N.S. "We believe," they state, "that all dealers should have the right to purchase direct from the manufacturer, provided their orders are large enough. The word privilege should not have been used in the resolution. We believe, however, that if the manufacturers continue to protect the jobbers they should see to it that the retailers have the same protection and should not allow firms that buy at producers' prices to retail to consumers.

"This practice prevails here and is very unfair to those who are denied the right to purchase at the low prices given their competitors."

If you have any of the high and mighty kind of clerks who treat a customer as if they were doing her a favor to wait on her let them work for some one else.

Scientific Methods Used in Store Arrangements

What a Large Halifax Company Has Done in Equipping Their Grocery Store According to the Latest Business Ideas—Reducing Service to a System at the Same Time Securing an Arrangement That Pleases and Attracts—An Interior in Harmony.

Science in the grocery business!

Examine the accompanying reproduction and try to contrast it with an interior of one of the pioneer stores. You may remember one of the typical general stores, but if not, a good idea may be formed by recalling some of the features that were described by our grandfathers. There are store in existence, which are but little better than those of pioneer times.

Vast improvements have been made in recent years, and throughout the country are to be found many stores which are thoroughly modern and are keeping pace with the general progress of the age.

The illustration shown herewith portrays the interior of the grocery store of T. F. Courtney & Co., of Halifax, N. S. It is scarcely necessary to emphasize the good taste dominating the entire arrangement. It is not only pleasing to the eye, but it is serviceable and this combination is the keynote of store interiors to-day. The floor itself is about perfect. It is of hardwood throughout and firm underfoot. There is no tripping over knotty and uneven surfaces. While it may be said that the floor is really a secondary consideration, yet the whole effect of this interior would have been lost if the floor had not harmonized. A glance at the ceiling bears out the same idea. A good setting has thus been secured and the silent salesmen, steel chairs, and other handsome fixtures are in perfect accord with the general interior. The combination thus harmonizing brings out the best results, which would have been entirely lost had the ceiling been left bare.

Exterior View of T. F. Courtney & Co.'s Store, Halifax, N.S.

A glance at the illustration at once suggests a completeness and compactness which is admirable. Attention is direrected to the silent salesmen, one for confectionery, the other for fancy soaps; also to the auxiliary shelving and the fancy biscuit and dried fruit display receptacles on the right of the picture. The shelving and the arrangement of the articles displayed thereon all around the store is a feature.

On the left hand side are noticed computing scales, cash register, refrigerator, demonstrating counter, and the system of compact containers, which also display dry fruits, biscuits, etc. These are behind the counter on the left. The counters themselves are attractive and rather ornate. The lighting system has not been neglected, and is a feature of the store, at the same time corresponding with the general good taste displayed. An electric coffee grinder, which grinds a pound of coffee in fifteen seconds is among the fixtures. The office is on the right hand side in a convenient position, and is not an obstruction to business. The owners take great pride in their business and enjoy a large patronage.

Fish and Meat Departments Separate from Grocery

Plan of a St. John, N.B., Store Designed to Give Adequate Service—The Fixtures Include Show Cases, Cash Register and a Large Glass-front Refrigerator—Delivery Yard Paved With Asphalt—Location of the Office.

Designed with the view of affording the best facilities for carrying on a general grocery, meat and fish business, the store of Vanwart Bros., at St. John, N.B., seems to meet all the requirements. The grocery department is bright and roomy with everything conveniently arranged for quickly catering to the wants of a varied class of customers. The fish and meat departments are located in an adjoining store with a separate entrance from the street and a connecting passage between the two stores.

In the grocery store the windows are low and narrow and a good opportunity is afforded to make an effective display. It is the policy of the proprietor to have changes made in the windows every few days so that passersby are always seeing something that suggests itself to them as desirable to take home. The counters are neatly kept and the showcases are attractive.

A feature of the store arrangement is the large number of pyramid displays of package goods. The sides and rear are banked high with nicely arranged showings of canned goods, cereals and bottled goods.

Flours and meals are all kept under cover in specially built receptacles, a glass case is provided for bread and the office is so situated that anyone working there can see all that goes on in either store. A cash register is placed in a prominent position.

Has Plenty of Light.

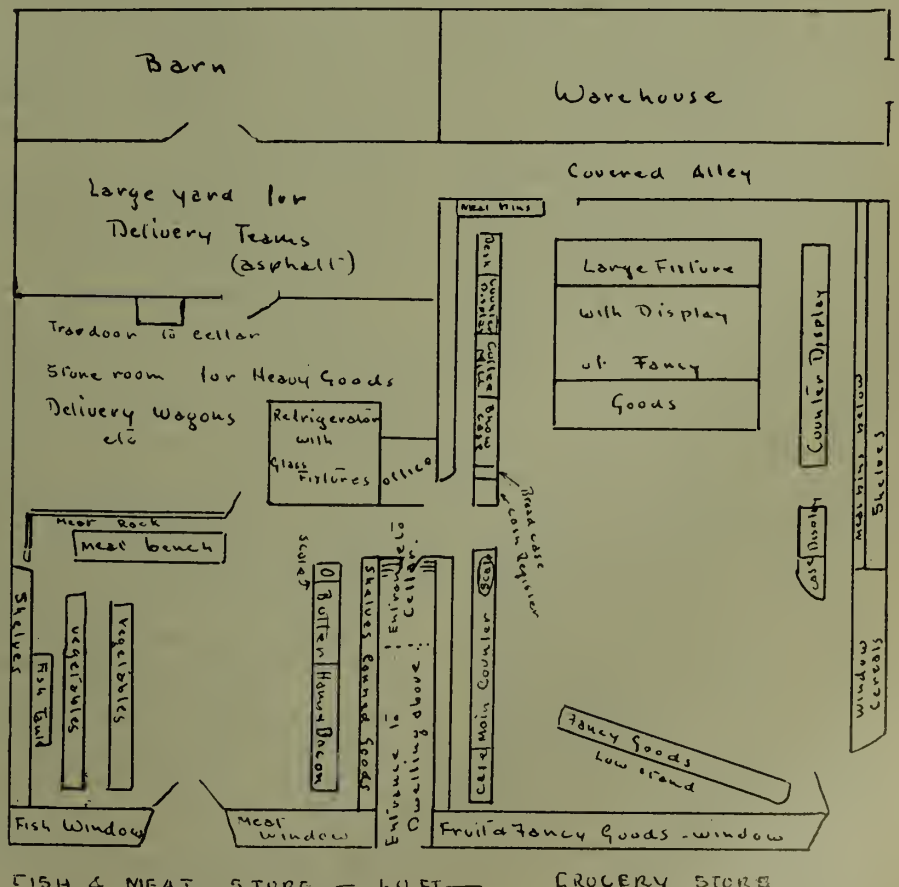
At the rear of the meat store there is a large glass front refrigerator and back of the stores is a large covered alley and yard with asphalt floor for delivery work. There are five large plate glass windows at the front of the store and one on the side.

The proprietor is John W. Vanwart, who succeeded to the sole control of the business on the death of his brother some years ago. Mr. Vanwart has been honored by his fellow citizens by being six times elected as alderman for Dukes Ward and in his capacity as such has had the control of the department of public safety, which comprises the police and fire departments, street lighting, leasing of city lands, etc. He has shown marked ability in this work, giving to the service of the city those qualities which have made for his success in his own business.

Takes the Cash Discounts.

He is a shrewd and careful buyer and believes in taking advantage of all cash discounts. He attributes his success to strict attention to business and careful and courteous treatment of his customers.

The accompanying plan of the stores gives one an idea of the systematic layout and the neat appearance of the premises.



An Example of a Carefully Planned Store With a Section Set Apart for Fish, Meats and Vegetables.

HOG EFFIGY IN THE WINDOW.

John J. Cocks, grocer, Peterboro, Ont., had a unique window display last week to advertise his lard and bacons. An effigy of a whole hog, life size, was shown in the centre facing out, and this gathered crowds. It was pale pink in color, with dark spots on the body. The mouth and head both moved by clock-work, which could be wound up on one side of the hog.

Bookkeeping Details Necessary to Buy Carefully

Vancouver Retailer Uses Printed Matter Showing Records of Former Purchases, Market Reports, Firms Selling Various Lines, Former Prices, Etc.—Valuable to Know Stocks Carried by Competitors—Daily Store Sales Itemized—Get All Orders in Writing.

"Quick decisions must be made in successful buying," declares a Vancouver retailer, "with very little preparations for the actual conditions which call for them."

Continuing he said: "To decide in this emergency the general business knowledge comes in.

"Of course, there are mechanical accessories that should be used. These include printed matter showing records of former transactions and prices, trade paper market reports, lists of firms dealing in the various lines, the sales in one's own store, and the goods on hand in a particular line. These are the main points the successful buyer must make use of in renewing stocks.

"An additional item, rather harder to obtain, but useful in many ways, is information regarding the stocks carried by competitors. With this information at hand, the proper systematized forms to work with, and the brain commanding it all, the buyer will undoubtedly succeed so far as his buying is concerned, unless something unforeseen like a bank failure or uninsured fire occurs to overthrow his plans.

"Take for instance the printed matter necessary; there should be a list from day to day of all articles bought, from whom, and the price paid. I use a regular purchase book such as all stationers carry, for large orders, setting a certain figure as the dividing line, and a petty ledger, pocket size for all smaller ones. This system enables me to tell almost at a glance the last price paid, the corresponding price of the year before, and all data connected therewith.

"In a memorandum book I carry all the daily figures of my store sales, itemized as for instance:

Sugar	GRANULATED—	200 lbs. @
	POWDERED—	500 lbs. @
	LOAF—	100 lbs. @

"These figures are simply to give an idea of the style of bookkeeping and are entered daily. It is easy to see that a falling off in any one line would soon be apparent, and the cause could then be found and remedied.

"Also the stocks in the store can be readily figured out and new orders placed when deemed necessary.

All Orders in Writing.

"In giving an order it should be on a blank form. There should be no "taken for granted orders" given, as sooner or later there will be a dispute arising and it will leave either one or both parties to it feeling that they have gotten the worst of it. Remember that there should never be friction between buyer and wholesaler, or the mutual distrust and dislike is bound to grow and cause loss to one or both. It is on that rock that so many grocers, who started out well, have split.

"Good feeling between the buyer and the firms he buys from is an essential. The better the feeling, the more chance of success for the buyer and his firm.

Gain in Talking Discounts.

"Let us suppose that an order has been placed. The terms are 30 days net or 2 per cent. off for cash in ten days. Now that 2 per cent. does not look very big to the grocer, but suppose you renew that order in a month. Let us say you renew it eight times during the year. Eight times two equals 16 per cent. which you are making on your money, four times what any bank will pay you.

"Doesn't it look like good business policy to take a present of sixteen per cent. when it is offered you? Of course, capital is necessary to take all discounts, but if your business has been organized in proportion to capital you should be able to pay it. Even borrowing money from a bank is preferable to the loss of that two per cent. It is in just such things as the foregoing that the big grocery successes of to-day are made.

"There are only two courses open to the buyer in his end of the business. The one is to buy for cheapness, the other for quality as the chief consideration. A combination of the two will not work out. People go to a store either for one or the other and the class of people to whom the former consideration appeals are entirely different in the majority of cases from those to whom the latter is the drawing card. A grocer, to succeed, must hold his customers, and if the classes are different he must not lose the trade of the one in trying for the other. Quality ought to be the ideal consideration in buying. It takes a little longer to work up this class of trade, but it is more permanent, pays a better profit, and brings the best class of trade to one's store. People will soon forget the price if the goods are always of the best.

Buying Goods in Season.

"Seasonable goods must be taken seriously into account. The buyer who secures the first of the new crop of any product produces good advertising material for that department of the store, as well as a better margin, in most cases, than he can obtain for later goods.

"The buyer must receive backing by judicious advertising. If he sees that some particular line is going too slowly, he should have thte assisance of some judicious daily paper advertising to lower stocks. In fact, he should act as a thermometer for every line of goods in the store. In the first place he is responsible for the goods being there, and must show that his judgment is justified by disposing of the goods within a reasonable time. Technically the sales manager should be responsible, but too often the buyer gets the blame for overbuying. Of course, in the smaller stores they are one and the same man, but that does not change the situation in the slightest.

"Finally a yearly summary should be compiled from the data heretofore mentioned and from such a summary the weak points can readily be weeded out or strengthened, and the whole buying results of the year tabulated in such shape that they form an excellent guide for the following years. It takes more than a year to build up one's buying system, but an early start saves just so much time, and time is money now-a-days.

Price Book Keeps Close Tab on Goods Bought

This Will stop One Important Leak That Leads to Failure—Necessity of Knowing Amount of Goods Puchased for Special Holiday Seasons and How to Know it—Value of Booking all Orders Given.

By G. W. Brock.

There should be no guessing when it comes to buying and selling.

A merchant should be absolutely certain about these two quantities for on them depend practically his ultimate success.

But it would surprise a great many merchants if they were told that their knowledge of both, or rather lack of knowledge of them, was tending to their ultimate failure.

Yet at the present time there is a large percentage of retail grocers in Canada on the road to failure. Why? Simply because they do not keep close to their businesses—they are not fully acquainted with the best methods for buying and selling.

When I was in Toronto about a month ago a wholesaler told me that 75 p.c. of the retail grocers in that city were not making the business profitable. Whether that is true or not I do not know, but I do know there is a fair percentage of the trade in Canada not yet on "easy street."

Buying can easily be systematized. For instance a grocer can keep track of his purchases for special seasons of the year, as Easter, Victoria Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas. It may cost him or his book-keeper a little extra work but not much, and it means dollars and cents to him.

What is the use of buying goods for special occasions which are not sold in the proper time? It frequently means that the surplus goes to waste or the price is cut to get it off your hands. In such a case a loss is usually experienced.

Then again, why not have enough goods on hand to supply the demand from your customers?

The man who knows what he is doing—who works on scientific methods—is the man who makes the success.

Value of the Price Book.

Christmas is the best selling season of the year. To know what quantities of Christmas goods which have been bought and sold from year to year is worth much to the grocer.

This can be easily and accurately done by means of a price book. In this are kept the names of the various articles purchased with the description, the date, source, quantity, cost, freight, gross cost, and discount, if any. If the book is ruled somewhat similarly to the page suggested by the accompanying cut the various items can be kept track of with little trouble. The articles should be mentioned in alphabetical order beginning with such goods as apricots, apples (canned), etc.

For a large store a book will last a whole year or more and no more than one page will be scarcely ever be needed for a single article, unless very frequent purchases are made.

By keeping such a book the merchant knows at once whether a traveler is quoting him a higher or lower price than that given by other wholesale houses. He knows just what quantity he bought on a certain date and how long it lasted. He has the gross cost and discount if any and in this way can figure out his best source of supply for each article he purchases.

Keep Track of Orders Given.

When a bill of goods is bought from a traveler, the grocer should always keep a list in a special book. As the traveler usually makes a duplicate on his order-pad the retailer can often secure a copy from him—all he then has to do is to paste it on a page on the special "Purchase Order Book."

The heading of a page of this book should contain the grocer's name or his firm's name; the date and dotted lines introduced like this:

Bought of .....
Address ....
Sold by .....
Ship, Express, Freight .....
To be Delivered .....
Terms ....

Beneath this heading and separated by two ruled lines there should be columns ruled with horizontal dotted lines under the headings: No.; article; price.

When the invoice comes the goods may be checked; the grocer can look up the order in case of dispute at any time and find from what traveler and wholesale house they were purchased and the terms. This, too, is a cue for him to go by in giving future orders and buying stocks of new goods.

Again I would advise retailers to take all possible pains in buying; get acquainted with goods and prices and know what stock of any line can be turned over in a particular time or during some holiday season.

The memory cannot hold all this. Get it in black and white.

Knight of the Grip Observes Causes of Failures

Refers to Scientific Methods Which Have Been Neglected and Which Resulted in Losses—Clerks Who Took Over a Business and Failed—Over-stocking and Neglect to Take Discounts.

By F. O. R.

It is an easy thing to criticize, and any one is capable of telling the other fellow what he ought to do. The test comes when the opportunity arrives to put the ideas into action and I am thoroughly sympathetic with the man who honestly tries to make his theories practicable.

My experiences on the road have taught me however, that such ideas that I wish to refer to have been worked out and it is for that reason I do not hesitate to mention them.

A few years ago two young clerks who had been in the same employ for some time concluded that they would buy out their employers, and run the business for themselves. They only reasoned that their employers made it pay and they could do the same; and without further counting the cost or taking stock of their own capacities plunged into the business.

While they were clerking under their employers, they were mere machines and failed to learn the business—no doubt a fault of the employers. They were carried away with the idea of "easy money" and the glory of being "your own boss," and the hard-pan upon which every business must be built was never struck until about a year later when the bailiff took command.

Buyers at the Theatre.

I called at the store a few weeks after the young men took charge of the business and was told by a seemingly incompetent girl behind the counter that Mr.———, who did the buying was at the theatre that afternoon. On other occasions also I found the men all out, and apparently no interest was manifested in the business.

In addition to this lack of proper control was a weakness in judgment which lead the young employers into needless expense. When they purchased the business and equipment, they were "far-seeing" enough to know that it would be foolish to buy the safe which was in the office of their old employers. It was interesting to note however that within six weeks they purchased a new safe, paying twice the sum the old safe would have cost.

Overstocked and Missed Dicounts.

These are instances which show how absolutely unfit these men were to manage a business. And this unfitness worked itself out in every detail of the management, and was perhaps more pronounced in the manner in which they overstocked with goods, and failed to take their discounts. These men were bound to fail and fail quickly, because of the weakness in every part of the business. But they would have come to grief, just as many others to-day are approaching inevitable collapse, has they been weak in only a few particulars.

One of the outstanding and most regrettable features of the weak grocery business to-day, is the one I have just mentioned—overstocking and disregard of discounts. It has been so for many years and perhaps the wholesaler and manufacturer is partly to blame. Competition compels the travelers to get all the sales he can, but it is not necessary to overload the merchant, and I am sure that no traveler can conscientiously wish to overburden a grocer. It is much better to buy in less quantities and more often. This is the only remedy for this serious malady in the retail business. The merchant that rushes in a large stock of goods that he thinks he can sell and stores them on his shelves for a year after he pays for them, is acting altogether contrary to modern successful business management.

If the goods are not turned over before the interest on the investment is eaten out, the merchant is doing business at a loss. It may not always be simply negligence in the matter of stock control, that leads the grocer to over-stock, but he is sometimes seized with the fit of speculation.

Rural merchants often buy in car-load lots, and finding it difficult to fill a car with the goods that are specially required, will order a line of goods just to fill up the car. The extra supply becomes a drug on the business. It surely has been fully demonstrated that the average grocer cannot buy in car load lots, and it has been further demonstrated that it is not necessary for him to do so. There are few grocers in Canada that are so unfortunately located that they cannot get goods when they want them; and where deliveries can be made often it is absurd that the grocer should carry the stock.

Loss From Potato Speculation.

Speculation must prove to be an unwholesome business pursuit. A grocer in Western Canada bought several hundred bushels of potatoes one fall when the supply was not heavy, thinking that a good profit could be made by holding them until late in the winter or early spring. The scarcity however, induced importers to bring in a tremendous supply—the market was glutted and the grocer could scarcely give away his potatoes. His was a total loss.

The merchant needs cash in his business. Cash comes by multiplying the turn-overs, and when this is done, the taking of discounts is a simple matter. To take discounts is to save money and saving money is the opposite of failing.

There is no doubt that too many grocers in their endeavor to get business often repel a customer by over-zealousness. A case came to my notice recently, of a grocer who called up an occasional customer by 'phone and made a complaint that she was not buying enough goods from him and that she should not buy from the grocer further up the street. The customer at once became indignant and now does not buy a cent's worth from him. The same grocer would have done much better had he made the interior of his store more attractive. The lady did not take pleasure in dealing with him exclusively for some reason—and it was his business to discover that reason and seek to remedy it. To accept any customer who wishes to come along and ask for time is not businesslike and is not tolerated in the most successful business houses. The repetition of this weakness in the retail grocery business is altogether too frequent, and failures could be traced to this one inexcusable mistake.

Store Fixtures Aid Business.

The installation of modern fixtures to facilitate the display and preservation of goods as well as to add to the general appearance of the store, is an inestimable asset to any grocery business. There is a growing demand on the part of the public for up-to-date grocery stores in every particular, and the one who caters to this demand is the one that gets the business. There may be a danger of over-stepping the limits of capital in this particular, but the careful scientific and capable grocer will keep the premises in harmony with the condition of this business.

Traveler Extracts Good From Mail Order Houses

Gives His Opinions on How Retailers Can Benefit From Them —What They Teach the Consumer—Advantages From Studying Their Advertising and Business Methods — Watching for the Psychological Moment.

Are mail order houses of any benefit to retailers?

At first sight one would naturally say not—but rather a hindrance. But this is not the case according to a Winnipeg grocery traveler. He is a man who observes closely what retailers think and do and he claims that if the mail order house methods, literature, advertising, etc., are used to the best advantage, that retailers will benefit thereby.

How does he explain it? Like this.

"I was in a retailer's store the other day when a woman came in with a page from a mail order house catalogue; she wanted to see how much lower the prices were than those of the grocer, on some lines, her aim being to get the latter to meet them or do better.

"The fact of the matter was that the retailer's regular prices were equal to and some were less than those of the catalogue house.

"I'll venture to say that in future that grocer gets all the grocery business from that family—not only will he get this benefit, but the woman will advertise him every time she has the opportunity, unconsciously, of course. She will tell her neighbors and friends about it whenever the question of table supplies comes up.

Develops Cash Business.

"The mail order house is also an educator of the public. Go to a mail-order house for goods and you pay cash every time; you cannot get the goods without it and that is one reason why those establishments have been successful.

"The general public know they must pay the money over the counter or get the goods C.O.D.; that makes an impression on them when they go elsewhere. They are more ready to pay cash, or buy on a short credit basis, and to do business on a modern basis—they are taught modern methods which benefit the whole community.

Go Out For Methods.

"Catalogue houses also teach retailers to do business in an up-to-date way. I know several retailers who read their ads. every day to get pointers and to compare prices. They get in touch with what is going on from day to day in the big stores, so as to work more intelligently in their own.

"I know others who regularly visit the mail order houses for ideas. One tells me that he talks to department managers about methods in buying and selling, etc., and finds them always ready to give him information.

"Others watch the windows for display hints. These displays are made by professional men who understand the business and retailers can learn much from them.

"The mail order houses have good live men at their heads, who know when to sell particular goods at the proper times. They always take advantage of special occasions by advertising and displaying to attract the fancies of the public. They never lose an opportunity and here's where I think some retailers are slow. They never waken up to push a line of goods until the psychological moment has passed—they wait for the demand, even before they get the goods. When the demand comes they cannot supply it and the trade goes elsewhere, perhaps to the catalogue house.

"Retailers should study to understand their customers better; to know their tastes and anticipate their wants and to be prepared to supply them at the same time if not before the mail order house.

"This is one of the reasons why the latter gets considerable prestige — its heads are bright men with forethought and they strike at the right time.

"I hate to hear a retailer telling his customers that he cannot understand why the catalogue house can sell so cheaply or do this or that. It only means the probability of a lost customer.

"Let retailers get out and learn from the big houses and do business in a way that there will be no guessing and they will lose little trade."

Things Travelers Shouldn't Do

The Too-Familiar traveler who slaps the unsuspecting grocer on the back is not appreciated. While few of this class remain yet there are some who still adhere to this practice.

Scientific Delivery

Cost of Running an Automobile Delivery Service

One Merchant Figures the Expense Out in Dollars and Cents and Compares it With that of Horse Conveyances—Claims That His Two Cars are Equal in Capacity to Five Wagons.

Merchants are beginning to make a study of delivery by automobile. While in Canada comparatively few have instituted the auto service several retail grocery firms have done so in the United States.

Grocers know that the first cost is a big item and they are not as familiar with the expense of running an auto as with a horse conveyance.

F. W. Damour, Jr., Cedar Rapids, U.S.A., has both systems in use. He has three motor cars and seven wagons on the road.

"There is no question in my mind," he says, "but that one of these motor cars will do better work than any two of my wagons every day in the year. The cars make quicker time and give more prompt service, and aside from these points the fact that these cars are the best kind of advertising for the store must not be ignored.

"An automobile delivery car in good paint and attractively lettered is an advertisement of the strongest kind for any store. I do not think a merchant can get more for his money by way of advertisement.

"Of one thing I am convinced, and that is that I can easily do the same amount of work with one car that I can with two wagons."

Figures Out Respective Costs.

J. A. Cordell, Chicago, is another merchant who has experimented with the auto delivery.

Two years ago he had five single-horse wagons and it cost him $25 to $30 a month for feed, harness repairs, shoeing, stable charges, etc., for each of these wagons. It took five men to run the wagons. These men he paid from $12 to $15 a week each.

He studied the automobile delivery system and decided to try it out, though he was half inclined at the time to believe that he was taking a long chance at a questionable game. He bought two automobile delivery wagons that cost him $1,000 each.

Now, at the end of two years, he declares they were not only a paying investment but have already put back into the business more than the price he paid for them. He has just begun negotiations to buy a third car.

These two cars do the work that four wagons used to do. They cost from $10 to $12 a month to run, and this includes gasolene for fuel. It also includes charges for repairs. He pays two drivers $12 to $15 a week, as he does his wagon men. In fact his drivers are the same men who used to drive his horses.

He still runs the horse wagons because his business is large enough to warrant it.

Worked out in dollars and cents he presents the following figures:

The Initial Cost.

Four horses and single wagons, at $400 to $425	$1,600 to $1,700
Two auto delivery wagons, at $1,000	2,000
Maintenance cost—wagons:
Four delivery boys, at $13.50 per week	$54.00
Keep of four horses, feed, etc., at $25 per month each	25.00
Total, per week	$79.00
Maintenance cost automobiles:
Two delivery boys, at $13.50 a week	$27.00
Fuel, repairs, etc., two machines, at $15 per month	7.50
Total, per week	$34.50

Comparative Annual Cost.

Reduced to a year's expense the comparative cost of maintenance of five wagons and the two automobiles which do the same work, as given by Mr. Cordell would be about as follows:

Item.	Auto.	Wagons.
Wages for men	$1,400	$2,808
Upkeep, feed, fuel, etc.	360	1,300
Total	$1,760	$4,108

The machines he uses are guaranteed to have a capacity of 1,500 pounds.

"They actually can get away with 2,000 pounds as well" he says. "On long hauls, three deliveries can be made where one can be made with a horse. When we have rush orders the machines are always ready. There is no delay about feeding, for instance. I do delivering with these two cars that it would keep five wagons on the jump to do."

COMPETES WITH CONFECTIONARY STORES.

Prince Albert, Sask., May 27.—A merchant in Prince Albert envied the large trade in candies that a confectionery store was getting, and decided to strengthen his confection department and compete for some of the business. He found that the public as a rule would not think of coming to him for an expensive box of chocolates, but they would go to the confectionery store. At any rate he went after the very best trade, believing that he could make his store known as the "Home of High-class Candies." When customers come in for a fifty cent box of chocolates, as often happened, he would draw their attention to the better goods, beautifully arranged in a glass case. Boxes priced from $2.50 to $8 would be shown them, and in this manner he would perhaps sell a higher priced article at a greater profit. In his daily advertisements he made the fine confection feature prominent for the first year, and he surprised himself at the manner in which the public "caught on."

He now employs a practical saleslady behind two glass show cases, and by keeping up his regular displays, his stocks fresh, and by creating business in every possible way, he has realized that the grocer can successfully compete with the exclusive confectioner.

It's all right to say just what you think, but there are times when it is prudent to say it to yourself.

Delivery of Groceries Done at Specified Times

Each Driver Has a Number and Knows Exactly Where to Find the Goods He Has to Deliver—All Goods Put up in Special Department and Leave by a Rear Door.

The delivery department of the Bryson, Graham & Co.'s store, Ottawa, has been planned on systematic principles. It gets its proper attention the same as the selling department.

The grocery section of the store is separate from the rest. It is divided into two parts—the one to the front and inside the street door being devoted to the selling of goods and the other for putting up the orders ready for delivery.

Every clerk who accepts an order from a customer has a number which goes with the order to the clerk in the order department and every clerk who puts up orders has also a number. The same is the case with the delivery men. By this method if a complaint is made about a parcel going astray it can be traced to its proper place by the duplicate sheet.

The accompanying cut shows a plan of the interior. The store proper is on the left. Steps lead from it down to the order department when the shelves are all stocked with goods, where a large refrigerator stands and where the counter on the right of the entrance is devoted entirely to the putting up of all orders. When these are filled they are placed on the opposite counter over the numbers from 1 to 7 which may be seen in the drawing.

Driver No. 1 has a certain territory and gets the goods for that territory on the counter above his number. The same applies to the others.

Deliver at Specified Times.

The store has regular delivery hours arranged to suit the general convenience of their customers. There are 4 daily deliveries—9.30 and 11 a.m., 3 and 5 p.m. On Saturday there is an extra delivery in the afternoon, the arrangement being 2.30, 4.30 and 6.30.

In the case of hurry orders, parcels are sent by special delivery when necessary. They advertise that to insure prompt and careful delivery customers should place their orders at least 20 minutes before the regular delivery hours. All deliveries are made from a rear door.

When a complaint is made (which is very seldom in view of this scientific plan) the customer is given the benefit of the doubt whether she may be in the right or not. This insures to the complainant that she will obtain the best of service at the Bryson, Graham & Co.'s store.

DELIVERS AT SPECIFIED TIMES.

Winnipeg Grocer Brings System Down to a Science—Why he is Particular.

R. L. Waugh, Winnipeg, Man., has made a special study of the delivery question. In writing to The Grocer he stated the following:

"No grocer can build up a business unless he has a good systematic delivery. To a large extent it is the foundation upon which the rest of the business depends. When a housekeeper wants groceries she usually wants them in a hurry, or within an hour after ordering.

"If a customer gets to know that she can depend on a grocer's delivery, her confidence in that store is secured, and she feels that she can depend on getting her goods on time.

"There is nothing more ennoying to a housewife, who has planned to have rhubarb pie for dinner and although rhubarb is ordered before 9 a.m., it does not arrive at eleven. Her plans are all frustrated. She goes to the phone and all the satisfaction she gets is "madam your goods are on the way.

Delivers at Regular Hours.

"But the delivery-man may not know anything about the necessary haste, and unconcernedly leaves her order until the last. Then there is trouble, and she may discontinue her ordering.

"Now I am convinced that orders of that nature should be delivered by special delivery.

"I have a special boy for emergency cases and use him so often that I could not be without him. But regarding the general delivery I have regular hours at which orders are sent out and I think every grocer should have the same. It is surprising how quickly the people get to know the time your regular delivery leaves. Personally I find the best time for deliveries to leave are 9 a.m., 11 a.m., 3 p.m., and 5 p.m. If the order is in before time, a housewife is sure to receive it on the first delivery. Should the order come at 9.30 a.m. and the customer is in a hurry, then the special might be brought into play; or in case she is willing to wait let it go out on the eleven o'clock dispatch. I would not use the special too often, else the customers might get the impression that you are unsystematic and can deliver "any old time" they feel like ordering.

"Give the customer the idea that you are trying to serve her and the only way to impart this idea is to give the best possible service.

"It certainly injures the grocer's feelings to be told by his customers that his delivery is slow, and that they can get goods down town or a mile away more quickly than from him. When a grocer is told that a few times, he usually gets busy and looks into his system. Each grocer must arrange a system for himself, to meet his own peculiar condition. Each must systematize this feature, so that as far as possible, the slogan, 'the greatest good to the greatest number' might be made actual."

In Brandon, Man., customers order almost invariably in the morning and all they expect is that the goods will arrive sometime during that day. The grocers have been firm regarding their delivery systems and the public have unconsciously surrendered to them.

CANNED GOODS AROUND THE PILLARS.

Ottawa, Ont., May 27.—In grocery stores in the United States, the display of canned goods are featured effectively by simply building the cans about the various pillars that support the ceiling.

A. G. Johnson who, when he travels, is always on the look out for new ideas of this nature, observed this and now he usually displays canned goods in this fashion. Of course only stores which have posts can do it.

If the labels are arranged artistically a display of cans around the various columns can be made to have a magnetic effect on the eye of the customer in the store. It always makes her think of canned goods and often leads to extra sales.

Claims Right Way to Figure Profits is on Sales

Expense is Based on Sales and Profits Should be Also—Result of Figuring Profits on Cost—Sales Totals Always Available, While Invoice Costs are Seldom Recorded in Books.

By T. A. Fernley, Sec. U.S. Wholesale Hardware Ass'n.

It is indeed remarkable that on such an important subject as the calculation of profits there should be such a variance of opinion, for the issue involved is vital to the welfare of every one engaged in any form of commercial activity.

True, the vital issue is the showing of net profit or loss at the end of the year when the inventory is completed, but in order that this showing should be satisfactory the proper method of figuring profits should be pursued. In our mind there should be no misunderstanding as to the correct method of calculating this most essential element in every business transaction.

Every man engaged in business ought to be able to see that John does not have 50 per cent. more than James, because James has 50 per cent. less than John.

Yet many business men seem to have persistently refused to acknowledge that any per cent. of a smaller sum is a smaller per cent. of a larger sum, or to put it concretely, that 25 per cent. of 100 is only 20 per cent. of 125, and that 25 per cent. increase over cost is 20 per cent. profit on the selling price.

An incorrect or incomplete understanding of percentage of profits and failure to observe the proper method is the rock on which thousands of commercial undertakings have gone to pieces.

The subject of percentage of profit has not been given sufficient consideration by the school and college text book makers, especially from the standpoint of business men, so that the insufficient and incorrect understanding of the question has led many to falsely believe that the percentage of profit should be figured on the flat net cost.

System Used in Schools.

The method of figuring the ratio of profit on the sale is declared by many who may not be fully informed to be diametrically contrary to the methods taught in our schools, and is therefore loudly decried by those who now insist on using the net cost as a base, to their subsequent loss.

So that it may not be misunderstood, it should be said that it is scientifically correct to use either the cost or the selling price as a base in figuring the percentage of profit, so long as it is stated on what base the percentage has been calculated. This, however, should not be regarded as being in the nature of an academic discussion, for it is certainly the privilege of professional men to hold any views that they may prefer on this subject; but it is hoped that they will concede to business men the same privilege especially when the method followed has such a decided effect on the volume of net profits realized from the conduct of their business, and permit them to adopt that method which most fully answers their requirements.

School and college text books refer to this question as "Percentage of Gain and Loss," and the initial figure or cost is used as the base.

Some text books use as the base a prime or net cost and again others add a certain amount for expenses, making a gross cost as a base.

Many of the examples given refer to abstract figures, citing such cases as the following :

> "If the population of a town increases from 30,000 to 45,000, what is the percentage of gain ? Answer, 50 per cent."

This is, of course, correct, and the words "gain" and "increase" are properly used in this connection, but this bears no relation to the question of percentage of profit as applied to commercial transactions involving money.

With the cost as a base or 100 the text books figure that if 25 per cent. is added the percentage of profit is twenty-five one hundredths (25-100) or ¼, which is equal to 25 per cent. In this case we would consider the cost as 100, and the added 25 per cent, would make a total of 125. The percentage of profit would then be 15-125, or 1-5, which would be 20 per cent. profit on the sale.

A percentage of gain or increase of many hundred per cent. is possible, but as percentage of profit is on the sale, one hundred per cent. profit is impossible unless the goods are secured free of charge.

The percentage of profit and the percentage of cost of doing business should both be figured on the same base.

First, let us consider what we use as our cost. Almost all merchants consider as cost the invoice price or "prime" cost, with no selling or other expenses added, merely figuring in the cost of delivery to their warehouse.

All operating expenses, storage, selling, office expenses and every other item of expense must be provided for in the difference between this net cost and the net selling price.

On the other hand, manufacturers very generally start with their shop or mill cost and add to this all the direct outlays incident to placing the goods in the hands of the buyer. This includes storage, selling expenses, office expenses, packing freight and all miscellaneous expenses, making a gross cost above which everything is profit.

This fact accounts in a measure for the variance of opinion between some manufacturers and jobbers on this question. Manufacturers are prone to tell the jobbers that on their line of goods a profit of 25 per cent. is made, when the fact is that the gross profit is 20 per cent. on the sale. If arguments of this nature are properly met a change of method of benefit to the entire trade will be effected.

Some of the more important reasons for pursuing this method of figuring the Percentage of Profit on the sale are as follows :

In every business (we refer more particularly to merchandising) two separate amounts of capital are required.

One item of capital for investment in merchandise.

Another item of capital is necessary for operating expenses, such as rent, pay roll, current expenses, selling expenses and all other expenditures not properly chargeable to merchandise account.

All the capital invested in the business must produce a proper return. Dividends are obviously impossible on the entire amount of capital invested unless all is considered in making selling prices. If the percentage of profit is reckoned on the cost of merchandise only, no provision is made for the other item of capital demanding returns.

The sales totals are always readily ascertained, but the total of each individual daily and monthly cost of invoices sold is seldom, if ever, recorded in the books of business houses. Therefore with the sales totals always present is not the sale a proper base for all calculations, and how could cost be considered when it is not definitely known by reference to sales books ? Gross costs can only be ascertained from the totals obtained at the end of the business year, and are not shown daily as are the gross sales.

Can Only be Found in Sales.

The percentage of expense of conducting a business may be readily ascertained by dividing the gross sales by the gross expenses. As this percentage of expense in on the sales, it is thought better to refer to the percentage of profit on the sale to avoid any misunderstanding and consequent loss through the use of any other method.

The fact that a profit is not made until a sale is actually effected further advances the selling price as the proper basing factor for percentage of profit.

The salary or other forms of remuneration of salesmen is always reckoned on the sale and the amount is always based more or less on a percentage of the sales totals.

Mercantile or other taxes of a similar nature are assessed on a certain percentage of the annual sales. Also if any special taxes are levied by the State on the sales of any special goods such as revolvers, etc., the amount is always a certain percentage of the selling price of such items and not a percentage of the cost.

Result of Figuring on Cost.

This illustration shows the greater safety of figuring on sales, especially with untrained minds who do not properly discriminate.

The manager of a business sold an article which cost 80c. for $1.00, and basing his percentage of profit on the cost figured that he was making 25 per cent. At the end of a given period the sales totaled $20,000. The manager told a stockholder the amount of sales and also the percentage of profit.

The presumption was that a profit of $5,000 had been realized, while the books only showed a profit of $4,000, or 20 per cent. on the sales.

Cases have come to our notice where arrests for defaulting have actually been made in such instances, and the wisdom of figuring percentage of profit on the sale has been taught the prosecutor and defendant at considerable expense.

From an article printed some time ago we quote as follows: "You will find in every arithmetic such examples. A man buys a horse for $50 and sells him for $75, what percentage of profit does he make? Answer, 50 per cent."

No more fatal and misleading ones were ever penned. They lead us to think of the percentage of profit from an unbusiness-like standpoint, and cause many business men to think they are making much larger profits than they really are. This makes them prodigal of expense and often leads to a failure which with more thorough knowledge of percentage could have been avoided.

Suppose a man to have in contemplation the sale of a horse on the basis of the above transaction. A broker approaches him and offers to conduct the negotiation. He asks a commission of 33⅓ per cent.

Now, the owner of the horse, having a profit of 50 per cent. in sight, agrees to this, and the broker, having completed the transaction, renders a bill as follows:

Sold one horse at	$75
Commission, 33 1-3 per cent	25
Due seller	$50

The seller's books would show a profit of 50 per cent. entirely eaten up by a commission of 33 1-3 per cent. Not good figuring, is it? Still, that is the way nine-tenths of our smaller merchants figure, which fact often accounts for their being small.

Always figure your profit on the sale. Then you will be on the safe side. To obtain the correct percentage of profit on any transaction subtract the cost from the selling price, add two ciphers to the difference and divide by the selling price.

Example No. 1.—An article costs $5 and sells for $6. What is the percentage of profit? Answer, 16 2-3 per cent.

Process—Six dollars minus $5 leaves $1, the profit. One dollar divided by $6, decimally, gives the correct answer, 16 2-3 per cent.

This operation is simple and a knowledge of it being vital to any one engaged in, or intending at any time to engage in business, it should be carefully committed to memory and constantly borne in mind.

Example No. 2.—An article costs $3.75. What must it sell for to show a profit of 25 per cent. Answer, $5.

Process—Deduct 25 from 100. This will give you a remainder of 75, the percentage of the cost. If $3.75 is 75 per cent., 1 per cent. would be 5 cents and 100 per cent. $5. Now, if you marked your goods as too many do, by adding 25 per cent. to the cost, you would obtain a selling price of about $4.69, or 31 cents less than by the former method. Which is right?

When you take 25 per cent. off the selling price, figured according to the first rule, you will still have your cost intact. Take 25 per cent. from the second sum and see if the cost remains.

Great Merchant Made Mistake.

A large department store changed hands. The goods in stock, to cover freight and other charges were marked up 10 per cent. They were to be sold at actual cost, but for convenience sake were invoiced as marked. The inventory having been completed, nothing remained to be done but take off the 10 per cent. that had been added.

The parties to the sale accordingly approached the accountant having the matter in charge with a request that this be done. The man of figures set about making an elaborate calculation with this object in view, when he was questioned by the seller as to what he was doing.

"Reducing the goods to cost," he answered.

"Nonsense. Just take off 10 per cent." said the seller.

"Do you want it done that way" asked the accountant.

"Why not?" said the merchant.

"Well, just add 10 per cent. to a dollar and from the amount thus obtained deduct 10 per cent. and see if you have your original dollar left."

The merchant saw the point at once and said no more to the man of figures, who was saving him more than $3,000 he would have lost and the buyer gained without either of them knowing anything about it, and all on account of a little lack of knowledge of percentage.

The following tables show the percentage of cost which must be added to effect a given profit on the sale:

A show card writer states, that as satisfactory and convenient an article as a paint for ordinary store work is the use of dry water colors of various kinds, which may be found at any paint dealer's. Drop-black is the most used for black, and flake white for white. The method is to wet up a small portion on a piece of glass, into a soft dough, with water, then use a very small quantitl of mucilage made from gum arabic as a binder, working it carefully into the proper consistency to flow readily. Keep it pretty thick if for brush work. Sometimes a very little glycerine will produce a water color paint, which flows freely. Asphaltum with turpentine has been used considerably, but for most store purposes is quite unsatisfactory. Those who do much of this work prefer to purchase some of the "ready to use" products of the market.

The merchant who succeeds is the merchant who realizes that his and his customers' interests are mutual; who studies his trade paper for new methods for the advancement of their interests.

Spend less time in envying the success of your neighbor and a little more in trying to get there yourself.

What other people think about you is always interesting, but only what you think of yourself is important.

An Unscientific Grocer Moving About the Store.

Character Sketch of one Merchant Who Will Never Make a Success—Removing Pickles and Mackerel With the Hands — Marked Indifference so Far as Customers and Cats are Concerned.

By Frank Scott.

He stands outside his place, one hand above his head, grasping firmly an awning pole. A dirty apron has worked itself into a great crease pust above a large prominent abutment; often spoken of as a "corporation." A red-faced individual has just been telling him a funny (?) tale, and his great front and sides are spasmodically rising and falling like the great waves rolling in from the sea.

After a time Mrs. Lazybones comes waddling down the street and takes her slovenly form into the store. As Mr. Grocer comes in to wait on her the cat jumps down off the meat counter, where he has just been chewing the juicy end of a "chuck-roast." Our grocer is now moving about quite briskly, at least as much as his bulky form will permit.

The pickles he takes out of the barrel with his fingers, and the same operation

"A red-faced individual has just been telling him a 'funny' story."

Needless to say, he is not overly rushed with business, as a glance at his greasy front and another at the store's squalid appearance seems to satisfy all possible customers. The only way he is able to keep in business at all is by keeping open almost night and day. Some of the goods on his front look as if they had been dumped down about twenty-five years ago and never been moved since.

is performed on a very rusty mackerel. Then he goes over to the meat block and cuts a so-called steak, although it looks more like a 'mis steak.' Now he thinks it about time to wash his dirty 'paws,' so he pulls out a greasy rag from under the meat counter and after a moistening process with the same wipes an additional layer on his dirty apron.

Mrs. Lazybones having been waited on she proceeds to the street, after giving much information as to how Mr. Lazybones is and about a dozen other smaller Lazybones from the size of a peanut up.

Now, Mrs. Dinah Blacface comes upon the scene and finally decides she wants a piece of beef. So she proceeds to the meat counter, and after handling every piece of meat on the same, she finally decides his prices are too high. So she, too, goes the way of all living, on her feet, not on her head, figuratively speaking.

A Mid-day Nap.

After waiting on a parcel of dirty youngsters our grocer settles himself down on a soap box and is soon off to the land of dreams. The cat again gets busy, some small boys "swipe" some dried prunes from the front of his place, and the world still continues to revolve on its axis once every twenty-four hours or one day. That is about all I remember of geography since I left school. I would not like to tell you how many years ago.

DEVELOP LATENT ABILITIES.

Window dressing, show card writing and "ad." writing play a prominent part in business today, and in the average grocery store a clerk can have many opportunities of developing himself in these arts, if he will apply himself.

He must not expect that the first ad. he writes will find its way into the paper. It may be as good as his employer's, probably better, but it takes time for ability to show itself, and be appreciated. Suggest to your employer some time that you are going to write an ad. Select some article that is seasonable, and should be enlivened, and put your thoughts on paper. Try several ideas and then show them to the employer. How Ottawa Secured Early Closing Regulations

One of the Capital Grocers Gives the History of the By-law and the Troubles That Had to be Overcome—A Comparatively Easy Matter to Educate Public—Advantages Gained by Such a System—Value of Circulating a Petition.

By J. H. Ellis.

The question of early closing of stores throughout the whole country in both cities and towns is often a matter of great interest and discussion amongst all classes of merchants at association gatherings and individually so that a little information from the Capital—the place where they do things—will not be amiss, especially when it is conceded that Ottawa is away ahead of all other Canadian cities in this regard.

Most of the principal stores in all lines of trade that it is possible to regulate, close at 6 p.m. on ordinary week nights and 9 p.m. on Saturdays, while some of the leading uptown stores close every night, Saturday inclusive, at 6 p.m., and during July and August at 1 p.m. on Saturday. In no instance do any of Ottawa's stores close during mid-week for half days, as it will easily be seen that the above regulations meet all requirements.

The best feature of the early closing movement in Ottawa from a general standpoint amongst retailers is the closing at 6 p.m. ordinary week nights and nine o'clock Saturdays. The other special hours are only in vogue among dealers whose lines are not of a daily necessity; but when practically the whole retail trade of the city close their stores at 6 p.m. and 9 p.m., it is worth considering how this great change came about.

In Ottawa about fifteen years ago grocers were in the habit of keeping open all hours every night during the week and often on Saturdays until the last tick of twelve with part of Sunday thrown in waiting for drivers and clearing up. This state of affairs was sometimes discussed among the trade, but it is to Alphonse Provost, of Provost Bros., now of Provost & Allard, wholesale grocers, that the credit is due for starting the ball rolling and getting a petition prepared. He secured a few other merchants who had waited upon councillors, obtained a solicitor's advice, and worked out many other details necessary to carrying to a successful issue a new scheme that at that time was perhaps the first in Canada.

Mr. Provost's assistants were few and his opposition considerable. For, after securing a requisite number of signatures throughout the city and presenting them to the council, the other side got busy and had a number who already signed for early closing withdraw their names, making for a time the first petition useless.

However, the workers kept on and secured a few more names, together with some of those who had changed their mind again, and after a great deal of discussion it passed the council. This petition asked for closing of stores at 7.30 p.m. on ordinary week nights only. No regulation for Saturdays or the eves of public holidays was at that time thought possible.

Police Court Convictions.

Naturally at first it was rather difficult to get a strict observance of the by-law, but in the course of time a few police court convictions soon taught the merchant, as well as the consumer that the law had to be respected and gradually the public recognized that this movement was a benefit to a large class of people engaged behind the counter so that everything went smoothly for a number of years.

Three years ago the grocers again discussed earlier closing. This time the Grocers' Association brought the matter before council, after having decided at its own meeting to ask for a by-law making the hour of closing 6 p.m. on ordinary nights and 9 p.m. on Saturdays. The reasons for this move on the part of the grocers were that they had already realized the many advantages gained from the first by-law, and they felt that even as things were then it was unfair to themselves, their families, their employes, and their churches by keeping their stores open so late, especially on Saturdays. It was unfair to themselves and their employes because a man's evening was not his own when he had to labor until seven-thirty and eleven-thirty; unfair to their families because often the evening meal was not partaken of until after closing; unfair to the churches because of the unfitness of all concerned for morning worship.

This time it was no great trouble to get signatures although a few preferred 6.30 p.m. to 6 p.m. on week nights. Yet two-thirds of the total number of grocers in Ottawa were secured and the petition passed council together with the petition which at that time was gotten up among other lines of trade, excepting fruiterers, making a general closing throughout the city at six and nine o'clock.

General Public Educated.

Sometime afterwards the grocers by-law was appealed on technical grounds by those who wanted the closing at 6.30 p.m. The appeal was sustained, but it was after the people had become accustomed to the new hours so that few took advantage of the privilege gained. The majority of grocers close with the other retailers at six o'clock. Now some of those who were the strongest opponents of early closing would not think of diverting to the old order of things since they have experienced the advantages of regular and proper hours of doing business. Merchants have found that their business is concentrated more. There is no lagging during the day, when hours were late many people were in the habit of waiting until night to make their purchases. Now, good clerks are more easily obtained. A few years ago it was next to impossible to get young men who cared to apprentice themselves in the grocery business. They preferred employment and justly so, where a day's work was all that was asked and when on Saturdays a man as not expected to work almost two days instead of one. With proper hours employes work with appreciative efforts which is a decided advantage to any business. By closing at 6 p.m. the merchant can take his evening meal with his family which is a great relief to housewives whose duties were so much delayed before.

A great deal more can be accomplished at desk work in the evenings when a proprietor finds it necessary. When the store is closed there are no interruptions such as was always the case previous to early closing. A person's evening engagements, whether business or pleasure, can easily be carried out within reasonable hours.

The effect upon the grocery business may have been changed somewhat, for, perhaps, such side lines as cigars, tobacco, and fruit were a good part of the night trade. Yet on the other hand regular customers still buy as ever and any sacrifice made with transient trade is pretty well offset by the saving in expense, not to forget the relief to one's body which requires some relaxation and change.

In Ottawa on Saturday night it is a revelation to find everything bustle up to the hour of closing and then immediately afterwards to find stores closed up, people wending their way homeward, the only sign of business being the drivers on their rounds, who finish much earlier than before.

All get to their homes at a reasonable hour and are better able to attend to morning worship on Sunday which was always an effort when working until midnight on Saturdays.

In Ontario any municipality can regulate according to statute the hour of closing stores after 7 p.m. on any night, but for an earlier hour a petition must be secured and if properly and sufficiently signed the council shall pass the by-law as per terms of petition. Of course, in any case the petition is best, for very few councils would care to be placed in a position of having to decide a matter of this kind, but when the required number sign the petition they have no other alternative. They must grant it.

Applicable in Other Places.

In closing I would say to anyone wishing for better hours in their home cities or towns not to imagine that the same results can not be worked out as well with them as in Ottawa, as conditions in the grocery business are pretty much the same all over the country. From the experience gained here it is found that education is the main part of an early closing campaign. It is not wise to ask for a too radical change at first as you will judge by what has been here related.

When getting your petition signed explain it to your customers and agitate through the press as that medium will be willing to assist. Get the clergy to bring it before the people, as it is a good work and of great benefit to their churches. Not only is the advantage gained by better attendance, but where business men who are church workers are of better service throughout the whole week as well as on Sunday.

There are also a great many other phases of the early closing question which are a benefit to a great number of people. I have here mentioned the main facts in connection with the trade with the hope that they may be of some service in other localities.

Concentration of Trade Gave Him His Opportunity

Why an Ottawa Grocer Instituted a Provision Department in Face of Strong Competition From Exclusive Dealers — These Stores Brought the Buyers to His Locality and He Reached Out For a Share of the Trade—Finds His Well Equipped Provision Department Profitable—Uses Modern Meat Slicer and Large Refrigerator.

To most men the fact that there was considerable competition in the sale of a certain line of foodstuffs would be a deterrent to them taking up that same line.

But that was not the method of an Ottawa retail grocer. He was glad of the centralization of business within a particular district when he decided to establish and make profitable his provision department.

That grocer is C. B. McLean and his store is situated between the retail establishments of two large packers of meats and provision men. All three are on the same side of the street in the same block and the two competitors of Mr. McLean are exclusive produce dealers.

"You see," he said, 'I'm between the two, and naturally the buying of meat products and other provisions is concentrated to a large extent in this district."

Most merchants would have complained of excessive competition, claiming that the opposition from the two exclusive dealers would take all the cream off the success, from a financial standpoint, of the provision department.

Theory That Worked Well.

Mr. McLean, however looked at the matter from a scientific standpoint. The public in the near-by district at any rate must come to that locality to buy cooked meats, bacon, etc. It was a centre for that particular class of trade, and why shouldn't he share in the benefits?

He felt from the fact that people came to that street to buy provisions it was sufficient reason for him to capture as big a share of the meat trade as possible.

His logic proved to have a good foundation for he has worked up a good trade in this department which he has located at the rear of a long store. Regular groceries, confectionery, etc., are sold at the front.

He considers it of so much value to him that he places one man in charge of it. The large counter has a marble top and is further decorated by a modern meat-slicing machine, and a com- ng scale. There is a large refrigerator also in the department to keep fresh butter and other perishables.

While at the present time Mr. McLean claims the profits in provisions to be not so great as formerly in view of existing high prices in the raw material yet the profits justify the maintenance of the provision department. He has found a market for ends in some Ottawa restaurants, and so losses from them are prevented.

Caters to Fraternal Societies.

Another market which he watches closely is a number of lodges of fraternal societies, as well as some churches in the vicinity of his store. These institutions require a lot of cooked ham in a year for suppers, receptions and other social functions.

Herein lies a good lesson to other Canadian grocers who want to enlarge their markets for cooked ham, pickles, meat sauces, etc. Churches and fraternal societies are continually holding socials and suppers, and it's very often the man who goes after the business, whether by advertising in the newspapers or otherwise, who gets it.

To go back to the first point: Mr. McLean appreciates—in fact invites—competition. He realizes that it concentrates the purchasing of the people, and when this has been effected he is in a position to get his share of the business and of the profits.

His inference is that if those exclusive provision stores were located two, three or four blocks away then people who wanted meat products would go there for them. But when they are near at hand he believes in his business acumen to atract, at least, such a portion of the purchasers as to make the carrying of meats in the grocery store a profitable and regular line.

Sugar—Up 10c.

Evaporated Apples.—Firm.

Montreal, May 26, 1910.

Last Monday sugar took the long looked for ascent of 10c. For the past three weeks this change has been looked for almost daily, owing to the high state of the raw market, now over 15c. Even at the higher price, buyers are more numerous than before the rise.

In molasses, it looks as if there would be a scarcity of "choice" Barbadoes, as dealers are none too well supplied and reports from the Islands say there is now less than 3,000 puncheons on hand. The manufacturing end says molasses is selling too low, while local men are holding off until requirements force them to buy.

General observation shows that the two recent holidays have made business rather quiet, yet trade is good in almost all lines. Collections are freer and country buyers are coming in daily.

D. Masson & Co.'s failure was entirely unexpected, as they were thought to be too well established for such a thing to occur. However, according to reports, the failure may not be a bad one.

Sugar.—Sugar is up 10c. The change took place last Monday at 1 p.m. As stated recently in these columns, the firm and high state of the raw market was bound to put up the price of the refined article. The only surprise is that it held off so long. Conditions fully warrant the present price, and there seems no possibility of any immediate weakening.

Raw sugars are now above the 15 shilling mark, which is the highest for some years past.

Since the advance there has been a much better demand for sugar, buyers seeming to fear another advance. This does not seem likely for some time yet, however.

Syrups and Molasses.—Wholesalers are still busy delivering the new crop to customers who placed earlier orders, but there is a dearth of new business. Prices seem to be too high to attract buyers. However it looks very much like higher prices in the near future, as the latest cables from Barbadoes indicate less than 3,000 puncheons of choice on hand, If this is the case prices are bound to rise, as local dealers are none too well supplied.

Syrups are having a good sale of late, owing to the scarcity of maple goods. Prices are the same as last week.

Tea.—The local market is very quiet at present, and will remain so until after the arrival of the new Japan teas which are now on the water. Harrisons & Crosfield, Ld., in their tea market report of May 9th, give the following interesting information in Ceylon teas: "Our Colombo House writing on 14th April reported a continuance of favorable conditions in the producing districts, and a prospect of increased supplies. Bearing on this question, they remark that during recent years a considerable acreage in the Low Country has been interplanted with rubber, and they are under the impression that the time has now arrived when the growth of the rubber will have a decided effect on the excessive crops usually harvested in May and June. In the early days of tea planting in Ceylon the annual increase in production was very considerable, but it must be remembered that there are limits to further expansion, which are now approaching."

Coffee — Practically all the better grades of coffee show scarcity and this is particularly evident in Santos.

Mochas are ruling slightly higher owing to a strong demand and a somewhat smaller visible supply.

Primary prices are slightly higher in nearly all standard lines and are very firm. Trade is good, though mostly in small orders.

Spices—The market shows a marked increase in activity with a general tendency toward higher prices. Peppers seem to be the exception. New York reports show that many have bought too freely in this line, thinking an advance was in view. They have had to unload their surplus, thus weakening the situation. Locally trade is good, better in individual cases, than is usual at this time. Prices are firm and unchanged.

Nuts—in small lots there is a strong demand for mixed nuts. Shelled lines are quite popular, particularly peanuts and almonds. The situation in almonds is much the same as last week, dealers being somewhat uncertain as to what later reports from France will bring out. The present high price of Tarragonas has kept many from buying more than their immediate requirements, but as soon as certain reports arrive as to the damage to the crop, there will undoubtedly be a quick influx of orders.

Beans and Peas—From all sections come reports of a brisk trade in beans at steadily advancing prices. Pea beans are now quoted at $2.30 locally, and are in line for a still further advance. The cause is said to be the foreign, particularly German, demand that has sprung up lately. After the recent dullness such a condition is welcome to local dealers. Peas are steady at former quotations.

Evaporated Apples—It is thought by local men that the price of evaporated apples has been held too high this year, thus scaring off buyers and forcing them to find a substitute. Once lost, such trade is hard to get back again.

At present there are two markets for the product much in evidence. Germany is taking large quantities and several cars have been sent to Winnipeg and the west. This has enabled local dealers to dispose of their surplus and still maintain the present price.

Rice and Tapioca—Orders for rice have been large in number, but the individual orders are small. Immediate requirement buying seems to be the rule. However, the volume of business is satisfactory, and prices remain unchanged.

Tapioca is in small demand at the present high price, and New York reports say that it is now being quoted slightly lower in the European markets, but the change has not yet been felt here.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—A considerable increase in the sales of all kinds of salmon is the feature of the week in canned goods. The orders are small, but sufficiently numerous to make quite an imposing total. Lobsters have also an increased demand.

In fruits and vegetables the former strong demand has continued, and is even slightly better than last week.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Market up 10c.

Teas—Strong market.

Tapioca—Slight increase—Firm.

Toronto, May 26, 1910.

The holiday has had a slight depressing influence upon the amount of business transacted during the week but it will not be long in making up for the temporary quiet. The advance in sugar on Monday was the most notable change of the week and the jump occurred in the direction in which it was anticipated. As stated in another column of this issue, there were a number of influences to bring about this result and these same conditions are expected to work a still greater increase about the time the demand is at its height. It might be here stated that molasses are also firmer and fancy stocks are being stored by shippers who thereby expect to secure higher prices later on in the year.

Canned fruits are steady and it might be said of the market in general that there is a tone of strength to it. Teas are firmer and they have for a long time been at a rather high figure.

Sugar—An advance of ten cents a cwt. was declared on sugar on Monday of this week and the market continued with a strong tendency that may possibly be expressed before long by still another advance. More than one influence has been responsible for the higher prices in the sugar market. The total stocks and floats together show a visible supply of 2,767,791 tons as compared with 2,914,193 tons of last year or a decrease of 164,402 tons. This decrease in the visible supply is taken along with the season of greatest consumption now approaching, and there is also considered the fact that Europe's supply has become exhausted. "Even at the increased price sugar is valuable holding," said a dealer to-day who cited reasons to support his statement. Raw sugar is firm, very firm in fact and combined with other conditions a further increase is expected about the time when the demand reaches its maximum.

Syrup and Molasses—Conditions are steady with molasses firmer. An increase of one cent a gallon was cabled from Barbados recently and it was stated that buyers were more numerous than sellers. Letters say that the crop is about finished and that in some cases shippers are storing away their fancy grades for better prices in the fall.

Winnipeg, May 26, 1910.

A local newspaper last week dispatched a corps of reporters to the country, in order to report on actual crop conditions from every corner of the west. It is interesting to note that in the sane and conservative reports issued that there was nothing to be found that savoured of detriment or fear of a crop smaller than in any preceding year. Crop forecasts in the west are now scientifically prepared, and although many unforeseen things might occur to blast bright hopes, yet the commercial world grasps at the facts these reports present in order that it might be guided safely in the path of industry.

The crop outlook theme is worn thread-bare, but it is the all-important commercial study of Western Canada, for upon the crop condition depends all other branches of business that this western country supports. This condition of things, however, is waning since the west is built upon a more secure foundation to-day than ever before.

The past good crops have not been used in vain, for other enterprises, too numerous to mention, have as a result of money circulation made money themselves, and can now stand alone in spite of a partial or total crop failure.

It is absurd to speak of insecurities in the west at this date of its history. It has long ago proven itself a superior source of wealth in the British empire, and this is proven by the enormous income of new people from every part of the world. If people from other parts of the empire and from foreign countries believe in the west, much more do those who have been resident there for some years.

The chief emigration officers stated last week that the majority of late-comers were more anxious to enter into business than to go to the plow. This statement is verified by manufacturers and wholesalers who are being pressed for goods.

On a C.N.R. train running from Winnipeg to Edmonton last week, there were twelve passengers who had just ordered grocery stocks for new stores in different towns along that line.

This fact is perhaps a clue to the prevailing shortage and high price condition of the markets. Every line of goods is being called for in enormous quantities and producers are being taxed to land the goods. If sources of supply at this moment should fail to deliver goods, there would be a serious condition in Western Canada. There are comparatively low stocks in wholesalers' hands. It is hand to mouth with them. Thousands of people are flocking into the country. Stores are opening by the hundreds. Camps are calling for enormous stocks, and prices in face of the prevailing condition are slow in the advance. Advance they will in many cases and great interest is attached to every commodity in the grocers' stocks as a result.

Sugar.—There is not an extra demand in powdered or fancy sugars, but all brands of granulated have a heavy output. The staples are all strong and although the demand for fancy goods is growing better, yet the necessities of life dominate the demand in the west to a much greater extent than anywhere else in Canada. So the quantity of coarse sugars consumed in the west is much greater in proportion to the fancy than elsewhere in Canada. Wholesalers do not expect lower prices until the summer months at least.

Dried Fruits.—The report from the east that dried fruit lines have dropped off in demand since the revival in the canned goods market has no verification in Western Canada. It cannot be said, however, that the reverse is true for the canned goods trade has certainly developed. The dried fruit market has not shown the least sign of abatement, but rather signs of over stimulation. The fact that jobbers are continually running out of stocks and also the fact that prices are continually on the rise, does not give the appearance that the trade is being cut into by any other line. Prunes, raisins, apricots and peaches are all on the up-grade, and in primes particularly there has been a serious shortage for some weeks. There were scenes in wholesale houses somewhat similar to a panic when reports of frost in crop centres came in, and at once figures were sent up. The camp trade is heavy, and new retailer stocks are taking the trade to the utmost.

Syrup and Molasses.—An irregular advance of about 10 cents has taken place. This has been expected for some time and strong pressure had to be brought to bear on the market to keep quotations at the figures published last week. Syrup is one of the leading staples of the western trade. The consumption in the west is reported to be many barrels per capita in advance of any other people on the continent, and the U. S. importation has been heavy. It is peculiar too that the maple syrup trade never affects this line, and an additional line is always an extra and not a substitute. Jobbers say there is a possibility of further advances and the market has been known to be higher on former occasions.

Molasses is quiet with a moderate demand and no change whatever in prices.

Honey.—Little can be reported on a line that does not fluctuate either in price or quantity of output during a whole year. The popularity of this product in the west makes it one of the leading lines in the trade, however, and though prices move little, yet there is no possibility whatever of lower quotations. There is to be more competition in the western trade in the future, owing to recent endeavours of honey producers to land some trade. Retailers will find it to their interest to develop the western production, and a local wholesaler has arranged to stock a good quantity of the Manitoba product. The 12 ounce product is the most popular here.

Lard.—The pure product has an exceptionally strong market, and advances of 5 cents are confidently expected. The compound has dropped off in output due no doubt to the easing of the butter market. The pure was used extensively for cooking purposes when butter was at the extreme figure, and it was really the condition of the butter market that revived the lard trade. The enlarged introduction of lard on the market, however, will make for an increased trade even if butter should go down many points in price.

Rolled Oats.—No change is reported in the figures, but a much stronger atmosphere prevails in this market. Nothing but the very keenest competition among jealous salesmen could keep the prices what they are. For some time the market has been quite out of joint with the oat market and the grain prices should naturally rule the rolled product. The condition is changing and it is believed that the $2 price is in sight. Much depends upon the future demand, however, and if this continues as it has in the past, stronger prices are inevitable.

Tapioca and Sago.—Up ½ cent is the report this week. What the future is to be is uncertain, but it is reasonably expected that what may be considered high prices are sure to come. A peculiar condition prevails in tapioca and sago crop centres. The commercial world has gone crazy over rubber production, and sago plants are being uprooted to make room for rubber plants. This, of course, applies to tapioca also, since they are practically the same plant, tapioca being the pith of the sago tree stock. Wholesalers claim that sago will not go off the market if it reaches the 15 cent price, so it will be interesting to watch the market in the future. A few years ago (1906) sago and tapioca were about 7 cents and present quotations cannot be considered high. But a much higher price may result from present conditions.

Beans.—Wholesalers have succeeded in drawing stocks from the east, where they were held for higher prices for some time. An advance of only 5 cents was the result and it did not pay stockholders to deplete the market, as they have done. The following quotations are firm, however, and may go up if the demand continues as it has during the past few weeks. Jobbers' margins are low and efforts may be made for this reason to send prices up.

3-lb. picker, per bushel	2 25
Hand picked, per bushel	2 35

Evaporated Apples.—Local stocks have been practically all cleaned out which is a new condition. Some weeks ago jobbers believed that some heavy losses would have to be sustained as there was a superfluous supply of poor quality, and no demand. It has all been sent out, however, at low prices and now storage centres are being called upon for new and better stocks. Jobbers refuse to quote anything lower than 8½ cents for new stuff and prices as high as 10 cents are being asked for the better grades. The quality all round is said to be real good and as soon as merchants are confident of this higher prices will undoubtedly be asked.

Nuts.—For the past year there has not been an item in the list that has been more interesting than the nut market. Gradually, yet sure, advances have been made due chiefly to the increasing demand. The recent tariff arrangement made it possible to get the goods into this country more easily, but until the present no lower prices can be quoted, as it happened the market was going up at the time of the tariff change. A local jobber stated yesterday that the almond market would no doubt have been 38 cents had the tariff arrangement been delayed. Those who may have expected a drop in prices were not rewarded, owing simply to the advance at the time of the change.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, N.S., May 26, 1910.

May is looked upon in the fresh fish trade as the dullest in the year—between seasons in fact, with lighter arrivals and corresponding decrease in output. The last complete car load for a distant point went out to Winnipeg recently, but business is beginning to show more activity with the approach of summer. Lobster shipments by the Plant Liner, Halifax to Boston on 18 were only 367 crates of live against 703 the previous week by the same steamer. Prices have advanced for live considerably in the local market. Shipments of canned lobsters chiefly to the European market have run up into thousands of cases in the two weeks. Prices are understood to be rather better for packers than last year, indications of shortage in the supply seeming to be generally accepted as likely to happen. Cod and haddock have been in fairly good supply with the addition of receipts from establishments at Hawkesbury, and Canso for ordinary local requirements.

Salmon are showing up in larger quanties from day to day. Mackerel have struck in all along the coast, east as well as west, but as yet the schools are not large.

Business for the last two week in sea foods, as well as all other household needs, has undoubtedly been affected to a certain extent by the general dullness incident to the curtailment of festivities of any kind since the King's death.

Refined sugar went up 10 cents during the week due to estimated short supplies.

Will the Grocer of the Future Sell from Sample?

Prediction Made by an Old Retailer That This Will be One of the Scientific Methods in the Days to Come — Price Maintenance Will be Another Feature—General Conditions to be on a Better Trade Basis.

By M. Moyer.

There are certain laws that govern and regulate industrial activities and when these are violated or side tracked, discontent, injustice, injury and suffering will follow.

This is necessary to teach us that we are off the track and are either not complying with the ever active principle of progress, or that we have entirely drifted away from the right path to pursue. The only true and satisfactory system of distributing the products of the world is through the wholesalers at certain centres, and through the retailers all over the country within easy reach of the consumers.

Through the introduction of large stores which are neither one nor the other and which are disturbing the natural channels of commerce there is discontent, injury and confusion. Instead of the country developing in its natural way, it is becoming unbalanced and while a few are gaining monetary fortunes, the great mass of the people are correspondingly impoverished. This is apparently the condition the country is in at the present time. The people are misled through powerful advertising and are unconsciously supporting the institutions which are undermining their own interests. This is causing an awakening, and a study of the situation as it exists, through which the evil results will be discovered and ways and means devised which will give the people the service to which they are entitled. The evidence that this work is going on is shown by the unrest in various lines of trade and the efforts to secure united action to turn the drift the right way.

As all interests are considered and are better understood the fact becomes clear that in the interests of all, instead of working against each other they must work for each other. Instead of suspecting each other for things they do not understand, they should work in harmony.

Better Conditions Coming.

With this movement in operation, and which is receiving more support every day, it is safe to predict that trade conditions will be worked out to be more equitable and of greater value to the people than at the present time.

The bargain craze into which the people were lured, and which at the present time commands respect from even the best people will be regarded as a combination of stealing and gambling. Instead of merchants trying to undersell each other, in order to deprive their neighbors of a living income, they will rival each other through a better and cleaner service. The people will rise above greed and will not force others to work at starvation wages in order to enable them to procure goods for less than they costs to produce them without suffering.

In view of this onward movement one may form some idea of the possible future of the grocery store and may venture to draw a picture in his imagination of what the ideal store of the future may be.

Will be Sold From Sample.

Instead of goods being displayed in boxes, barrels, bags and exposed to the dirt and dust, they will be kept in properly arranged warehouses, and sold entirely from samples in the salesroom. Everything in connection with food stuffs will be handled with much greater care as to clean and sanitary methods, grocers will require a thorough training and will have to pass an examination of fitness before they will be allowed to handle groceries.

Such filthy habits as tasting butter by taking part off the trier with the teeth and putting the rest back into the roll will not be tolerated.

Handling fish, coal oil, bread, biscuits, candy, etc., without washing the hands will be regarded as disgusting. Confectionery, dried fruit, etc., will not be placed immediately in front of the people where they handle them and very often carelessly cough over them. All goods will be kept under cover, and the warehouses will be built proof against rats and mice, and consequently the cat, the lesser evil will also have to go. Instead of grocers trying to be the cheapest they will try to be the cleanest.

Manufacturers will insist on paying the retailer a fair profit. Consumers will not look for bargains but will deal where it is the most convenient and where they get the freshest and cleanest goods.

The Science of Retailing

More Profit for the Merchant

Better Buying for the Customer

This splendid number of the Canadian Grocer is devoted to the science of Retailing and the purpose of it all is to help you to increase your profits and at the same time give your customers better service, make it more worth their while to deal with you. You do both when you sell the 40c. grade of Red Rose Tea to a customer who has been buying 30c. tea. No other tea in Canada at the price compares in quality with Red Rose Tea, and especially the 40c. grade. Time and again its superior worth has been acknowledged by the most expert independent tea men.

Every time you sell 40c. Red Rose Tea to a customer who buys 30c. tea you double your profit and your customer gets better value for her money than she does with any other 40c. tea, and especially with any 30c. tea, and will give you the credit. Surely this is the science of retailing to increase your profits and at the same time better please your customers.

You can sell a pound of 40c. tea to most of your 30c. customers. If you sell them 40c. Red Rose Tea you can keep on selling them the higher grade. It is worth your while to do it.

Production of Butter and Eggs Much Heavier

Decline in Prices Although Not as General in Regard to Eggs—Further Drop is Expected in Price of Each—Quieter Week in Provision Market—Poultry Has Not Yet Come to Its Own.

Receipts of butter and eggs have been extremely heavy during the past week, being responsible to a certain extent for the decline that has been reported from most centres. Butter has been on the toboggan for some time and it cannot be said that the lowest notch has yet been reached.

There has been no appreciable change in the hog market, but in provisions smoked bacon is slightly higher, while plate beef has gone in the opposite direction.

Although new cheese is being manufactured with steady increases it is not yet a strong factor.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—A reduction in plate beef prices has taken place. Prices have been considered too high by the trade for some time past. The 300 lb. barrel is now quoted at $8.75. Live hogs are up to $10 and $10.25 this week, though no change has taken place in dressed. Hams are firm and have a tendency toward higher prices. Trade in general is good, and all lines seem to be getting their full share.

Butter.—Owing to the large receipts of butter here, the situation would have been hurt materially if the west had not come to the rescue and taken the surplus off our hands. It is going to be a serious problem in the near future, however, to maintain prices at anywhere near their present position, as the eastern butter is now commencing to come in and receipts this week show a gain over the corresponding week last year of nearly 50 per cent., 10,253 packages as against 7,930. Of course our consumption is growing rapidly, but not sufficiently to keep pace with the increase of supplies. Since the first of the month there has been a gain of about 5,000 packages over last year's figures. The figures are 26,732, as against 21,759.

Cheese.—From all recent indications the man who pursues a conservative policy with regard to cheese is the man who will win out. Reports from two large producing centres show an increase (estimated) of over one-third above last year. Prices look to be due for a slump as soon as the grass goods begin to come in. English importers say that New Zealand cheese is obtaining a strong hold, and they find it much harder to dispose of Canadian goods at present prices than ever before.

Receipts for the week are 25,703 boxes as against 21,374 boxes same week last year. For the season they are 56,129 boxes, as against 56,502 boxes same season 1909.

Eggs.—The present condition of the egg market is rather alarming. Prices continue high in the country, and yet there are twice as many eggs available as last year at this time. Of course consumption is rapidly on the increase, and eggs are bought now as necessities rather than luxuries, still there seems a distinct probability of an oversupply this year.

Receipts for the week are 12,236, as against 11,123 cases same week last year. For the season they are 40,481 cases, as against 39,082 same season 1909.

Maple Products.—Prices quoted to the retailer have now little meaning, as stocks are so nearly exhausted at first hand that they may be entirely left out of consideration. Maple sugar and syrup are worth what can be obtained for them, and there need be no competition to hurt anyone. There is little enough for present needs and the visible supply is getting less every day.

Honey.—Honey matters are seemingly as quiet as ever, though some dealers report an increased demand in the past few days. The scarcity of maple products should have a beneficial effect as their shortage becomes more apparent. Prices are unchanged.

Provisions.—A temporary short supply of smoked breakfast bacon brought out a slight increase in price. In the hog market there was a noticeable quietness apparent. Prices for live and dressed hogs were not changed.

Butter.—Another decline in the price of butter was reported this week. The reason is easily understood considering the weather conditions this spring. Production is ample and, as was expected, prices dropped with the market heavily supplied. Some believe that the bottom price has not yet been reached.

Eggs.—With no abatement to the production of eggs another decline was felt during the past week. Cold storage houses held off to a certain extent and this tended to overload the market. Farmers are receiving 17 cents.

New laid eggs	0 18 0 18½

Cheese.—New cheese is beginning to be a factor in market circles. The various boards throughout the country are opening for the season with prices hovering about 10½ to 10⅝. Old cheese remains firm at 12¾ for large and 12c for twins.

Poultry.—Locally, business has brightened, thanks to the presence of race visitors. Prices have not changed however. Broilers are being received in only fair quantities.

Ready-made Suggestions for Increasing Sales

What Price Tickets and Brief Pithy Suggestive Announcements on Cards Will Do—Necessity of Maintaining a Fresh Appearance in the Stock—Blackboard in Front of Store for Naming New Goods or Specials.

A. H. Harvey.

Merchants might sell more goods and make more money by simple little plans in connection with their store that cost practically nothing but a little work. I do not mean to speak of the larger business getters, but of the smaller things that may be done about the store and which help along a great deal in the sales.

Perhaps of the smaller things, there is nothing more effective than price tickets, of which most merchants use far too few. Many retail grocers do not realize their great value in selling goods. Often, customers will notice and purchase goods to which the price ticket is attached, while they would not otherwise. It not only attracts the customer's attention to the article, but for some reason people seem to buy articles more if they know the price. I do not know why this is, unless most customers do not feel enough at home in a store to inquire the price of the many articles. It has been said that a merchant should use enough price tickets until a person can tell the price of every article in the shop. Perhaps, this is putting it too strong, but at any rate it is true that many more sales would be made in grocery stores if there were more price tickets used. The ordinary wooden stamps of which most merchants have a set, make the best price markers as the print is easily made out at any distance in the store. The price of goods, which you have in drawers and barrels and under the counter, may be made known in an attractive manner by having neatly printed signs such as "9 lb. Rolled Oats for 25c" tacked on the top shelf, where they can be easily seen by the customer, but do not hide any of the goods.

Keeping Stock Looking Fresh.

Goods must be clean and fresh looking in order to invite purchase. Care should be taken that wrappers are not damaged while in store house, or while being unpacked. Special attention should be given to see that old stock is always sold out first. Goods will become old looking by being exposed to the sun, while in the window.

Goods may be made more attractive by being properly placed on the shelves. Goods of one kind should be placed together on the shelf. In some stores you will find a few cans of salmon in one place and a few some place else, and so on, in any way to fill the shelves. They should be placed so that when the customer looks at one place he will see salmon and when he looks at some other place he will be reminded of some other article, and of that article alone. Keep all your canned goods in one place; all your teas in another, and everything in such a manner that when you are selling canned goods, you will not have to walk to one end of the shop for a can of tomatoes and to the other end for a can of corn or peas.

Of course, all merchants realize the value of a nicely trimmed window as a selling power. Goods that are placed in the window should always have a clean and fresh appearance as passing customers usually judge the store and goods by what they see in the window and if it has not the right appearance, the window is likely to lose its value as a selling agent. Articles should be selected with care and well dusted before being placed in the window.

Do not try to show everything you sell at once. One line at a time acts best as a salesman. Many window trimmers put in anything to give the window a nice appearance. Every merchant should aim at attractiveness in window dressing, but he should not sacrifice the main point—that of making more sales. Price cards should be an important feature of most grocery windows.

Merchants may use many ways of attracting the people who pass their store. Many merchants use a blackboard to good advantage in front of the store. The writing on these can be changed from day to day and in most cases prove a good advertiser. Some merchants head the board: "Store News," and give notice on it daily of fresh shipments of goods received and of specialties which they may have on hand.

Blackboard on the Wagon.

I do not see why it would not pay a merchant to place a black board on the back of his delivery waggon. This could also be changed from day to day and as your waggon is continually going in all parts of the town, you have a traveling advertisement that ought to be worth a great deal at a small cost.

Another small thing that helps a great deal in selling goods is a card on which is plainly printed: "Have you forgotten anything?" This when placed at the outgoing door will often cause a customer to stop and think of other articles. A better reminder is a larger card at the top of which you have the above quoted sign printed and below it a list of the most important lines you carry in stock.

A small card on which you have printed "Ask for what you don't see—Guess we have it" is a sales maker or it may be improved by adding: "If we haven't it we can get it." The customer will appreciate your attempt to supply all his or her wants.

Goods on which you have the most profit and those which are liable to spoil if kept too long, should be the most prominently displayed and their position in the store should be changed often.

If you or any of your clerks are good writers, you can attract customers' attention to many articles by short "Store Talks," neatly written on card board and tacked on the shelves at different parts of the store. A sample one might be, "We have just received our first shipment of new raisins and can safely say that we have not had a better quality in many years. They are certainly worth what we charge for them—only 8c lb."

There are many small plans that merchants may use to make more sales and the wise grocer is continually on the look out for any schemes that will help his business.

HOT AFTER THE DIVIDENDS.

The remarkable extent to which the dividend-hunger has taken possession of the minds of members of co-operative stores in some part of the old country is set forth with much humor in a book by F. Ormerod dealing with "Lancashire Life and Character."

"Who brought our new babby?" a lad is said to have asked. "Oh, the doctor brought it," replied the nurse. "By gum," the lad exclaimed, "mi faythe will cuss when he gets to know it hasn't coom from, t' co-op."

Even the housewife will indulge in all manner of extravagances in order that her husband's poundage shall not fall below the customary level. Says Mr. Ormerod:

A story is told of a woman who did not like the quality of the butter in a certain tub standing on the counter of the store she patronized. "That's gradely bad butter," she said one day, "when will you have some fresh?" "That's what you'll have to have or none," the shopman replied. "There'll be no more till that's done." "Well, then," said the doughty co-operator, "let's have four pound; let's get it done with."

TELL YOUR CUSTOMERS.

Two or three slices of lemon in a cup of strong tea will cure a nervous headache.

A tablespoonful of juice in a small cup of black coffee will relieve a bilious headache.

The juice of half a lemon in a cup of hot water on awakening in the morning is an excellent liver corrective, and successful substitute for calomel and other alternative drugs.

The Flour Market Tottering—Is Ready to Drop

Reports Indicate That Decline Will Soon be ExperiencedN Authorities Declare That a Break is Not Far Distant—Cannot Tell When it Will Happen, But Feel That it is Assured—Sharp Decline May be Experienced.

Crop reports from various quarters show a general improvement and the wheat market is suffering from bearish movements. While flour is quoted at a lower price in Montreal there has been no general decline, although it is expected at almost anv time. Export demand is below the ordinary and the entire tendency is toward a drop which under conditions previously referred to in these columns, conditions which have since improved, is expected at anv time.

Nothing has yet occurred to mar the prospect of heavy crops in Western Canada, and from the other big wheatfields of the world come similarly bright reports. A London report says the market there is dull. There is little change in price, but that is because there is little business.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—Even in the face of a very easy market the demand for flour is weak, and seems to be only for immediate requirements. Export demand is particularly light, and it looks as if a reduction would have to be made, if any material increase in business is to result. Prices are somewhat easier at present.

Oatmeal.—Nearly everyone seems to have ample supplies of rolled oats on hand, and as a result, trade is light. MONTREAL FIRM IN TROUBLE.

Perron, Taschereau, Rinfret & Gencst, lawyers in Montreal, on Monday made a demand of assignment on D. Masson & Co., a Montreal house established for over half a century. Louis E. Masson has been running the business for several years. His father, who founded the firm, retired a few years ago, and died recently. The firm was onc of the oldest of the French houscs in Montrcal, and did a large busincss as commission merchants and brokers, representing large European houses. They handled an old established confectionery linc until the firm recently opened a branch in Montreal. Liabilities amount to some $224,000. Among the largest creditors are: Estate of A. Masson, $124,500; Equity Real Estate Co., $66,000; Marie Brizard & Roger, $11,063; Merchants Bank, $10,000, as well as a number of French houses for whom the firm acted as agents.

CANADIAN SALMON IN BIRMINGHAM.

W. A. McKinnon, Canadian Trade Commissioner at Birmingham, England, reports the following on the fish market there: "The direct imports of Canadian fish to Birmingham are practically nil. Salmon appears to be the only Canadian fish which reaches Birmingham, and it comes chiefly through London or Liverpool houses. Other salmon is obtained from Scotland or Norway, but this can hardly be called competition, since the Canadian article is frozen and the others fresh. No encouragement whatever is obtainable as to the prospects for the development of Canadian trade in other kinds of fish, with the sole exception of fresh salmon, supplics of which will be cagerly welcomed.

"Scotch salmon has probably the best reputation in this market, but experts statc that the bcst Canadian salmon is originally quite equal in quality, though the frozen article is considered inferior. The common impression is that frozen is a very poor substitutc for fresh fish. This opinion, even if it be considered as prejudice, must be reckoned with, so that it may be taken as a fact that Canadian frozen salmon has a chance in the markets only when fresh is not obtainable, or is selling at prohibitive prices."

There's a difference in the taste of a "Perfection" Cracker which distinguishes it from every other Soda Biscuit.

The difference begins by the better mixing of the choicest materials, and by the better baking of the biscuit in modern sanitary ovens.

The difference is protected and preserved for your customer by the package of the biscuit, which effectively retains the freshness and excludes all dust and dirt.

Gross Profit of Forty Per Cent. in Confectionery

Charlottetown Merchant Tells of Advantage in Handling Such Goods as a Side Line—Why Grocery Store is the Logical Medium—Disadvantages of Over-Stocking.

There are many profitable side lines that retail grocers handle. Among these is confectionery according to a Charlottetown, P.E.I., grocer, who is quite enthusiastic over his confectionery department. He maintains the grocery store is the most logical place for it and it is one of his best paying lines.

The reason he says is this: "Every family visits the grocery almost daily because it is a necessity. Some never enter a drug store in a whole year, and therefore what chance has the druggist to compete successfully against the grocer in the sale of candy?"

Frequently, when one asks grocers why they do not sell confectionery they will say—no demand, no profit, too much loss; no room; cannot be bothered; I'm running a grocery store and not a candy shop.

"Undoubtedly a man who claims there is no money in confectionery and no demand for it is sadly mistaken," said the grocer on being asked his opinion.

"Watch a confectionery store," he said, "on a Saturday night, and if the place is properly kept you will soon see whether there is a demand or not. The demand always exists—it remains for someone to perform the sales."

Confectionery manufacturers claim that there is continual increasing demand because the retail trade is placing attractive goods before the public to create that demand.

"With regard to the 'no profit' contention, that I know to be absolutely wrong," declared the grocer.

"I have made specific calculations on a high-class stock. The gross profit ranges from 35 p.c. to 45 p.c., so that if a grocer sells 24 boxes at an average of 50 cents, in a week he is making a gross profit of about $5; if he sells twice that much he makes a profit of $10 and so on, with little extra expense and trouble.

"At that rate it would take him but a very short time to pay for an attractive show case, which would gradually increase his sales.

"In connection with the profits mentioned above I'm referring, of course, to high-class confectionery and not gross goods.

"There is too much loss in anything a grocer handles from my observations unless he stops the leaks. If in slicing ham for instance an ounce is wasted every time there will be little or no profit in that ham.

Be Careful About Over-stocking.

"So with confectionery; if a merchant overstocks in it and does not carry a good fresh stock he is likely to have a losing department on his hands. Supposing he does not keep his goods displayed attractively and tidily he is likely to lose custom; the best goods keep the longer and are not apt to turn into a loss so readily as a poorer class.

"No grocer should complain of lack of room for any paying line. All handle fancy biscuits and why not combine these with confectionery into one department. If it is handled in a scientific manner it simply insures an extra source of revenue.

"In these days of competition the modern grocer is going after profitable side-lines. If he stuck to 'groceries' pure and simple, what would he carry? He has vegetables, fruit, meats, pastry, etc., and there is no reason why he shouldn't handle confectionery, where the profits are greater.

"In the grocery there are no antiseptics to taint the flavor of the chocolates such as exists in the drug store. This should be pointed out in the advertising and on the window cards used by the grocer, because he has a splendid talking point. Customers are sure of getting the original flavor."

What is needed according to this grocer is a little attention to the show case in which the confectionery is displayed, carefulness in not overstocking, occasional displays in the windows and some well written advertisements in the newspapers from time to time.

PLAIN TALKS TO CLERKS.

If They are Not Successful Cause Lies in Themselves, Says Writer.

"Why don't you get along? Why don't your superiors welcome your good suggestions and give them the consideration to which you think they are entitled?"

These are some questions says a magazine writer which every clerk should consider.

"If you don't get along and if your suggestions are not given due consideration, you may depend upon it there is a reason for it, and you can look for the reason in yourself.

"It is not uncommon to meet people who are fairly efficient in minor positions who are of such calibre that if consulted in regard to matters of any importance are immediately unfitted for their accustomed duties, and instead of earning the salary they are drawing, think only of the importance of things they might do if given a chance and of the ingratitude of their employer for their valuable suggestions and advice.

"It is not uncommon for such people to express the opinion that there is no use in exerting themselves in the interest of their employer, as efforts beyond such as are absolutely necessary to hold their jobs are not appreciated or paid for.

"Let me tell you that that man or woman will never get along, and his suggestions will never be in demand.

"The man who gets to the top must be immune from the grouch; must always consider the duties of his own particular position as of the greatest importance, and then find time to make himself useful and valuable in other ways. If his value or ability is not immediately noticed or appreciated he keeps on trying until it is.

"How do you know that you are not being tested now to see whether you are a quitter, a four-flusher or the real thing? Because you have happened to cop out a good idea from some place where you have been formerly employed or read or heard of some little thing that might be valuable to someone else—do you expect to be brought immediately into the inner circle and have your salary advanced for 365 days in the year when you may not have another thought in your noodle worth a tinker's cent.

"If you have any such think, you'll have it alone. What every business house wants and demands are real men and women who make no bluffs but 'deliver the goods' every day in the year."

Reports of ptomaine poisoning the result of eating canned goods are somewhat fewer than in the past in the United States, a condition that has been due largely to the protective method of the canners. They engaged detectives to investigate every case which was reported to have originated from canned goods. If the facts vindicate the canners they are published in denial of the first item. It is reported of one recent case that the "canned goods" which fatally poisoned eleven persons had been "put up" by the housewife herself.

You get what you pay for in this world, no more and no less, and when you underpay you underget. The price-cutter has no bottom. Ability always commands its full worth. The man holding out for an unbreakable rate does so because he can do so—because he has made good.

And then, brother grocer, his trade is yours

You both sell similar lines—You and Your Competitor.

Let's call these Similar Lines your "Points of Contact."

So that you touch him, compare with him at as many points as you have varying articles in stock.

Which is evident, isn't it?

If you excel him in 50 per cent. of your lines, and he excels you in 50 per cent., Your Competitor's strength is equal to your own, don't you see?

And there's no Particular Advantage why Mrs. Housewife should give you more of her "valued patronage" than she gives him.

But you are Ambitious—must excel—you want more than simply your share of the local trade.

Quite a legitimate way of increasing Your Profits, you know.

So point by point, line by line, article by article, gradually and steadily you increase Your Superiority in each until you find yourself superior to Your Competitor at, say, 75 Points of Contact, while before you only excelled in 50.

See how it works?

You Concentrate on ONE POINT, while he possesses only the Desire for GENERAL SUPERIORITY—quite a difference.

Do you honestly think the customer is blind to your Superior Merits; do you think she doesn't compare notes; that she doesn't appreciate results; that she will fail to give YOU the bulk of her trade, at least in those lines where you do excel?

And, Brother Grocer, if you excel at 75 points you simply must secure an increase therein. If you excel in 90 points, say, you enjoy an Increasing Increase. If you should excel in all respects—why, you'd become a veritable Trade Magnet, making it almost impossible for Competition to exist in your neighborhood.

* * * *

And yet that's how FIVE ROSES has grown to be the flour with the largest sale in Canada.

All within the last twenty-two years, Brother Grocer.

By concentrating on one feature after another in the making of good flour, point by point we have increased the General Superiority of FIVE ROSES.

In Uniformity — Strength—Purity —Adaptability — Color—Yield—in fact, every selling advantage.

Add to this the well-known LAKE OF THE WOODS policies: Courtesy, Attention, Quick Delivery, Square Dealing.

Each "Point of Contact" was taken up separately, strengthened, perfected.

So that when FIVE ROSES has once secured a foothold, Brother Grocer, Competition is no longer an issue.

Begin your Quality Uplift in your flour selling. Excel Your Competitor at this point by selling FIVE ROSES flour while he merely sells "flour."

The Undoubted Results will encourage you, compel you to adopt the Quality Policy in every single line.

Until one day you find yourself superior at every point.

Think, Brother Grocer, just think what it means to YOU.

Getting a Good Profit from Tobacco and Cigars

Points to Look After in Displaying and Storing These Goods to Run the Department Scientifically — Moisture Necessary in the Show Case and Storage Receptacle — A Means of Getting Men attracted to the Store.

Tobacco is a side line which is coming to be more and more important to the average grocer.

At first general stores were the only ones who deemed it advisable to handle such stocks, but now it is a common sight to see a line of cigars and tobaccos carried, even by city grocers.

In some recent investigations as to profits and general results from such trade, a Grocer representative found some things worthy of being passed on.

In the first place tobacco is one of the easiest articles to keep in proper condition, if one knows how and is prepared for it. Tobaccos and cigars, as every one knows, when exposed to the open air in this climate become dry and hard. Also the aroma is impaired and changed. To obviate this, investigation has shown that a humidor, or some article of the moisture producing kind, must be included in every cigar show case. Often this is not done and the result is a poor line of goods, no matter what price was originally paid for them. The wrappers of cigars crack and peel off, often causing the smoker much mental as well as physical discomfort, and plug tobacco of all kinds becomes so dry and hard that it is practically unsalable. There is no use trying to stock tobacco if it is not taken care of.

There are many simple contrivances put out by manufacturers to put in a show case. Almost all of them are good. In fact a simple bowl of water will do the trick. At any rate see that your tobacco show-case has water in some form or other kept in it all the time.

Watching the Surplus Stock.

Outside of the display stock is the question of storing the reserve. This is even more of a problem than the other. Much of the smoking tobacco is now put up in sealed cans or packages protected with foil and requires little attention, provided it is not in stock for more than two or three months.

With cigars it is different. None of the boxes will keep in good condition without moisture to draw on for any length of time. If you have a cool, slightly damp section of your store room, they will do nicely there. Othewise some such expedient as the following must be resorted to:

Take an old packing box and arrange a humidor of some kind. Place what cigars and plug tobaccos you wish in it and store it. Remember, too much moisture is almost as bad as too little, and care must be taken to see that only the right amount, which can readily be determined by a week's trial, is used.

Do not display or store on shelves exposed to the open air. That is the main point to be borne in mind.

As to what lines to carry, there is considerable difference of opinion. It depends largely on the class of trade you can command. Some standard plug and package tobaccos are essential. Also one or two lines of higher grade smoking tobacco—say one retailing at $1.50 per pound and one at $2. Of course, this is not an absolute necessity, but every grocer who studies his trade can soon decide if he needs the foregoing list or not.

The cigar proposition is a more difficult one. There are innumerable lines on the market, and there are smokers who will almost swear by each one of them.

If you find your original stock doesn't appeal to enough customers, have sales of them, cut the price sufficient to get rid of the balance, and try again. Often

A Profit of 25 Per Cent.

At any rate do not be discouraged by a failure to make money out of cigars. There is a good 25 per cent. in them once you get the trade on its feet. Just try again. You will hit it in a second or third attempt, and once stablished, tobacco trade is steady and hard to lose.

Incidentally there is a point to be borne in mind here. It is about the only way you can get the men of the family into your store. The wives and daughters do nine-tenths of the household buying. Get the men coming to your store and eventually you will add their grocery trade, by a little judicious personal advertising.

One grocer interviewed simply used his tobacco trade as an ad. for his other lines, selling so close to cost it produced little or no profit, yet he considered that it paid well. At any rate there is money in a legitimate tobacco business, and outside of the tobacconist himself, the grocer is as well, or better qualified to handle these lines as men in any other line of business, such as druggists, newsdealers and others.

LOWERS PRICES SLOWLY.

A Hamilton grocer does not always jump with the market. Some time ago when eggs were about due to drop they were retailing at 27 cents a dozen. Suddenly the price dropped to 23 cents, and the general market assumed that level. This grocer stood pat for several days and although he did not really expect it the price returned to 27 cents, and held firmly to that price for a week. They then went down for keeps and this grocer followed the crowd.

"I take my time about changing prices," he said, "and make as few changes as possible. I may make a cent or two cents less, or even five cents less, to-day than I made yesterday, and I may have the same experience to-morrow, but I more than even up during the course of the year, and in the meantime I have not upset my customers by dancing around like a decapitated chicken, to my own undoing."

F. W. Porter and A. Parent have purchased the grocery business of Hatt, Morrison & Co., at Fredericton, N.B.

Chas. McGillivray, canning inspector for the Federal government, was in Montreal last week. He reports a decided improvement in sanitary conditions in our factories this year.

Safeguarding Your Profits in Handling Fruit

Three Essentials That Must be Carefully Considered by Grocers Who Carry a Stock of Fruit — Suggestions Offered by Several Winnipeg Grocers Who Have Learned by Experience —The Necessiy of Selecting Sound Fruit in the Proper Quantity—How to Make it Pay.

By L. C. Harkness.

Do you handle fruits at a loss? Many grocers do, and are willing to admit the fact. They have a strong argument in their favor for so doing, but it would seem that the grocer who makes at least a little profit would have a stronger argument. Why should it be handled at all if there is no profit in it? Because it draws trade to the store is the only answer. There is probably no line of goods in the retail grocer's stock that attracts more custom than the fresh fruit stocks.

It is questionable, however, whether the extra quantity of other goods sold would cover the expense of handling the fresh fruits. If they are a drawing card, they are also difficult goods to care for, and require more attention than the ordinary grocery lines.

It seems absurd that anyone should be content to simply use them to increase trade in other lines without endeavouring to hit upon some system of reaping a margin on them. The chief reason why the profit is eliminated is because the turnover is not large enough.

The whole problem lies in the fact that the goods must be moved off rapidly.

Must Know Good Fruit.

The average grocer is not a fruit expert, and this he must become to some extent at least, in order to make a success of the fresh fruit line.

J. S. Charlston, a Winnipeg grocery clerk, who had experience in the fruit business in Liverpool, England, says there are three points about fruit handling to which the average grocer needs to pay close attention.

The first of these is the matter of quality. Too often the grocer buys goods that have already commenced to decay. Fruit should be studied so that the buyer cannot be deceived between the firm fresh quality, and the stuff that is partly decomposed beneath the skin. Each species of fruit will form a study by itself. Apples, pears, peaches, plums and grapes are all different, but they might all be considered in one class.

The Olympia fruit store in Winnipeg is a model in its class. There are experts in attendance who buy only the best quality, goods that will "stand up" for twenty-four hours at least. As soon as the fruit arrives it is put on sale and the quantity is limited to what can be sold each day.

Quantity to be Considered.

Quantity is the next thing to consider. It is not wise to buy more at a time than can be sold during one day. In Liverpool every morning the grocers go down to the warehouses at five o'clock and pick out the choicest fruit for the day's trade. Experience teaches them how many baskets of grapes or peaches they will turn over in that day and that only. The goods are hurriedly displayed and ticketed at a fair margin price and at night they are all sold and at a profit.

Too many grocers allow the buying price to control the quantity. It is not wise to buy at any price a quantity that cannot be moved out the same day.

Storing Over Night.

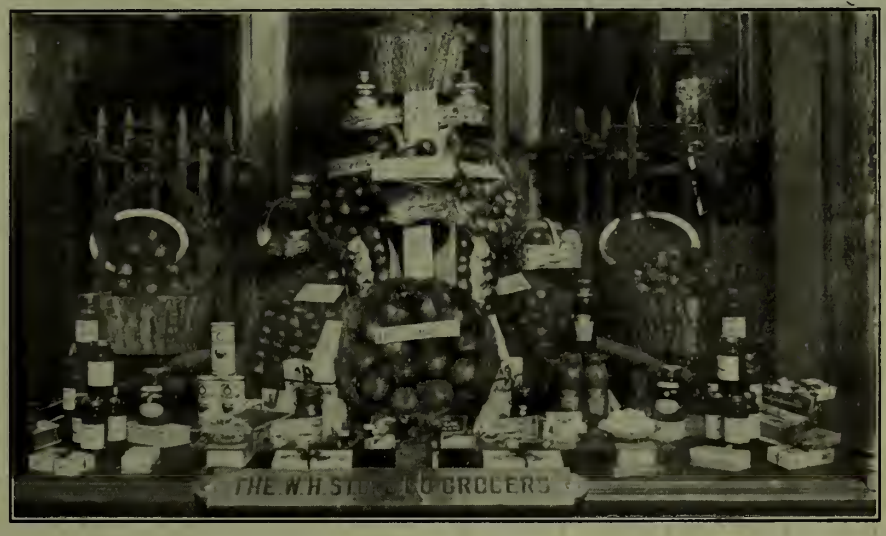
The last point has reference to the handling or storing of fresh goods, while in retailers' hands. To illustrate: A grocer buys a barrel of apples at four o'clock in the afternoon. They come in fine and fresh from the storage car, but the following night they "sweat" in the closed store, and in the morning they are shrunken.

Before another night signs of decay appear. In a much shorter time will grapes or plums deteriorate, hence greater is the concern. Now if the grocer must keep fruit over night, he should safeguard it against decay.

H. E. Weldon, of Winnipeg, believes that a grocer should have a separate room in which to store fruit, to keep it at the proper temperature. The same grocer always keeps his window neat during the fruit season, and makes a specialty of pushing off the day's fruit.

Sutherland & Co., another Winnipeg grocery firm, finds it advantageous to advertise a daily list of fruits, and even if prices are at par it brings business and makes it possible to reap handsome margins when the opportunity presents itself.

Those who are handling fresh fruits successfully claim that no grocer can afford to over-look the points of quality, quantity and storage. To attend to these features practically guarantees a profit in handling fruits.



Fruit and Confectionery Window of W. H. Stone & Co., Winnipeg.

CARING FOR VEGETABLES.

Here is some advice given by a grocer of experience on handling vegetables:—"Some vegetable stands are a sight to behold and others are a thing of beauty and profit. How's yours? The loose, dirty leaves should be plucked from lettuce and the stem part cut off close. Spinach should be sorted when laid on the stand. Asparagus should stand on a thoroughly water-soaked four-double sack or sacks. Cabbage should be trimmed. celery should be washed and the yellow leaves pulled off. Radishes should be displayed with the leaves lying down. Beets the same. Watercress should be kept in the cooler. But to make your stand effective each kind of vegetable should be laid out neatly and separately and the whole sprinkled occasionally from a small watering can kept underneath the stand. This sprinkling gives a most refreshing effect."

Business Now Brisk in Fruit and Vegetables

Frequent Fluctuations in Many Lines Due to Changes in Supply and Demand—Tomatoes are Maintaining a Firm Hold—Likewise Oranges, Grapefruit and Lemons — Canadian Trade Heavy This Year—Production is Plentiful — Eastern Salmon Fishing Season Opens.

Activity in the fruit market is evidenced by the reports from various centres of daily fluctuations. There is evidently an abundant supply of the vegetables and fruits now in demand, although tomatoes are not overstocked and are quite firm. Strawberries, bananas and pineapples are easier. Fancy apples and oranges are firm. Lemons are also strong with an increasing demand. Trade in fish is steady with the demand holding on.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—Apples are certainly apples just at present, particularly "Spies" which are bringing from $7.50 to $10 per bbl. Russets also rule slightly higher. Other lines are pretty well exhausted.

The new lines are of fair quality and bring $1.25 per box.

Grapefruit are scarce and higher, bringing from $5.50 to $7. There is a large demand for both grapefruit and oranges. Maryland strawberries are on the market and show exceptional value at 16c. Trade is improving daily.

Vegetables.—Trade in fresh vegetables is still somewhat quiet, but is improving daily. Fresh supplies are coming in freely and almost daily price fluctuations show that the market is much more active than last week. Tomatoes are selling well at higher prices. Cabbages are easier. New beets and carrots bring good prices.

Spanish onions are practically off the market.

Fish.—The fish business is improving steadily, not only from the volume point of view, but in a broader sense. The packing and curing methods are improving, the facilities for reaching the market greater, and moreover the fish merchants have educated the people of the country to use more fish. They have looked after the interests of the consumer in this way, that the consumer can obtain a substitute for flesh and dear meats at a comparatively low price.

The feature for the week is that this marks the opening of the fishing for eastern salmon.

Reports from the fishing grounds show that there has been a tremendous run of fish during the past ten days. In fact it is almost as large as any on record.

Prices are still high and will remain so until the 1st of June, in all probability. All other lines are in good supply and prices are easy. With the exception of pickled salmon, other pickled lines have no demand.

Green Fruits.—The market might be called unsettled, considering the fluctuations which have been occurring and which are expected in the future. Jobbers state that their advices do not cover a long period as the market is frequently changing. Supplies are reported ample at present, resulting in easier prices for the time being. Heavy shipments of bananas are arriving and are rapidly cleared. Strawberries are easier and plentiful. Some quote them at from 13 to 15 cents; others get the figures as high as 17 cents. Oranges are firm. Navels now arriving are about the end of the crop. Valencias

Vegetables.—Tomatoes remain firm at the price they have held for some time. The quality is good and quotations are not expected to change for some time. New potatoes are receiving good demand. Different Methods in Handling Different Fruits

One Who Has Had Considerable Experience Advises Hand to Mouth Buying—'Play Safe' is the Policy of the Scientific Retailer—Depreciation Results From Carrying Over Stocks From Day to Day—Peculiarities About Bananas, Pears, Lemons, Etc.

"Carrying a line of fruit presents a few obstacles which should be carefully guarded against by a grocer. If he is not careful in his method he will find his profits close to the line and will often be out of pocket."

A grocer who has been through the fruit mill and is well acquainted with it thus expressed himself. He had enjoyed (?) the feeling of being wealthy enough to throw away berries, bananas, and other fruits which he has held too long and had consigned them to the dump-pile with an extravagance befitting a millionaire.

His experience was valuable to himself and he was willing to pass it along to his fellow grocers.

"Play safe is my policy," he remarked. "By that I mean don't buy too much. Err on the right side and buy too little rather than lose all your profits by overstocking and then having to smile like a martyr as the fruit goes bad in spite of your prayers which in cases of this kind are unavailing.

"A hand to mouth system brings results every time. If you are not sure of the demand you will have to meet don't be rash. Let the wholesaler keep the stock over in his premises. You can buy fresh fruit every day and if there is any loss it is not coming out of your profits.

"It is always advisable to study carefully your summer fruit business in order that you may know how to act wisely. Endeavor to arrange your trade in such a way that you will know exactly the demands of a large number of your customers. Put it plainly to them. When they come for their first orders tell them that you have made arrangements with a large fruit dealing firm for a daily service of all lines of fruits at the existing market prices. Endeavor to secure orders for a certain number of boxes of fruit a week specifying the days on which they are to be delivered and thus in the beginning you will be able to establish a regular business which will grow if you maintain good service and handle only the best quality. This is a certain trade.

"Then comes the question of carrying a stock for irregular demand. It is a wise policy to buy your fruit twice a day if you can, selling your first supply before replenishing your fruit department. There will not only be the advantage of taking a slight risk, but customers appreciate fresh fruit which has not that bedraggled appearance, suggesting that it has been toned up several times in order to look presentable.

Keep a Fresh Stock.

"If you want to sell fruit it must be fresh and tempting. If you find your stock has not been all sold at the end of a day, and that you must hold it over, you know that in the morning it will have depreciated at least 25 p.c. That in itself is not a pleasnt fact, but it is nevertheless true. At any rate I found it so in my business. Refrigerators do not afford much protection against the deterioration of your stock so that you are handling inferior goods on the second day and customers will not appreciate that fact.

"To be perfectly sure of your quality in cherries, berries, plums, peaches, pears, green gages, etc., buy them daily or, as I said before, twice a day. You will take more interest in selling fresh fruit for it will move easily and will practically sell itself. On the other hand your stock that has been held over night will need your attention and if you meet with the discouragement of throwing various amounts onto the refuse pile your enthusiasm in handling fresh fruit will soon vanish.

On Buying Various Fruits.

"Bananas may be bought green in the summer. It will not be long until they show signs of ripening. In the winter they should be bought three or four days ahead. If they are bought green and are put away and become chilled they turn black and diminish in quality. Lemons bought green in the winter will keep from one to six months. Bought in the summer however they will keep only two or three weeks.

"A cold sandy cellar is the best place I know of to store them for they will keep better there than in a refrigerator. I found that in handling lemons it was best to buy in rather small quantities, just keeping about a week ahead of the demand. There is always a good trade in lemons during the summer months and following this plan you will have few to throw away.

"In regard to peaches they should not be fingered. When they are received in their season they should be carefully handled and if they are fingered by customers it will be found that finger prints will soon turn to a bruise. Customers have the habit of feeling the peaches to see if they are hard or soft and the next morning or soon after there will be little brown spots denoting bruises which you will be unable to account for."

CANADA'S COMPETITORS IN FISH.

"Of all the countries from which fish is imported," says A. W. Donly, Canadian Trade Commissioner, Mexico, "Canada's principal competitors are the United States and Norway. The fish coming from Spain, France, Italy and Portugal consists of special kinds, put up in oils and fancy sauces, such as the first-mentioned countries do not pack to any great extent.

"Under the first heading, the principal item is whole cod from Norway, while the imports under the second, from the United States and Norway, consist chiefly of canned salmon and sardines. In sardines, both as regards quality and price, Norway seems to have a decided advantage over all other countries.

"Canned salmon is undoubtedly the largest single item in fish imports. The kind having by far the largest sale is a cheap grade sold chiefly to the lower classes as Alaska salmon, and retails at from 18 to 20 cents, gold, per can. This costs, laid down, about 12 cents per can, leaving a profit of 50 per cent. over cost. While many Canadian packers of salmon have made inquiries in regard to this trade, few results seem to have been obtained, due apparently to a better grade of fish and better and more costly process of packing.

Reasons for Small Importations.

"The chief reason for the comparative insignificance of all fish importations into Mexico is undoubtedly the fact that the water of the gulf and the Pacific always offer an unlimited supply of the fresh article. The waters of the Gulf of Mexico teem with excellent red-snapper, sea-perch and pampano which are distributed through the different ports, by express, to all the principal centres of population in the interior. With prime fresh fish at the same or a less price than the most inferior grades of the canned article, it would indeed be surprising if the importations of the latter article should reach very considerable proportions.

"Moreover, as fresh fish pays a duty of 2.27 cents per net pound while the canned article pays 4.1 cents per legal pound, fresh salmon is brought in from the Sacramento river, practically during the whole year and retails at more or less the same price as the better grades of canned goods. The principal consumer of canned goods of all kinds, fish, meats, vegetables and fruits are mining and construction camps, which, due to their meagre means of communication with the railways, cannot count on the fresh product."

HOW THEY GET THE TOURIST TRADE.

Actual Methods Used to Make the Muskoka Tourist Trade Profitable.

W. Hanna & Co., general merchants of Port Carling, Ont., make a specialty of catering to the tourists and campers who throng the Muskoka Lake district every summer, and the flourishing trade they have developed must certainly have been due to the energetic and systematic manner in which they "went after" business, to use a common phrase of the day. They recognized the opportunity presented by the influx of a class who are invariably well supplied financially and are willing to pay high prices for the quality they desire. The company has been modern in its methods, which are described at some length in this article. One of the members of the firm referring to their special summer trade said :

"We endeavor to attract the tourist trade, first of all, by keeping in stock the goods which we have found, in our experience of nearly thirty years in the business, the tourist calls for ; second, by always being on the watch for new goods which we believe will 'take' with them, and third, by advertising in the guide books, transportation companies' folders, tourist association year books and other mediums likely to reach the present or prospective Muskoka tourist.

"Then each winter we send out to all the addresses we can get a neat little folder with views, etc., as a reminder of Muskoka. We also get after the trade in a practical way by running two supply steamers, one 11 ft. by 72 ft. and the other 16 ft. by 85 ft. in dimensions. The larger of these we run during the whole season of navigation and the smaller during the four summer months of June to September. On these we carry as full a stock of all lines of groceries, meats, vegetables, fruits, confectionery, bread, hardware and the most called for lines in dry goods, as the size of the boat will permit and take orders for, and deliver the next trip, anything not on board if it is procurable at all.

"The tourist season here begins about the end of May and lasts till the middle or end of October, but is mainly confined to the months of July, August and September. It is at its height during the first two weeks of August.

Carried Varied Stock.

"We stock pretty nearly everything from 'a needle to an anchor.' Some of our lines are : groceries of all kinds, both fancy and staple : provisions, meats, bread, and cakes, fruits, confectionery, drugs, stationery and fancy goods, Indian goods and souvenirs, boots and shoes, and all kinds of summer footwear : gents' furnishings, dry goods, hammocks, flags, etc.; carpets and oilcloths, furniture, stoves, tinware, hardware, paints, oils and varnishes, yacht and boatd supplies, crockery and glassware, carbide and fishing tackle. In fact anything and everything that the cottager, camper or guest is likely to require.

Wholesalers Sell to Hotels.

"In regard to wholesale houses selling direct to hotels, boarding houses, etc. There is a lot of this done up in this district. One so-called wholesale grocer sends a traveler up here every spring, who spends about two weeks calling on all hotels, boarding houses and even farmers who keep a half dozen summer boarders. Then there are some tea and coffee dealers, who, we believe, sell to some merchants, and whose travelers make a house to house canvas of the lakes, calling on everyone, whether they keep boarders or not. We think the law should be amended so that these travelers should pay a tax to the local municipality. Certainly no merchant should buy from them.

"We do not think that the hotels and boarding houses buy supplies very largely from the mail order houses, but we have no doubt that they nearly all deal personally with them."

Uses of Common Salt that Grocers Ought to Know

Keeps Eggs for Months and Will Prevent Milk From Souring —A Good Fire Extinguisher as Well as a Cleanser and Polisher—Freshens up Old Walnuts and will Remove Stains From Glass—Has Useful Medicinal Properties.

Common salt or sodium chloride is one of the best known articles in the modern grocery. Yet outside of a few of the ordinary uses to which it is put by the average grocer and consumer, there are hundreds of useful qualities which are not generally known.

The table and cooking uses are common knowledge and have been for centuries. But take for instance a few of the other uses. How many people know that salt enters into the composition of soap ; is used for the production of shoes and some kinds of cloth, as an antiseptic, and even as a medical preparation ? It is impossible to give a complete list in the compass of one short article.

Salt in the Grocery.

It is probable that, although it is handled by every grocer in large quantities, not many know the methods used to obtain salt. Many persons even have the idea that it is chemically made. For that matter it can readily he made, but not at a price which would put it into competition with the article obtained in the ordinary way.

Outside of rock salt, which is mined, the method is to bore for a salt well as for an oil well. When the proper stream has been found it is pumped into large iron pans, where heat is applied and the water evaporated. The size of the crystals varies directly in proportion to the amount of heat used. Quick boiling produces small crystals, and slow heat the coarser varieties.

After entering the grocery, either in barrels or packages, salt is in a position to he of use to the consumer and the grocer himself. A few of these uses will give some idea of their variety.

For instance, eggs packed tightly in salt and entirely covered by it will keep for months. Milk can he kept sweet for three to four days by simply adding a teaspoonful of salt per quart of the milk It forms a valuable test for telling a poisonous fungus from the true mushroom by the simple method of sprinkling the under side of the "umbrella" with it. If poisonous it turns yellow.

Restores Frozen Potatoes.

Supposing during the winter your vegetables become frozen. It may mean a considerable loss if they cannot he restored. Simply place them in a warm room in a solution of salt and cold water and leave overnight. Then dry them and they will be found to be as good as before. Somewhat similarly potatoes kept through the winter may be prevented from sprouting by the simple method of immersing them in a wicker basket in a saturated, boiling salt solution.

There is almost universal danger of fire in stores and a good extinguisher can be made very cheaply by dissolving 20 lbs. of common salt and 10 lbs. of sal ammoniac in 7 gallons of water. This solution placed in bottles about the store, affords a quick remedy for any ordinary fire.

Still another series of uses is found in the cleansing and polishing properties of salt. A mixture of salt and vinegar will clean brasswork beautifully and give it a fine polish. By heating the same mixture iron work can be treated in the same way. Salt and salad oil form one of the best furniture polishes, and these uses can he amplified many times by a little personal experimenting.

Rather an odd use for salt is the method of freshening up old walnuts. Place them in a solution of salt (one teaspoonful to a pint of water) and water and leave standing for twenty-four hours Dry the nuts and they will he found much improved. The same method may he used as a preservative for fresh nuts as well.

The preservation of meats and fish has been known too long and too generally to need any more than incidental mention here.

Removes Stains from Windows

In cleaning the windows of your store, the use of dampened salt will remove paint or other stains better than almost anything else. In winter if the windows are gone over outside with brine it will prevent the formation of frost for several hours. In fact as a cleanser and preservative the uses are practically without number.

The foregoing are just a few hints on the subject which should prove useful in both store and home. Salt is rather looked down upon as a necessary and cheap household article, useful only as an adjunct to other edible. Yet nothing in a grocery can be put to work in so many ways as this humble, every day article.

Over and above all the lines mentioned here are its medicinal properties, its uses in manufacturing and its uses in the home. It is even used on public roads to lay dust instead of petroleum. Taking it altogether we would have a hard time without it. Even we, ourselves need about 2-3 of an ounce every day. Our blood cannot well do without it.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

The Litster Pure Food Co., Toronto, have issued a handsome booklet which they are distributing to the consumer. It is attractively finished in colors, several of the pages containing lithograph reproduction in the original colors of packages and cans in which their goods are sold. The Litster trade mark is also prominently displayed and there are many brief talks referring to the quality and value of the various goods the company sells.

The MacGreegor Specialty Co., Toronto, Canadian distributors of Frou-Frou, is making an offer to send a free sample of this delicious filled wafer to any address in the Dominion. No article of recent years has met with such universal approval by the Canadian grocery trade, as this Dutch Wafer, now famous on both sides of the Atlantic.

The National Cash Register Co. guarantee to furnish a better cash register for less money than any other concern in the world. They do it. The merchant who desires to develop his business along scientific lines requires to purchase a National Cash Register, as the first step in that direction. He should write today for absolute proof that it will stop mistakes, stop losses, increase trade and increase profits. As a business man he will find it interesting reading. He will readily see how it is that a National Cash Register pays for itself in a short time and goes on making money for him as long as he uses it. Is your net profit what it should be on the volume of business you are doing? If not, losses are occurring in your method of handling cash sales, charge sales, money received on account, money paid out, and change. You need a National Cash Register. If you heard of a line of goods which you didn't have in your store, and on which it could be proved that over 825,000 fellow merchants were making more money than on anything else in their stores, you wouldn't lose any time investigating this line of goods. More than 825,000 merchants are using National Cash Registers. We don't ask you to pledge yourself to buy. All we ask is for you, in justice to yourself and your business, to investigate the matter and find out whether or not it will make you money National Cash Registers are sold on monthly payments. They actually save each month more than the monthly payment amounts to.

It is good storekeeping to sell only goods which you know to be reliable and to keep only such goods on your shelves.

All grocers should carry a full stock of Royal Baking Powder.

It gives the greatest satisfaction to customers and pays the grocer a greater profit, pound for pound, than any other baking powder he sells

A Rich Field That Will Bring You Returns

A Suggestive Talk to Manufacturers

A manufacturer not represented in the Eastern Townships is neglecting an important field. Here live a majority of the English residents of Quebec Province, and a large percentage of thrifty French-Canadians.

All classes are in good circumstances, and live well, as prosperous people do. They buy for cash or on short credit, and, consequently, are not averse to giving new brands a trial.

If You have a brand you want introduced—provided it is of quality to hold its own, in fair competition, afterwards—ask us if we cannot place it for you.

Fifteen years' experience in the grocery business here, strong, personal connection with the trade, and a thorough knowledge of conditions make us the logical sponsors for any manufacturer desiring his share of profitable Eastern Townships business.

The charge is fully completed while the order is taken and the account is posted up to the minute in this simple manner. No loss of time posting accounts nor in going to register after "past account."

Each account is in a separate book. This book is numbered from 1--50 in duplicate or triplicate, and as a result of this numbering feature all such trouble and sources of loss as forgotten charges, mixed accounts, bringing forward of "wrong past accounts," and even thefts, are avoided. No loose-slip system can give you this protection—ask us why.

It relieves your mind of looking after details and of the strain of trying to recall different articles that have left the store without being charged. In short, it does your bookkeeping almost automatically and gives you time to employ yourself in a more pleasant and profitable way than in the mere juggling of figures.

To the Manufacturer or Wholesaler——

If it were possible to employ a traveller who could call on 7,000 of the best dealers all through Canada every week, what salary would you figure he'd be worth—even supposing he did nothing more than go in and shake hands with these dealers, under such circumstances they'd be glad to see him.

Would he be worth $200, $300 or $500 per week? Many a house would pretty nearly let him fix his own salary.

Equip an advertisement in the Canadian Grocer with a verbal handshake for every dealer in Canada, and a frank, brief, pointed talk about your goods and you add a traveller to your staff who will make 7.000 calls a week for you at a salary of $4 to $8 a week—less than you would pay a first-class stenographer.

Of course this traveller won't displace any of your regular salesmen, but he will help them to sell more goods and open up more new accounts.

The Peddler Controls One-fifth of the Tea Trade

Our representative recently left a ⅛ lb. package of "SALADA" at every house in Fergus. Careful enquiry shows that the peddler sells 21.99% of all the tea used. The grocers of Fergus are losing the sale of 1,320 lbs. of tea each year, to say nothing of the business done in the surrounding country where the peddler ALONE supplies the farmer with tea.

This condition exists in a greater or less degree throughout Ontario. The trade have got to wake up to this evil and fight it hard. The peddler is an ever-present active persuader, and unless a strong united effort is made by the grocery trade, the trouble will steadily increase.

You can never win back the peddler's trade by Selling Bulk Tea. You can only do it by educating your customers to use a tea the peddler cannot buy. With your co-operation we can help you regain the trade you are losing. We have proved this time and again. Our share is to give high quality and value in "SALADA." Yours to keep a well assorted stock of "SALADA" on hand—to keep it well to the front and recommend it to your customers. It will mean increasing business for you and will turn many a dollar of profit into your pocket that the peddler now gets.

Failed in Spite of Years of Experience as a Clerk

The Biography of a Young Retail Grocer Who Was Forced Out of Business by Lack of Personality and of Knowledge of His Trade—An Actual Uncolored Instance—Effect of Development of Careless Methods Such as Wrong Change and Short Weight.

By A. H. Harvey.

"I do not like thee, Dr. Fell.
The reason why I cannot tell."

I recall an old quotation that runs somewhat after the above manner and which serves to explain the downfall of a young man who should never have entered the grocery business. The relation of these lines to the story about to follow may not seem particularly clear but they will be understood when you recall individuals whom you met and of whom you exclaim, "I never did like that fellow anyway. The first time I spoke to him I formed an unfavorable impression of him and it still clings to me."

This is an actual case, the young man in question living in a flourishing Canadian town where he entered the grocery arena as a clerk, later branching into business for himself and finally winding up his business but a few weeks ago after a rather inglorious career as a grocer.

He doubtless obtained the idea that he was destined to be a success from the fact that his apprenticeship was served with one of the leading grocers in the town. That was about twelve years ago, perhaps a little more or a little less.

The grocer, himself, was uniformly liked both by farmers and city people alike, among both of whom he had a large following. He was as the lumberman says, "As square as a die and as white as they make them." His disposition and his integrity and fairness, his thoughtfulness showing itself in little things were the very evident reasons for the splendid success he was accomplishing.

He took as a clerk, the young man referred to. The latter began by taking orders and in that capacity nothing much could be said against him.

Not an Outstanding Figure.

At the same time there did not seem to be anything that might be mentioned in his favor. He was decidedly neutral. You felt that if you were never to see him again you would not even miss him. Thus, he continued until he was elevated from the route work and became a regular clerk. Whatever might have been said against him he could not have been charged with laziness.

He worked well but there was still that repelling something which turned aside your confidence. I even heard rumors touching his honesty but as to that I have nothing to say. Customers gave their orders to him, because the proprietor could not serve everybody himself. They would have been willing to wait but it was business after all and they were content to put off the pleasure for another occasion, being content with a nod and a remark about the weather or about the health of some member of the customer's family. It is scarcely necessary to mention that they were receiving goods of best quality and a fine service.

In to Business For Himself.

The grocer who had risen from the ranks himself and could thank his efforts alone for the success he had won, burned the midnight oil when he should have been resting. Like other good grocers he had his worries, some of them being particularly annoying. He was stricken with pneumonia and died. The business passed into other hands and although the clerk remained in the old store for some time, not long after he went into business for himself in the suburbs of the city.

To all appearances he was doing fairly well, so it was said, but even the most charitable had their doubts. To begin with the locality itself had never possessed the reputation of being a good grocery centre, and nobody expected this young man to make things hum. Right at the start therefore he displayed lack of judgment in selecting a site. And no one was disappointed. Then he moved up town. He had a small trade, mostly transient, but it was hoped that he would succeed.

That young man had several good grocery ideas. On store arrangement, neatness, taste in window decorating and other general notions he was as well adapted to the business as anyone might expect, but—. Well, it is said by some that personality has nothing to do with success in the grocery business, but that is one of the great reasons to which I attribute his failure. True, he did not have the best location in the town, but his second store was nevertheless a good locality. I know other men in more obscure and inconvenient positions who are making good, but I do not intend to try to explain why they are succeeding in contrast to the other man. I was simply deeply convinced that personality goes a long way to establish a successful grocery business.

Did Not Study Trade Matters.

But apart from a lack of personality there were other inefficiencies in his general business make-up. He was not a close studier of the conditions under which he was working.

Some men think—or act as if they thought — their businesses only of secondary importance to the general happenings of the day as told in the daily or weekly newspaper and the contents of the latest novels and periodicals.

While business men should keep abreast of the current happenings in order to be able to talk intelligently with their fellow citizens whom they meet on the street yet their businesses demand their first attention and it is from the papers and books which are devoted solely to their trades that the necessary information is derived.

This young grocer was not a close studier of his trade paper. He was therefore not acquainted with the weaknesses of his fellow men which had caused their failures; he was not acquainted with market conditions and bought many goods at the wrong time; he did not profit from the practical methods other Canadian grocers found successful.

Then again, he had not the faculty of holding customers, due principally to carelessness. I know of one occasion when a customer received her change 10 cents short. She discovered it when she arrived home and that simple little error meant the loss of some $300 in business every year. It is quite probable that similar instances occurred in short weight causing losses of two or three other customers who were buying at the rate of $300 a year.

Another weakness was that intimate friends and relations were given preferences over others. This worked towards his downfall because the latter class lost confidence in him.

Lost Custom Through Errors.

Neither was he prompt in meeting his payments. So much was this the case that mercantile agencies refused to rate him. This begot other careless habits, such as promising goods which were scarcely ever secured on time; making errors in delivering and in sending out accounts.

He had practically only two business assets—he was not afraid of work and he was neat. But this was so much overbalanced by his other deficiencies that the tide of failure could not be stemmed.

His business life was about four years.

This is an actual case; there is no guessing about it, and now the ex-clerk and the more recent ex-grocer is looking for a position again behind the counter in the same capacity as five years ago.

Newspaper Space Must Be Used Judiciously

Winnipeg Retailer Gives His Ideas on Profitable Advertising —One of the Weapons to Meet Competition of Catalogue Houses—Medium to Attract Attention of Farmers — Holding Confidence of the People.

By A. E. White, Sec.-Treas. The W. H. Stone Co.

Next in importance to the silently eloquent advertising of which a clean, well kept stock, adequate, systematic store service, and well satisfied customers are productive, comes the newspaper as a valuable advertising medium.

Not only does the merchant in the large trade centre, find printer's ink a valuable auxiliary, but his brother tradesman in the small town or village may also derive many benefits from space used judiciously in his local daily or weekly paper.

While, for a number of reasons, the average retail grocer in a city or town is not in a position to carry out an elaborate advertising programme such as the large departmental store evidently finds so successful, yet experience shows that even a limited space, attractively set up, holding a good position in the best dailies, and containing good, live logical advertising matter is a sure trade getter. Take for example, an attractive list of seasonable goods, priced as reasonably as is consistent with a fair profit, and headed off with a few well chosen, pithy remarks as to the quality of the goods, and the desirability of purchasing them at the particular time they are being offered. Have this copy inserted in the two Friday issues of one or more of the best city dailies, and the effect upon the Saturday cash sales is frequently surprising, and the direct returns often far outweigh the expense, apart from the indirect benefit derived from bringing one's firm name and business before the public.

Then, too, it frequently happens that at certain times of the year the city grocer finds it difficult to obtain a sufficient quantity of some lines of farm produce with which to supply his trade. By a short, clearly worded ad. in one or two of the best read weeklies, he soon gets in touch with the farmer or country merchant, who very possibly is seeking a market for the articles required.

Weapon Against Catalogue House.

Stating briefly the position of the country merchant, his local paper used regularly, at comparatively small expense should be one of his strongest weapons in checking the inroads of the large city mail order houses. Rates being so much lower in the small centres, he can use space more freely, enlarging on the quality of his stock, his ability to meet outside competition, and the advantages derived by the community in patronizing the home merchant, thus fighting his competitors, the catalogue houses, with their own weapons.

At times also, he could use the city mediums to advantage in finding a market for surplus produce.

In order that both city and country merchants obtain the best results from their newspaper advertising, it is necessary to gain and then hold the confidence of the ad. reading public, and this can only be done by representing the goods to be exactly as the customer will find them when she comes to the store to purchase.

Things That Shouldn't Be

Bright, Up-to-date Grocers Employ Only Delivers Who are Reliable; Otherwise they Would Lose Custom.

Actual Instances Where Price Tickets Made Sales

An Observant Grocery Clerk Refers to Their Value and How They Can be Made Effective Silent Salesmen—Gives His Own Experience When He Went to Purchase a Pair of Boots—Valuable When Special Prices are Offered.

By a Clerk.

Have you ever seen price cards that you still remember? I recollect passing a cigar store a few weeks ago and instead of the window being packed with pipes, pouches, cigarettes, etc., there was simply one brand of cigars displayed and only a moderate quantity of them. A price card bore the words, "To-day's Special—Four for a Quarter." That was all, but it was a striking and yet an extremely simple display.

You can recall other articles which by the same method were indelibly impressed upon your memory. Grocers should aim at the same idea to get the best results. The little ticket bearing the price of an article plays an important part in every store. It is actually a silent salesman. Place a case of strawberries in a conspicuous place and they will undoubtedly attract attention. But place a price card on them—"13 cents, two for 25c"—and at once the customer knows all the facts about them, and without a clerk's assistance will, if she wants them, buy a box or two as the case may be. Articles in show cases might be treated in the same way. The price and show cards are lubricators to business. They make things run more easily.

People are queer beings anyway, and some women particularly. One may be passing out of a store glancing carelessly on this side and that, as 99 out of every 100 of them do, and if a clerk called her atention to a crock of sweet pickles she would generally reply that she did not need any. But if she came along to them and found the price marked on them—18c a quart—it is even money that she would stop to investigate. It is a sure thing that she would help herself to a tiny cucumber if there were no glass top to the vessel, and it would be almost an unusual happening if she did not call a clerk and buy a pint or quart.

I have seen them do it often and have come to the conclusion that it was due to some form of suggestion that is common to men and women alike. Whatever be the explanation, there is no doubt that the little price card talks more loudly than the proprietor of the store suspects.

Don't Overdo It.

There is a strong possibility of getting too many cards. Good taste should be exercised in deciding their size, and a neat style of lettering should be used. It will be noticed that the big department stores use price cards almost wherever possible.

It will also be noticed that there is no conglomerating effect due to a multiplicity of tickets in such stores. The articles must predominate. Customers must be attracted by the goods. Let the price card supply the information. Therefore, in general cases the price ticket should be of secondary importance.

When the grocer desires to sell attention to the price, however, he makes the figures stand out like the dates on circus posters. I know a grocer who about every month helps along some article that may not be selling fast. To begin with, he prepares a large signboard, which he puts outside the door. No matter what the article may be, the price figures are large enough to be read a block away. The passerby, however, in the first glance learns the article that is being boosted. Here and there inside the store are a few signs—it is a fairly large store—of this nature, "Ask about to-day's bargain in sugar," or whatever the article may be. In another place is a sign, "21 lbs. granulated sugar, $1." He leaves nothing unturned to impress customers with the idea that there is a sugar bargain sale offered that day and the method has always proved successful.

This is, however, a special case. It is arranged for a particular occasion. The busy store has its price cards all the year round and the arranging of them depends upon the grocer himself or a competent clerk.

Something Was Lacking.

A boot and shoe store that I have seen never puts a price in its window. There is always a display of quality goods, but not one price card.

While I have often been tempted to try their goods that window seemed to have a chilly effect. It was, at least, not inviting. Just exactly what the explanation was I cannot tell, but while I admired the goods I was not drawn in. Another store has only its prices marked, but one price prevails and it is stamped on the bottom of every boot. They have a wide reputation and can probably afford to maintain the one price. At any rate, I liked the idea and this latter store received my trade.

PICNIC MAY GO TO GRIMSBY.

Hamilton, Ont., June 2.—A large representation of the Retail Grocers' Association visited Grimsby Park, Ont., recently with a view to considering its qualities as the scene of the annual picnic held under the auspices of the grocers of the Ambitious City. The delegation numbering over fifty were met by a band and civic representatives, including Mayor Mitchell, who, with the park officials and others, expressed the hope that the deputation would be favorably impressed by the natural beauty of the park. Jno. O. Carpenter acted as chairman at the meeting, at which the grocers talked over the question. Addresses were given by the chairman, Ex-Ald. Jno. Forth, Adam Ballantine, and the original "Bay" Hill, whose platform eloquence has never been questioned and who received a wider fame on this occasion. After the speechmaking a baseball outfit captained by Charles Peebles, beat out Adam Ballantine's big leaguers to the tune of 9-8. The party returned to Grimsby village, where they were entertained at luncheon. The next item on the itinerary was a visit to the residence of E. D. Smith at Winona. The visitors demanded a speech from Mr. Smith, who responded, receiving three hearty cheers.

The outside appearance of your store counts a great deal either for or against you. It is up to you which way it scores.

During the past week The MacLean Publishing Co. has removed the main offices from 10 Front St. East, Toronto, to its new building at 111-127 University Avenue. The operation of transferring The Canadian Grocer and eleven other publications from one building to another, along with the plant necessary to set up, print, bind and mail them was an undertaking of considerable size. Unfortunately The Grocer's Spring Number was scheduled to come out just at a time when everything was upset In consequence it was somewhat late. Those of our readers and advertisers who understood the circumstances have been very patient. We trust this explanation will set us right with the others We did not prepare them for the delay because we were sanguine enough to believe that it would be possible, by extra effort, to get the Special out on time. And we might have succeeded but for two holidays occurring the week previous to issue. We are now fairly well settled in our new premises and hope that, after this week, there will be no further delays.

We cordially invite our friend in the trade to call and see us at our new address.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

Halifax Advocate of Selling Eggs by Weight—Merchant Says He Loses No Business By Closing Early—How One Grocer Brightens Up Monday's Trade—Method for Attracting Farmers to The Store — How Show Cards Sold Dried Fruits.

Selling Eggs by Weight.

Halifax, N.S., June 1.—One of the local merchants is an ardent suporter of the "sell eggs by weight" idea, claiming that the general custom of selling them by the dozen is unfair to customers who get the small sized eggs.

He things that this should be the same as in England where Canadian eggs have to weigh 15 lbs. to every 10 doz.—½ lbs. to the dozen. The general run of eggs in Canada would not weigh more than 15 lbs. to 160 eggs or 13 1-3 dozen.

Consumers complain when eggs are too small, but if they were buying a standard dozen according to weight this would be eliminated.

No Business Lost.

Toronto, June 2.—Most grocers of today are objecting strongly to their long hours. It is usually their own faults. There is no reason why they should not have regular hours, the same as other merchants. The dry goods merchant has educated his customers to shop in reasonable hours, so why not the grocer do the same? In fact, it will be only a matter of time before the grocers and all other merchants will have their regular hours, and it might just as well be now as in years to come.

While discussing this question with a number of grocers recently, all were found to be in favor of closing early every evening except Saturday, but few care to take the first step, and none are already doing it. Canfield Bros., 395 Brock Avenue, now close every evening at 7.00, except Saturday, and also Wednesday afternoon, and they say it has not hurt their business in the least. Mr. Canfield cannot see any reason why all the grocers do not close early each evening and the Wednesday afternoon holiday continued the year round.

The grocers need not be afraid of losing their trade, he says. It is just a matter of educating the customer to trade in reasonable hours. Customers are human and don't thank you for keeping open half the night. If all were to join hands and say, "We're going to have shorter hours," such would be the case.

Tourist Trade Around Kingston.

Kingston, Ont., June 2.—The tourist season begins around here about the middle of May, and is at its height in July and August. The finest goods produced are on the shelves of the local grocers to suit the demand.

"The wholesale houses here, with few exceptions," says one retailer, "are strictly wholesale, but there are a few black sheep who are always poking their heads through the fence and nibbling at the poor retailer's fodder. Poor deluded creatures, they are only giving themselves commercial indigestion by such petty manoeuvres with the supply hotels, boats and boarding houses. They are not supported by the better class of retail stores.

"The mail order houses do get a little trade, but the retailers are meeting them in quality and price, and the trade is falling off to a large extent."

Kingston is specially built by nature as a place where tourists find genuine hospitality, rest and pleasure, but her merchants do not make the effort they should to get the tourist trade.

To Catch Eye of the Farmer.

Peterboro, Ont., June 2.—Graham & Co., grocers, have placed business cards on the steamers plying between this city and Rice Lake, with a view to catering to the farmers' trade. The cards announce that fresh butter and newly-laid eggs will be taken in exchange for provisions, etc., and it also calls attention to the choice line of goods that the store carries. The cards are conspicuously posted in the cabins and are noticed not only by the farmers but by everyone who travels on the boats, and the store's name is thus kept before the public.

This store also showed its aggressiveness recently by appropriately decorating one of its windows upon the occasion of the death of King Edward and also on Victoria Day.

A Believer in Specials.

Winnepeg, Man., June 2.—A firm believer in specials as an aid or a stepping stone to more business is a local grocer, whose experience has proved to him the efficacy of this plan. Specials, he says, are leaders.

"As one word leads to another before the fight, so one article leads to one or twenty on your sale slip. It is not a difficult matter to pick out your special. It should be popular—something which is in every day use. Let the public know that you are going to run this special and your plans should materialize as expected.

"When you secure the new purchasers the rest remains with you," said the grocer with a sort of a nod which was more impressive than a volume.

"The customers should not even get the suspicion that they have landed into the net like a salmon. The amount of business the special brings depends upon the ability of the proprietor and clerks to display and to sell."

Brightens up Blue Monday.

Toronto, June 2.—In order to increase his business as much as possible, D. McLean, grocer, corner of McCaul and Baldwin Streets, goes out of his own district for orders.

Every Monday afternoon he takes a trip out to the Parkdale section—a couple of miles distant or more—where he has worked up a good trade. He always makes a personal call and secures orders in the single afternoon up to $50 and more. He also has a connection with residents in still another section of the city, where he formerly ran a grocery store. These he attends to by telephone.

Show Cards Sold Dried Fruits.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 1.—A Philadelphia retailer, J. S. Pomeroy, struck a novel idea recently in boosting his dried fruit sales. He offered the public the following advice on a show card in the store window—"For a Spring Tonic, Try Dried Fruit." He states the merits of certain fruits in the following manner:—

Unpared Peaches—Of greater spring value than the pared, because of certain tonic properites in the skin. 13c lb.; 2 lbs. 25c.

Pared peaches, for those whose palates rebel at peach skins. 25c lb.

Apricots are said to be the most refreshing of the acid fruits. We offer a superior grow. Apricots at 16c and 20c a lb.

It is educational work of this kind that has made Philadelphia the best eastern U. S. market for dried fruits.

Criticizes Wholesalers' Methods.

Bracebridge, Ont., June 2.—The advent of warm weather is making our grocers warm up to the fact that the tourist season will soon be upon them once more and that they must not be caught napping.

"One thing that should be done," said one merchant, "and done at once, is the forming of a union to try to put down the evil which is becoming alarmingly great—the raiding of our hunting and fishing grounds by so-called wholesalers. It cannot be entirely stopped but unity among us could handle traffic in such a manner that would benefit us considerably. This revenue more or less cut off hurts our merchants and our town."

Odds and Ends for Busy Men

Think out some new way of getting your goods before the public. That is one of the elementary principles of merchandizing. Once you have got an ideas other will follow.

The members of the Montreal Retail Grocers' Association are preparing for a trip through the Maritime Provinces this year. They have an annual outing, and as variation this route has been suggested. About 100 of Montreal's business men are expected to compose the party.

Get away from the idea that nuts are to be bought only for the Christmas or winter season and then stored away in a remote room upstairs. They are good for every day in the year. People have been allowed to get the idea that nuts were only to be used at one particular season and it is the duty of the grocers to educate them away from that idea.

An authority on the situation states that the crop of pecans in Texas is the poorest in many years.

An advice from Washington states that the issue of trading stamps by merchants was declared unlawful by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in a dividend decision rendered last week. It is understood that the trading stamp companies will appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Don't stop with only a window display. Having carefully and regularly attended to that, carry out the same policy in the interior. It will not only give the interior a pleasing and businesslike appearance, but it will sell the goods.

The potato was first heard of in Spain about the year 1550, being introduced from Peru. It found favor in Italy, Belgium and other countries before being introduced into Ireland. It was not until the middle of the 17th century that it became a popular dietary article in Europe and North America.

The Buffalo Cold Storage Co. was fined $200 for selling two carloads of eggs which were unfit for use.

"Present-day prices are high in some cases because the consumer can afford to pay them," says one price investigator.

Ten manufacturers and shippers were recently fined for adulterating and misbranding food products. The articles included maple syrup, vinegar, lemon flavor, honey, molasses, coffee, etc. All the cases occurred in the United States.

Some grocers work eight hours a day, others ten, while some stay with the ship for twelve, and a few have been known to work eighteen. Why is it?

The Fishing Co. of British Columbia, a new English syndicate, has commenced operation with a paid-up capital of $1,500,000.

British Columbia packers have made arrangements for a catch of between 500,000 and 600,000 cases of salmon this year. Fifty-six canneries will be in operation, 22 of which are along the Fraser river.

Frank E. Gorrell, secretary of the National Canners' Association of the U. S., points out the necessity of educating consumers to the fact that canned goods are clean and healthy. He was impressed by a letter he received from a member of the association, who had talked over the question with a grocery clerk: "The writer passing through Gimbel Brothers' grocery department this week noticed that they had several counters filled with different kinds of canned goods, such as corn, peas and tomatoes, offering them at very reasonable prices, from 5 to 6 cents per can. He happened to meet their canned goods stock clerk, and inquired if the low prices were moving the goods very fast. He said they were to some extent, but not as much as they should. I inquired the reason. He answered, you would be surprised at the number of people who condemn canned goods, saying they are not clean, and are packed with preservatives. Others say tomatoes cause cancer, so from the above you can see the necessity of disabusing their minds on these different objections."

The proprietors of one of Philadelphia's largest grocery stores announced in an advertisement over their own signature that they recently sold four tons of raisins in three days. This, it is said, has been due to the recent publicity campaign extending over two weeks. The demand for raisins had dropped to a low ebb, as is usually the case at this time of the year. It was suggested that some effort should be made to stimulate the trade, and as an opener, Raisin Day was celebrated. Newspapers, stores, hotels, and in many other ways, attention was called to California's product. Recipes for various methods of using raisins were published and the result of this generous and general campaign is exemplified by the recent statements which Philadelphia grocers have made. At any rate, the demand for raisins in that city is abnormal and it is believed that even after the campaign has ended the people will eat this fruit as they never did before.

Grocers of Fairfield, Iowa, are selling bananas by the pound. No longer are the largest cut from the bunch for the favored and the culls sold at shorter prices. They are retailed at seven cents a pound.

A great increase has been noticed in the consumption of peanuts in Germany. This is due to the fact that they are being substituted by bakers for almonds and walnuts in the making of cakes, etc.

Don't be a haphazard grocer. No one should have to be told that carelessness is not a part of the foundation of a successful business.

Price Protection Up at Retailers' Convention

California Case Cited in Which Manufacturers' Limited Price System was Upheld by Supreme Court Judge—Placed His Terms on the Outside of His Olive Oil Boxes—A Big Question in the United States.

The maintenance of the retail selling price and the relation therein of the retailer to the manufacturer was one of the leading questions at the recent National Association of Retail Grocers at Springfield, Ill.

An example was dealt with in the decision of the Supreme Court of California in the recent case of Grogan vs. Chaffee, a price-cutting retail grocer, of Pasedena, Cal. Grogan is the manufacturer of Purity olive oil in Los Angeles, and placed on the outside of the case wherein the goods were sold to the effect that:

"The goods contained in this case are sold on the condition which is made a part of the consideration of the sale, that the purchaser, if he retails them, will maintain our fixed minimum retail selling price on these goods, and if he wholesales them, he will sell them subject to the same conditions. The acceptance of these goods is sufficient acknowledgement that the purchaser (wholesale or retail) understands and agrees to comply with this condition, etc., etc."

Chaffee sold below the contract price and was cut off by the manufacturer, but he still continued to procure them through a wholesale grocery house. Two lower courts refused to uphold the contention of the plaintiff Grogan, and the matter was brought to the Supreme Court.

Was Within His Rights.

Justice Sloss wrote a lengthy decision covering all the points at the issue of the case, a few of which were:

"We have here no question of an attempted monopoly. A monopoly exists where all, or so nearly all, of an article of the trade of commerce within the hands of one man or set of men as to practically bring the handling or production of the commodity or thing within such control to the exclusion of competition of free traffic therein."

"The contract here relied on does not relate to any olive oil except that manufactured by plaintiff. There is no suggestion that this comprises all, or any large proportion of the olive oil manufactured or sold in the market, supplied by plaintiff."

"The producer was, in the first instance, under no obligation to sell his oil, and when he did sell it, had the right to exact, as a part of the consideration for the sale, a promise by the purchaser that he would not sell it at less than a stipulated price. There is nothing either unreasonable or unlawful in the effort by a manufacturer to maintain a standard price for his goods. It is simply a means of securing the legitimate benefits of the reputation which his products may have attained."

"The tendency of the modern decisions has been to view with greater liberality contracts claimed to be in restraint of trade."

"As the owner of property has the right to withhold it from sale, he can also, at the time of its sale, impose conditions upon its use without violating any rule of public policy."

"A sale or delivery by A to B on the condition that B shall not sell below a certain price is not a combination of "capital," skill or acts between A and B. A has sole control of the subject of the agreement and may, as has been pointed out, sell or refuse to sell."

This has apparently settled, say the retailers, the legality of "Protected Prices" as far as California is concerned.

The retailers claim that this establishes beyond doubt the legal right of any manufacturer to protect the retail selling price on his products in California by placing the sticker on the case, as a proper legal notice.

In other lines besides the retail grocery line, retailers found that the protected price plan was growing in favor and observed the success of the Gillette safety razor, which is sold under an absolute contract that it must be retailed at the given price. The Eastman kodak films, Waterman's fountain pens and other firms are successful in maintaining the retail selling price on their goods.

OLD RATE ON OYSTERS.

Railway Commissioners Order Express Companies to Cut off the 20 Cents Again.

Toronto, June 3.—A few months ago the express companies increased the rate on oysters from Providence to Toronto from $1.50 to $1.70. This matter was placed before the Board of Railway Commissioners and on Wednesday they decided that the old rate must be restored.

In arguing against the reduction the Canadian Express Company claimed that it would result in making the rate from Buffalo to Toronto 50 cents instead of 70 cents, as at present, as the Adams Express Company would still receive $1 for carrying oysters from Providence to Buffalo. The Canadian Express Company would receive only ten cents out of the $1.50.

The Dominion Express Company had been willing to continue at the $1.50 rate, but the Canadian Express Company, it was stated, had insisted on increasing it to $1.70. The latter did not handle oysters, but controlled the Buffalo-Toronto express rate, as it was the only express company with the mileage.

Chief Commissioner Mabee stated that it was understood that there should be no increase in any rate while the new classification was being made. The old tariff should stand in the meantime.

The board yesterday decided to reduce the time for which express companies are liable for the safety of money parcels after notice of the arrival of the money has been mailed to the persons to whom it is shipped. Heretofore the time has been forty-eight hours, but the board ordered that twenty-four hours shall be the limit in future.

SYRUP AMALGAMATION.

Ramsays Limited, is the name of the new firm which is taking over as going concerns the two Montreal houses, the Imperial Syrup Company, and Sugars & Canners. Incorporation has been secured, with authorized capitalization of $500,000. Incorporators are: G. H. Ramsay, C. A. McMillan, E. L. Jackson, F. J. Koch and W. L. Chipchase. The factory of the Imperial Syrup Company will be sold, that the operations of the company may be carried on in the larger premises of Sugars & Canners, which factory will be further enlarged. Those who have been actively identified with the management of the two companies amalgamating will be connected with the new firm.

WANT HIGHER FEE CHARGED.

Complaints have been heard from several Guelph, Ont., grocers about the Yoshida Art Company of Toronto, who opened a temporary store on Wyndham street and have conducted for the past few weeks auction sales every afternoon and evening, flooding the city with chinaware, most of which is claimed to be of the cheaper imitation variety. The city charged the Japanese who conducted the sale a high license fee, but it is felt by some that this is not enough, as the regular merchants of the city, who pay their taxes year in and year out, should not be subjected to the trespasses of transient traders of this sort.

PINEAPPLE SEASON ON.

Retail grocers stand to make some money just now in pineapples. The pines are rather cheap, in fact cheaper than many expected they would be.

This is the pineapple season and great deal of preserving is done at this time. Grocers, therefore, have everything in their favor and should get busy to meet the demand while it lasts.

Judicious use of advertising space and of the display window will accelerate this demand, particularly if prices are named in both cases. Many grocers advertise whole cases at attractive prices and sell considerable quantities of the pines as a result.

HOME-GROWN STRAWBERRIES.

From reports received from the Niagara fruit district, home grown strawberries will be coming on the market in about two weeks time or probably less than that.

The blossoms are healthy and green berries have begun to form in abundance. The probability of a good crop is excellent on account of the many spring rains and the almost entire absense of frost during the growing season.

On account of the cool weather, however, the season will be almost as late as last year in spite of the genial March climate and the early passing of the snow.

TRADE WITH OUR NEW SISTER.

Now that the British colonies in South Africa have formed a confederation similar to that consummated by the British Colonies in North America forty-three years ago, it is not too much to hope that between these two "Dominions beyond the Seas," a trade and commerce of important and lasting proportions may develop.

There is no sound reason why such should not be. They are buyers of that which we are sellers of and vice versa. Lack of enterprise is the only thing that can prevent it.

The nucleus of a great trade has already been laid and particularly that appertaining to our exports to South Africa, we selling last year $1,679,733 worth of merchandise and in return buying from them $901,190 worth.

Our chief article of export to South Africa is wheat flour, of which we send approximately a million dollars' worth. Agricultural implements, iron, steel and metals came in for $135,786; paper $125,646; wood and manufactures of, $115,566; automobiles and other vehicles, $52,056; fruits, $22,689; cotton and manufactures of, $9,809; leather and manufactures of, $4,967; condensed milk $12,715; provisions, $34,924.

Sugar makes up the largest part of our imports from South Africa, the quantity received last year being 33,817,292 lbs., valued at $859,230, which, by the way was the first sugar we imported from that part of the British Empire since 1906. Without sugar our imports are small indeed. In 1907 and 1908, during which we imported no sugar from South Africa, the total amount of our imports was $28,222 and $32,193 respectively.

Next to sugar our chief article of import from South Africa is wool, of which we bring in a little over $20,000 worth. Hides and skins and breadstuffs come next at $8,680 and $7,109 respectively.

Three years ago Canada subsidized to the amount of $146,000 annually a line of steamers between Canada and South Africa. The service is monthly and sails from St. John and Halifax in the winter and from Montreal in the summer. So far the subsidy cannot be said to have any appreciable effect on the total volume of trade between the two countries.

But subsidies alone will not develop trade. They only provide the transportation. The development of trade depends upon the ability and enterprise of the business men engaged in it. There are indications that these factors are at work.

ALBERTA'S CROPS PROMISING

The Alberta Department of Agriculture has issued a crop bulletin which reports the Province's crops in a satisfactory condition. The total acreage under crop is placed at 1,582,973 acres, an increase of 27 per cent. over 1909.

The dry weather and bad winter hit the winter wheat somewhat, and the department estimates that 30 per cent. of the area sown is a loss. Most of this has been resown to other crops.

The spring wheat area is 488,183 acres, an increase of 51 per cent. The oats acreage is 762,460, an increase of ten per cent. Barley shows an increase of 36 per cent., with an area of 147,150.

TO CO-OPERATE IN EGGS.

Scientific handling of the egg business is the campaign now being followed up by many of the prominent dealers among the farmers. The promoters of the campaign propose to have the country divided into sections. In each section there will be a central board where eggs will be registered and offered according to grade.

It is hoped that this method will do away with one of the main defects in the present day method—the selling of mixed lots as selects or No. 1's. At present it means a careful examination by the wholesaler if he is to furnish a strict grade of eggs. The project has so far met with a good reception by all concerned, and it seems a certainty that it will be given a thorough trial.

TO PREVENT FIRE LOSS.

An eastern manufacturing house takes a wise precaution to ensure immunity from fire loss, which carelessness may cause.

Prominently hung about the office and factory are placards bearing the words. "No Smoking after One O'clock." The manager experimented with a view to learning how long after being thrown in different dangerous places a cigar or cigarette stub caused a flame.

It was demonstrated that not more than five hours elapsed in most cases ere a healthy young flame developed. By forbidding smoking after one o'clock a policy of reasonable tolerance, yet absolute safety, in this matter was inaugurated.

THE RIGHT WAY ABOUT IT.

The best way to meet outside competition is to give quality, service, and price equal to, if not better than the catalogue house.

This is what the retail grocers of Kingston, Ont., are doing, as will be seen from a despatch in this issue from that city.

One retailer there says that the trade with outside houses is dwindling on this account. If grocers watch the mail order houses and give the same or better service, quality and price, they are bound to get the business—providing of course, they make these facts known through adequate advertising.

MAIL ORDER HOUSE ADS. ON SCHOOL BOOKS

When about a year ago, the government gave the T. Eaton Co. the contract to print the public school readers, general indignation was expressed in trade circles throughout the province. The government might have been excused at the time on the plea that they were ignorant of the harm they were doing. After flaunting T. Eaton's name on the cover of every public school reader for the last year and the mailing of advertising matter with every package of books, the government can certainly not plead ignorance as an excuse for the present action.

The retailer, both in town and country has trouble enough, as it is, to keep up the fight against the departmental stores without having his government assist them by introducing their advertising into every home where their are school children. The Whitney administration has now made this fight more difficult than ever by extending the privilege of school book advertising to the Robt. Simpson Co., who have the contract for printing the new arithmetic.

The T. Eaton Co. and the Robert Simpson Co. cannot afford to produce these books at the low price they do, and on every book they send out there is a loss. This loss is charged by them against their advertising account and the publicity they get from the school books is compensation for their loss. In order that this publicity may profit them their sales must be increased and when the sales of the departmental store is increased the retail merchant suffers.

It is because of this increased business gained by the advertising on the books that Eatons and Simpsons can afford to print them so cheaply. The retail merchant is the man from whose pocket the department store takes its increased profits, therefore, the retail merchant is the man who is really paying for Ontario's cheap school books.

The Robert Simpson Co. have no printing plant of their own, and this fact makes it all the more apparent that their bid for the arithmetic was only an attempt, unfortunately successful, to get their firm name imprinted on one at least of the public school text books.

The Holland Linen Paper Co., which have the contract for the grammars, are in reality the W. J. Gage Co. The object of this firm in taking the contract at such a ridiculously low price was to endeavor to keep the school book trade in regular trade channels, both wholesale and retail, instead of having them distributed by the department stores.

In order that they may in some measure be recompensed for the loss incurred by taking this contract, Gages are going to publish the grammar under the name of The Holland Linen Paper Co. and in this manner introduce into the homes of Ontario their special brand note paper, "Holland Linen." The advertising of this product will partly meet the loss on the contract.

Evidently this course of the W. J. Gage Co. was suggested to them by the T. Eaton Co., when the latter signed a contract which in itself meant financial loss, and the Gage company are to be congratulated on such a clever move.

How far is this scheme going to go? After awhile we will again likely hear of some pill or patent medicine maker contracting for the printing of a Bible or a hymn-book in order to make advertising capital from it. Everybody will no doubt remember hearing of the Christmas morning church congregation which sang from the hymn book:

Hark the Herald Angels sing
Beecham's pills are just the thing;
Peace on earth and mercy mild
Two for man and one for child.

This gives one an idea how far such a thing can be carried and on the face of it appears ridiculous.

"THE TWO MERCHANTS."

"Uncle" Walt Mason presents some good sense in his quaint philosophy in one of his recent poems on "The Two Merchants." This is how it reads:

One merchant said to his toiling clerk: "I'm greatly pleased with the way you work. The chap who tends to his duties right is bound to win the worldly fight, and you're bound to get to the top some day; meanwhile I guess I'll advance your pay." O glad was the heart of the heart of the clerklet then, and he buckled down to his work again, and he made things hum in the blamed old store, as things had never been hummed before. In t'other storeroom, across the street, the clerks were working with frozen feet; the merchant carried a scowl all day, and groaned as he gave them their meagre pay; he never praised them when hard they wrought, but kicked and scolded and made them hot; and so they soldiered and fooled away the passing hours of each golden day. There's something wrong if you lay the blame on the men who help you to play the game, when things go crooked and trade is bum; your men would help you to make things hum, if they'd been treated in proper shape—been given posies instead of crape.

Uncle Walt has hit the nail on the head. The merchant who is appreciative of his clerk's work generally gets the best results from him. No employer who is continually complaining and grumbling, works in the most congenial atmosphere and if the conditions do not tend to aggressiveness the clerks will not be aggressive.

The above poem bears a good deal of real good common sense.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

Low rents in the country, and excellent transportation facilities, encourage a growing number of families to summer away from the cities.

Many spend two or three months in regions remote from good grocery stores. Yet their requirements must be filled, and the housewife frequently meets with difficulty in securing the necessities of life.

Progressive city grocers hold the trade of such families by a little extra work which is much appreciated by those who cause it. It may cost a little more to do business in "long-distance" fashion, but, then, better prices are obtainable. When a family finds it impossible to continue relations with their regular purveyor, the nearest local man is sought. If he is attentive, and wide-awake, he can do a nice business, selling numerous higher-priced lines not salable at other seasons.

A word at this time is opportune, and sufficient for the wise.

GET RID OF CANNED GOODS.

Grocers are once again urged to get rid of their canned fruits and bottled preserves before the fresh strawberries, Canadian grown, get a foothold on the market.

Now is the time to sell these goods in order to clear out old stocks before the new arrive. Some may argue that canned goods are good holdings. This, no doubt, is true, but nevertheless the future is uncertain. Sell canned and preserved fruits now and turnover the stock. This can be accomplished through judicious newspaper advertising and window displays.

If retailers would constantly remember that there is no law compelling the sale of goods at cost, and that goods are almost always better than their listed equivalent in money, there would be fewer failures.

A good many merchants who might use their time to better advantage are sitting around croaking about what mail order competition, high cost of living and parcels post are likely to do to them.

If your store sign stands flat against the front of the store it will scarcely be visible to a person coming from either direction. Have a sign that sticks out.

Suggestion of Fresh Goods Sells Canned Variety

Halifax Retailer Uses His Salesmanship in Season of Expensive Fresh Vegetables and Fruits to Sell the Canned — The Former Suggest the Desire and the Latter Fills it on Account of Comparative Cheapness—How Advantage is Taken of This to Increase Sales.

Halifax, N.S., June 9.—Can you sell canned goods during the season of the fresh stocks of fruits and vegetables? In other words, when peas, corn, tomatoes, strawberries, etc., are coming in what is the condition of your trade in canned goods?

This idea was suggested by a Halifax retailer, who asserts that he does a most satisfactory business when the new fruits and vegetables are coming into their own best season. There is a period just before Canadian crops are put on the market during which imported stocks are offered to the public, and at rather high price, owing to the distance they are brought, and the cost entailed thereby. This is the season when this particular retailer puts new life into his canned goods sales.

Another Instance of Suggestion.

"I have a few customers," he said, "who can afford to pay for the fresh vegetables, even at the high prices charged for the imported goods. But the great majority of my customers can only feel their mouths water as far as enjoying them goes. Of course, they really could buy them, but they state their means do not warrant the expenditure. They really call it an extravagance. However, that did not prevent them asking the price of these new goods and as they started to turn away, I would suggest the canned article.

"It surprised me, the way this little system worked. Now tomatoes were in the same boat. I knew the financial condition of the most of my customers, and when some of them asked about tomatoes and peas, string beans, etc., I knew that it would not be wise on their part to buy these delicacies until the home article, at least, was received. So, I mentioned the canned goods and this method has put a big hole in my stock.

Sells Canned Fruits Also.

"I consider that selling canned goods during this season calls out only common sense and the use of a little salesmanship. I do not confine the sales to vegetables. The fruits may be even better sellers. Home stocks are well exhausted about the time the blue birds return. Strawberries are coming from the south to tempt the pockets of everybody, and you catch the people without the goods at home. They're between the devil and the deep sea, an empty larder at home, and high prices on the new goods. So that's where you throw out your lines baited with canned and bottled fruit, and—well that's all. I do not know how my brother grocers have found this to work, but it certainly gave me unexpected satisfaction.

Fresh Stock Carried.

"Of course, there is a reason when the home goods come in. It lasts about four weeks, when the new peas, corn, etc., are in general demand. They are plentiful as a rule, and are cheap. Besides they are fresh, and you have to handle them. But otherwise the season helps canned goods. At least that is my experience, and I believe that others can do the same.

"Sometimes I asked customers, whom I knew would not buy the fresh peas, if they cared for a quart or two. They would ask how I was selling them, and when I told them the price they would invariably reply, 'Oh! That's too dear for me. I will have to wait until our own farmers have their stocks ready.'

"Just about that time I would suggest the canned variety, and while, of course, I did not make a sale every time, still the results were so gratifying that there was not the least touch of discouragement. I played tomatoes in the same way, pointing out some of the imported stock, talking up tomatoes all the time, of course, and at the last moment springing the canned variety. Strawberries, corn, and in fact nealy every line of canned goods I had on my shelves suffered more or less of a depletion by this method. I do not think it requires a genius to carry out this plan, but you do want to create the impression or suggest the idea that you are taking this method to sell the canned goods. Oh! No. You want to sell the imported stock and as your customers seem disappointed you remind them of the canned goods.

A Profitable Scheme.

"After all it is no big idea. I dare say every grocer is following the same plan. It is not an underhand method, it is business pure and simple, and if worked properly will bring about good results in actual money."

SUGGESTS SCHEME FOR COLLECTING SMALL DEBTS.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—I have repeatedly seen articles in your valuable trade paper deploring the inadequate protection the average trader enjoys in regard to small debts up to $5, and the almost impossibility of recovering such small debts. Now, sirs, I am a collector and it has often surprised me that retailers, who are backed by their association and who ought to be able to get almost any measure through the House of Parliament, seem to be content to bewail the injustice they are suffering, but are never looking for a remedy.

Now, supposing a court were to be installed in every city, town, and village, called the Adjusters' Court, the adjuster to be a J. P. and a lawyer. I would have the procedure as follows :

On receipt of a duly attested complaint a citation should be served on debtor to appear before the adjuster, non-compliance to be punished with a fine or preferably with a sentence for contempt of court.

The service of the citation to be undertaken by constable of ordinary police force.

All costs to be advanced by creditor and paid back by debtor on finding of adjuster in the former's favor.

If debtor fails to comply with finding of the Adjuster, the usual committment for contempt to follow, unless good and satisfactory reason is shown by debtor, when readjustment may follow.

Where an employer dismisses an employe for being called before the court, I would make employer liable for the payment of the debt, holding that such an action is defeating the object of the court.

The costs of the actions should range from 10c to $1, according to amount in question.

This, sir, is just the rough outline of a scheme and I should like to see the matter properly discussed in your valuable paper. I may state that I do not consider my proposed measure as anything else but a suggestion and I hope that after proper and exhaustive discussion we may find a good workable measure that will be a benefit to the small trader.

The Moving of Ontario's Frontier Northward

What is Being Done in the North of This Province and What the Future Will Bring Forth— An Experimental Farm up There—Interest Displayed by the Government.

Much has been said and written about the wonderful work of development which has been going on in Canada's western provinces and it would be hard to say too much in this regard.

But while the eyes of most Canadians have been directed westward, rapid progress has been made in opening up the vast area of 16,000,000 acres of virgin soil in "New Ontario," lying beyond the height of land a hundred odd miles north of the C. P. R. main line. The rich discoveries of silver at Cobalt and gold at Porcupine have attracted world wide attention and something has been heard of the possibilities of coal mining and of farming in the "clay belt," but the majority of Canadians have confined their investigations of the new northland to the investment of more or less of their surplus funds in the shares of companies, some of which were organized to mine the public and others to develop rich discoveries of mineral in the Cobalt district.

A party of 130 editors spent four days recently in journeying over and studying the possibilities of the country. The party, after passing over the Ontario Government railway, the T. & N. O., as far as Cochrane, journeyed westward 35 miles to the Metagami river, a mighty stream 600 feet across, flowing north into Hudson's Bay, on the first passenger train to pass over that section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Both roads were found to be well constructed, the ballasting on the transcontinental line being of an exceptionally high order.

Importance of Northern Districts.

Up to eight or ten years ago North Bay (230 miles north of Toronto) was on the northern frontier of Ontario, but pioneer farmers led the railway into the country and mineral was discovered. Then Cobalt and Haileybury, the former the mining camp, and the latter the residential town five miles away (connected by electric and steam railways), with a combined population of well over 10,000 people, sprung into existence, and for the time being overshadowed the farming industry, the chief centre of which so far is New Liskeard, with a population of about 3,500, and lying ten miles north of Cobalt and five from Haileybury.

Doubt is expressed by some as to the future of the mining industry, upon the success of which the future of Cobalt as a business centre and Haileybury as a residential town depends, but there is no present indication of mining activity abating for many years to come. On the contrary, plans are being made for manufacturing industries in which the low grade ores in the dumps at the different mines will be worked over for arsenic and for metal for silver table knives. New Liskeard, with its farming resources, its lumber and flour mills, therefore has a rich present and a bright future, even though for the time being outstripped in business turnover and building activity by its sister towns.

The electric line which is bringing so many Cobalters to Haileybury will, it is expected, soon be extended to New Liskeard, both towns being on Lake Temiskaming, across which lies Ville Marie in Quebec Province. Sixty-seven miles above Englehart is Matheson, the outfitting point for Porcupine Lakes. At Monteith, four miles below Mileage 222, the Ontario Government have established an experimental farm.

Cochrane is 480 miles north of Toronto and 180 miles south of James Bay. It is the junction point of the T. & N. O. and the Grand Trunk Pacific and is destined to be a big city, as it is only a few years before traffic will be heavy on the line from Winnipeg to Quebec and from Toronto to James Bay. The route to Winnipeg from Toronto, via Cochrane and the G. T. P. will, it is said, be 130 miles shorter than from Toronto to Winnipeg via the C. P. R. short line through Sudbury. Cochrane is on almost a straight line with Winnipeg and much of the intervening country is like that surrounding Cochrane, a fine clay soil covered with from three to four feet of rich deposit of decaying vegetation. The land is covered with a thick forest of young trees which will be faily easy to clear, as has been proven at New Liskeard, Monteith and other places along the line.

Ontario's Hope.

The hope of Ontario is in its northland. With its development, breadth will be given to the narrow line of populated country along the United States boundary line. With its million of acres peopled, the resources of the province will be vastly increased and a tremendous market provided for the manufacturing industries of Old Ontario. Pioneer work will be far more rapid in New than it was in Old Ontario, but under any circumstances pioneering a new country is hard work. The province, in grasping its opportunities, therefore, has responsibilities which it cannot shirk. Schools must be provided (the one at Cochrane was built by private generosity), roads must be built and other assistance given to aid in the opening up of the country.

The Ontario Government has already done much in the way of railway construction, etc., but with its revenues increasing from the northern heritage, it can afford, for many years to come, to reinvest in the north country all the revenues derived from the exploitation of the forests and mines of its New Ontario storehouse.

ADVOCATES EARLY DELIVERY.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—The grocers of this town have agreed among themselves to start the Saturday night delivery again for the summer months only. Still I think this would have been better left as it was. This Saturday night work is all bosh. Nothing in it at all only hard work for the clerks and delivery boys. I don't really think God gave us the seventh day of rest with the clause added—Work till midnight the night before for the sake of a few shekels. In some countries eight hours a day is a day's work, and ten hours a day is recognized nearly the world over, but from seven o'clock in the morning till midnight is nothing but slavery, and should not be allowed.

MODERNITE.

Bracebridge, Ont., June 2, 1910.

TRADE NOTES.

Two schooners arrived last week at St. John, N.B., from Barbadoes with a total of 1093 puncheons, 273 hogsheads and 432 barrels of molasses.

James Graham, until recently employed by Walter Paul, has opened his own store at 4451 St. Catherine St. West, Montreal. Although only in business two weeks he says that trade is already promising. Mr. Graham is a firm believer in the value of the trade newspaper.

At a meeting of the creditors of H. W. deForest, Ltd., St. John, N.B., held last week, Henry W. Howell made an offer to the creditors of 28 cents on the dollar, which offer was accepted by all the creditors present, subject to the approval of the assignee and the inspectors. It was stipulated by Mr. Howell that he would make the payment within 60 days. Arrangements are being made whereby J. Harvey Brown will be associated with Mr. Howell in the business and they will put out Mr. Brown's Sunbean blend as well as Union blend.

Salesmen---The Ambassadors of Modern Commerce

Work Becoming a Profession—The Qualifications Needed—Push, Determination and Energy — Attention to Personal Appearance.

By H. Wellington Wood.

The writer, after more than twenty-seven years of actual experience in selling and training travelers, both in the United States and Europe, wishes to express his humble opinion that the position of the commercial traveler has far exceeded the title of avocation and he can justly lay claim to his position being a profession, and a careful analysis and study will prove his claim. The writer wishes to dedicate to the United Commercial Travelers of America a new twentieth century title for their profession, namely, "Ambassadors of Commerce."

For the commercial traveler, in order to justify his claims, must have the art of expression; must be able to mix in society; he must be all things to all men; he must take the initiative; be fully conversant and familiar with the quality and prices of his goods; ever ready for the unexpected; fully satisfied that the sun rises and sets in the firm and goods he represents; never be afraid of giving more than he is paid for; ever mindful of studying carefully the individuality and personality of the firm he represents, and then endeavor, so far as it is possible, to put into practice and carry out to the letter, their instructions and wishes; be happy and content in his position; be optimistic and shun pessimistic companions; avoid conversation that will not admit the presence of ladies; be guarded in his remarks; slow to criticise, magnanimous in praise—for the one will build up and the other destroy; study methods of speech.

Has Become Broad Minded.

Charity has become his stock in trade; he believes that every man has a right to his own views and respects him because of his regard at the ballot-box, sought for at the church, revered, loved and honored by his family; his cordial greeting and genial manner make him a favorite with all with whom he comes in contact.

The twentieth century commercial traveler has won his way to success and achievement by fully realizing, before entering, that every door through which he must pass has painted on it in large letters: "Push! Determination! Perseverance! Energy!" and that these four essentials are necessary for his success. He has learned by experience that silence is golden but that speech, delivered with heaps of enthusiasm, well seasoned with plenty of good common sense, mixed well with plenty of tact and diplomacy, will bring forth the coveted order, and the size will be determined by the warmth and quality of the talk.

His Personal Appearance.

The weather, with all its seasons and varied changes, has no effect upon him; he realizes that it is important never to tell all he knows, that just as soon as a customer reaches his limitations he ceases to be interesting; he is careful about his apparel; is commented upon as being immaculate; is careful with his appointments; is dependable and regards an engagement as a sacred trust—such is the commercial traveler of the century through which we are so rapidly and surely passing. He must be the very embodiment of all that is attractive, honorable and fair, and, by all means, guard with all diligence the confidence reposed in him by his customers, for which he has toiled unceasingly days and nights, in many cases years, to obtain. He never changes an order without the consent of his customer; he makes good every promise.

RAISED RATES ON CANNED GOODS.

Protest Against Railways Which are Said to Discriminate.

London, Ont., June 2.—The freight on canned goods to London was one of the questions brought up at the Board of Trade meeting last Friday, when T. B. Escott, wholesale grocer, alleged discrimination by the railways against the Royal City.

He reported that on April 1 the railroads raised the freight on canned goods coming into the city. He understood that it was to this city only.

This, he said, gave other cities a great advantage over London in regard to competition. He thought that a committee ought to be appointed to deal with the matter and bring it before the railway commission, and see if the railroads could not be compelled to go back to the old rates.

The increase in rates from the different canning towns per hundred weight is as follows: Brighton, 2c; Colborne, 2c; Delhi, 3c; Dunnville, 5c; Picton, 3c; Niagara-on-the Lake, 1c; Port Hope, 2c; St. Catharines, 1c; St. Davids, 1c; Simcoe, 3c; Strathroy, 1c; Trenton, 3c; Windsor, 1c.

Mr. Escott also brought up the notice sent to all shippers by the railroads to the effect that no goods would be received after two o'clock in the afternoon.

If this rule is not put into effect in other cities it will mean that they will have great advantages over London.

He said that the freight agents stated that they would not force the rule till other cities were put in line.

By this rule London shippers were thrown some 24 hours behind, as the noon mail does not arrive in time to get the goods ready for shipping by two o'clock.

This matter was also referred to the railroad committee to deal with.

EFFECTS OF JEALOUSY.

Traveler Refers to Petty Grievances Merchants Have Against Each Other.

Editor Canadian Grocer — As one moves among the merchants from town to town and from day to day he hears of the evil effects of the mail order trade in the stores, town and country, but the jealousy and bitter rivalry which exist among the merchants is doing themselves and their towns more injury than all other competition combined. Unless they adopt more up to date methods they must only blame themselves if their businesses go down until the trade is entirely lost. Instead of being united in supporting the interests of the town, and in trying to secure the trade that naturally belongs to them, they rather see it go to the large cities than to their competitors in their own town.

In many cases nine-tenths of the merchants have mournful stories to tell about the difficulties they are laboring under, but very few are willing to move out of their demoralized conditions and use proper means to improve the situation.

While it is admitted by the farmers and general buying public, that they need the local stores, and are willing to support them, many of the merchants have allowed their jealousy to run to such an extent that they are scarcely in condition to talk courteously to travelers and even to some of their customers.

Grabber of Illegitimate Discounts Criticized

Vice-President of Wholesalers' Association Arraigns Those of of His Confreres Who are in the Habit of Doing This—Convention Favors Uniformity Between State and Federal Food Laws Want Strict Weight and Measure Law.

Louisville, Ky., June 1.—The acceptance of discounts by wholesale grocers from manufacturers and producers not entitled to grant them was severely criticized by F. R. Drake, vice-president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the U:S., which was in convention here last week.

He cautioned them against any impression that the manufacturer is legitimate game to brab a discount from just because it can be done sometimes. He added: "Be good sports, you fellows—don't be pikers."

One of the most important reports considered was that of the committee on pure food legistation. Among the things which the wholesale grocers favor are the uniformity between state and national pure food laws; addition of a national weight clause, passage by states of a strict weight and measure law, investigation by legislative committees of the cost of high living and the question of cold storage, passage of acts providing for uniform bills of lading, uniform warehouse receipts and uniform negotiable instruments. The association has ordered the dating of food proddcts.

Buying on Discount Plan.

Fred R. Drake, chairman of the purchase discount committee, made a report in which he said:

"In September we began our campaign by endeavoring to have bean growers and handlers of the Pacific Coast change the terms on which they sold their goods from a net arrival basis to a discount basis and in this effort we have been more or less successful by having the most prominent and influential growers and handlers of beans on the Pacific Coast accede to our request.

Following up the success of the Pacific Coast, we approached the Michigan Bean Jobbers' Association in January with the idea of having them change their terms from a net arrival basis to a discount basis. While the result of the vote taken was unfavorable to our request, we are advised that the argument of reasoning presented by our committee and the information sent to each member of the Michigan Bean Jobbers' Association, has made a lasting impression upon its members, and are in earnest hope that at their next annual meeting we may meet with more favorable consideration than was the case this past year.

"We took this matter up with the representative bean dealers in New York state without any better success, but feel that the foundations are laid which will eventually result in the growers and handlers of beans of Michigan and New York state modernizing their methods of doing business to more nearly correspond with the terms of the wholesale grocery trade of the United States.

"Your committee visited Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in an effort to have the largest and most representative handlers of dried peas conform their product, which is now sold upon a net arrival basis, to a discount basis and had hopes of success which were afterward doomed to failure, but which we believe by persistent effort can be brought to a successful conclusion on this article.

"During the year we have addressed communications to the largest packers of canned meats with the idea of having them have their terms conform to the terms of the wholesale grocery trade of the United States, and while we have not been successful during this present year, we advise that agitation be continued. We hoped also to report to you success in having obtained a cash discount on cheese but have been disappointed both by the difficulty in reaching any large organizations of cheese manufacturers and also by the great pressure of other matters affecting the members of our committee."

Getting Manufacturers' Ear.

The committee on manufacturers reported in part as follows:

"We find it is not the desire of the wholesale grocer to dictate to or demand anything from the manufacturers. However, we find a disposition on the part of the manufacturer to listen more to the jobber, and if we can succeed in convincing him, and he in turn gain confidence in us, our pathway in commercial life will not be so tough."

The report of the Publicity Committee was presented as follows:

"Your committee is unanimous in the belief that our report should be of a recommendatory nature only. We wish to very flatly and as forcefully as possible tell the wholesale grocers in this, their annual convention, that in many directions we are being grossly misrepresented. It comes to us that many of our legislators actually entertain the false impression that the wholesale grocer is an absolutely unnecessary factor in the chain of distribution.

"We feel that we are justified in believing that a large section of the public holds the unfortunate opinion that an association of merchants must, necessarily, be a price maintenance organization and that the activities of such bodies are always inimical to the general welfare. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association is probably now the most important of all of these trade organizations, and we believe that we can do no better than to take up for serious discussion ways and means to dispel these prevailing fallacies from the public mind.

No Time for Boosting Prices.

"The public ought to know that there are good associations and because there are some associations whose activities may have transgressed the law and been wholly selfish and misguided is no reason for the conclusion that the National Wholesale Grocers' Association is other than helpful to the public and conscientious in all of its actions and is in no way responsible for the acts or omissions of any other organization in the country.

"The National Wholesale Grocers' Association has all it can do twenty.four hours each day without meddling with prices or resorting to any secret or open action in restraint of trade, without making any 'gentlemen's agreements;' in short, their work for uniformity of enforcement and demonstration of food laws, of just and uniform bill of lading laws, negotiable instrument laws and statutes upon all commercial subjects, their fight on short weights, discriminatory trade practices, secret rebates, the subsidizing of salesmen and a hundred other activities of a wholly legitimate nature occupy their entire time.

"They realize that their power to benefit themselves and their neighbors in the trade along these just lines would be sorely crippled or utterly lost the moment they became greedy or selfish and endeavored to restrain trade in any way or to combine, orally or in writing, secretly or openly, for the maintenance of prices, the boycotting of rivals or the direct or indirect prejudices of any other factor in the trade."

TRADE NOTES.

Since the grocery store and business of the later Peter Anderson, Guelph, Ont., was taken over by Hood Bros., there has been another change in the firm. L. Hood, who with his brother. W. Hood, formerly of Benson Bros., purchased the business from the late Mr. Anderson, has retired and his place has been taken by Archie Benallick, who was head clerk under the late Mr. Anderson.

Engaging the Services of a Lawyer by the Year

Is it Advisable to do This For a Nominal Sum or to Take Chances on Not Being Mixed up in Litigation?—Much Depends on Extent of the Business and the Side Issues—How it Might Sometimes Prove Profitable.

By a Vancouver Retailer.

To what extent does a grocer require the advice and services of a lawyer?

It is not a case of looking for trouble. Grocers are, as a rule, exemplary citizens, and among the most law-abiding. But, the average man actively engaged in business meets with questions and difficulties for the solution of which a lawyer is really required. At least, if he is not, it might be a saving of money to obtain his advice. The question is does the average grocer require legal assistance?

The grocer himself should be able to answer this question for his own satisfaction, but in so doing he should not be influenced by too great a caution to avoid additional expense. Admitting that grocers call in lawyers when difficulties are presented the question arises, is it best to engage them for particular cases, or is it more advisable to employ them by the year?

There are two old saying that apply to this situation. One is "Penny wise, and pound foolish," and the other, "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Grocers are like the rest of the human species. They do not wish to lose any more money than is absolutely necessary, but if a legal point arises they cannot, generally speaking, see into the future. It is to provide this foresight that the lawyer may be of assistance. So many points arise that it is hardly worth mentioning them. There are written contracts, insurance matters, accidents perhaps, credit questions pertaining to his customers or his own relations with wholesalers; it may be in regard to real estate transfers or damage claims, all of which it may be preferable to have a lawyer's assurance if it is only to be on the safe side.

Paying Annual Sum.

A grocer might go to a lawyer he knew and tell him that he was prepared to pay him say $25, more or less, as he saw fit, for his services for a year in the matter of giving advice. It might be that the grocer would see a whole year pass by and entirely escape legal matters. In that case he ought to give the money as a votive offering for his freedom from the worries he missed.

But these cases are very few. If a grocer has a lawyer thus engaged, some case arises on which he seeks advice immediately. There is no lost time in debating whether it would be wise to spend the money, and in instances of this kind it has been found that it is always best to act without delay.

If a grocer finds himself involved in some case in which he has procrastinated in regard to seeking legal advice, and then at the last moment decides that there is no other alternative his cost is more than it would have been initially, for the lawyer is rushed to investigate the case, and delay in most instances is not a money saver.

As before stated a grocer's decision in this matter depends upon his individual circumstances.

This article is intended merely to call attention to this question. It is a business proposition, and if carried out may be valuable, and it is a sign of the live, wide-awake proprietor. All the big business concerns throughout the country have their own special legal advisers upon whom they call for numerous duties pertaining to business ventures or questions.

A grocer, too, if he employs a lawyer for two or three years on the above basis derives a good education, which might be so valuable, and so thorough as to dispense with his services afterwards.

SHOP PHILOSOPHY.

By Frank Farrington.

The employer who has not the respect of his clerks will not have their co-operation.

The anti-substitution crusade has passed into ancient history, the general advertiser having come to a proper recognition of the independence of the retailer. For this do not forget to give your trade journal proper credit.

When you have a clerk who finds private conversation with friends more important than waiting on customers promptly, you can afford to let him go.

There are many expedients for the improvement of clerks. Raising wages is not one of them. More pay will not make a good clerk out of a poor one.

When the clerk gets into the habit of calling you "Jim" in the presence of customers, it is time to impress upon him the fact that you are his superior officer.

If the proprietor of a store chews gum or tobacco or smokes around the store, it makes it that much harder for him to keep his clerks from such habits.

If you can't be on time to business, let there be reason for it. Excuseless tardiness is bad for any man. It is a fault that easily grows into a habit.

Better a scanty stock and a pleasing sales force than crowded shelves and grouchy clerks.

Did you ever know a man who become a successful merchant without being possessed of a large share of enthusiasm?

The customer who enters the store and finds no one to wait on him until he is tired and goes away, usually waits a long time before coming back again.

If you want a really big trade, don't confine your efforts to the classes. The masses spend the most money.

Keep watch for opportunities for uniting with other merchants to pull outside trade to town. Co-operation of this sort is a big winner.

If there are in town buyers of your goods who are in the habit of purchasing in considerable quantity and sending out of town, go after these people and make them customers. Give them right prices.

Be sure that all the outside surroundings of your store are in attractive condition at all times. It will make a great difference with the opinion of the public.

TRADE NOTES.

The Grocers' Association of Quebec city have decided to do all they can to help along the "Quebec Business Show" the object of which is to make better known a number of products which are as yet unfamiliar in the Quebec market.

At one of the recent meetings of the American Cranberry Growers' Association it was decided to launch an educational campaign designed to remove from the minds of the consumer the provincial belief that cranberries should be eaten only with poultry. According to the plans of this association, $250,000 will be spent during the next five years to teach the housewife how to cook cranberries properly and to establish in the minds of consumers the importance of cranberries as a separate dish.

Display in a newspaper advertisement does not mean the largest possible type. It means the most conspicuous type, and that is not at all the same thing.

If you have a clerk who makes free use of the excuse "I forgot," you will notice that he never seems to forget pay-day.

The base-runner who stands with his feet glued to the bag may be playing it safe, but he isn't playing it to make any runs. There is more to success than just "playing it safe."

THROW A SPRAT TO CATCH A MACKEREL

You can't fish without good bait.

It's not the cost of the bait, but the knowledge of just what bait to use to catch the kind of fish you are after.

A want ad. in THE CANADIAN GROCER is the right kind of bait to use when you have any proposition of interest to grocery dealers, clerks or travellers.

The cost of advertisement will be very small compared with the results you will secure. 25c. or 50c. per insertion will pay for a want ad. which may prove worth dollars to you.

Every day you delay you are handicapping your business.

If it is a set of old-style scales you have to sell, why not get them out of the way and get the money for them which you can use in your business?

If you want to sell your business, let the men know about it who would be interested in buying it, and you will realize a higher price than if you only negotiate with two or three people.

If your proposition has anything to do with the grocery trade, try a Want Ad. in THE CANADIAN GROCER. Address our nearest office.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Firm at advance.
Japan Tea—Will be higher.
Currants—Higher for new crop.
Prunes—Scarce.

Montreal, June 2, 1910.

Sugar is firm at the recent advance and is selling much better than formerly.

There seems to be a weather conspiracy against trade in general. Nearly every day it has rained for some hours and thus deterred many country buyers, who would otherwise have been coming in, from doing so. A recent newspaper report states that every thirty-five years we have an exceptionally rainy spring and summer, and this is the year we get it. Whatever the cause the trade would be glad of even a temporary respite.

The currant situation in Greece is attracting much attention in this connection. The rains have done serious damage to this year's crop and, according to recent advices, there is sure to be a shortage. This will be even greater if the policy of uprooting 25 per cent. of the vines is followed out.

Japan teas have had similar experiences, and as a result the price will be unexpectedly high for the first picking. Collections locally have been unsatisfactory of late. A few weeks of bright weather would help matters in general wonderfully.

Sugar—Sugar remains steady at the advance of last week, with a much better sale than before. Raw sugars have dropped considerably below the 15s point, which preceded the rise in refined, but the situation continues firm, and it is not likely that any immediate change will take place in refined.

Tea—Recent cable advices from Japan state that rainy weather has had a bad effect on the first crop, and, as a result, has had a hardening tendency as regards prices. This dissipates the idea early advices encouraged, that prices might be slightly lower this year for first arrivals.

Dried Fruits—Local stocks of prunes are running low and prices are stiffening on account of the short crop last year. Owing to the poor quality of Valencias this year they are having a very slow sale.

Reports from Patras, Greece, show that prices are going to be higher for currants. The cause is the abnormal amount of rain this spring.

TORONTO.—The market is strong and at the present moment canned goods are valuable stock. There is a short supply in peas, beans, cherries, raspberries and strawberries. At the same time the demand is good and canned goods are quite firm with a slightly upward tone. The result of inquiries seems to be that stocks ,are light and there is likely to be an interval just when demand is keen. Grocers should govern themselves according to the dictates of their own experience and good sense, but everything seems to be in favor of canned goods at present as being an article worth while booming.

Salmon is another line that should receive careful consideration from every grocer. Stocks are light, according to reliable authorities, and this is the year of the short run. Canned goods may be a little higher this year. The fact that sugar is about sixty or seventy cents higher than at this time a year ago is likely to have an effect towards strengthening the price.

It might also be said in regard to salmon that the preferred brands are pretty well cleaned out. It is expected that the new catch will open $1 a case in excess of the opening price last year.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS.—
Sugar—Buying active.
Canned Goods—Good demand.
Currants—High market expected.

Toronto, June 2, 1910.

From jobbers come the reports that the spring trade is encouraging. They do not mention any particular stock as being outstanding, but referring to the general markets assert that the situation is favorable.

Sugar continues strong with the tendency toward higher prices especially if fine weather prevails together with heavy fruit crops. The expectations among fruitmen are for even better crops than last year. Sugar at present is between sixty and seventy cents higher than this time last year.

Dried fruits display an interesting situation in some of the stocks and currants and raisins should receive attention for a time. Canned goods are also strong and stocks in some lines are becoming light. The canned goods market including salmon is dealt with in the following reports.

Evaporated apples are stronger as are also prunes. Apricots are fair. The dried fruit list is worthy of attention.

Sugar—An active week in sugar transactions followed the recent increase of ten cents. An authority on the situation stated that more sugar moved during the week than during the previous month. Just how to explain that state of affairs is not easy, but it was perhaps due to the fact that the trade was holding out expecting a movement in the opposite direction in spite of the warnings that were being sent out. Then when the increase came they sent in their orders fearing that a still further increase might follow. The market is firm and the prospect is bright. The weather is going to have an effect on the situation. It will be, however, in an indirect manner. The reports regarding the fruit outlook are favorable. Warm weather will settle the matter. There is every indication of heavy berry crops and other fruits are promising. Fine weather, however, is needed, hence the applicability of the statement that the sugar market is to a certain extent dependent on sunshine and smiles from the weather man.

If the fruit crop turns out to be as heavy as now expected, and there is no reason to believe it will not be, sugar will be in great demand. Fruit men are anticipating a good season and those dealing in sugar feel that they will have a heavier business than heretofore. Under these conditions, sugar is good holding. This statement was made and if there has been any change it has been in support of this expressed opinion.

Dried Fruits.—There is a firm tone to the prune market, due largely to the reports that the Santa Clara Valley crop has suffered severely. Both futures and spots are firmer. Present business is fairly good. The market in Valencia raisins is reported firmer. Locally the supply is not heavy, apparently but few being held. Certain houses have instructed their travelers to quote them at six cents. Reports from Spain regarding the growing raisin crop are not favorable. A drought has prevailed, they state, and the crop gives evidence of being only half of last year's. A letter dated May 21st dwelt upon the scarcity of rain and the effect that was expected this would have on the crop.

Currants are apparently suffering from weather conditions directly opposite to those existing in the raisin district. Continued rains in Greece have had a bad effect and futures are likely to be high. The price on spots has been increased in sympathy. Growers are reported to be asking from two to three shillings a cwt. more than last year's quotations for the new crop. The market in both raisins and currants is interesting at present and will bear close watching by the grocer who is looking toward his best interests.

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS—

Advances—Sugar, evaporated apples.

Firmer—Beans, tapioca.

Out of Stock—Fard dates.

Winnipeg, June 2, 1910.

This week wholesalers and their travelers report a lull in the brisk buying tendency which has prevailed for several weeks. This condition is welcomed in one respect since it not only gives wholesalers and manufacturers an opportunity to get a little stock ahead, but it insures better permanent conditions. The retailers are all well stocked and the tendency to overstock has been altogether too prevalent.

Fine weather keeps the farmer at home and it is only occasionally that the rural merchants are visited, but the trade is excellent for a wide range of goods. Advances and shortages are again reported but things are likely to become adjusted shortly.

Sugar—The market went up 10 cents here last week and the change was not surprising since the N.Y. market has been in advance of western Canada prices for some time. The trade in icing, powdered and lump, is excellent just now, and these lines are particularly strong. The price in Saskatchewan is above Manitoba and the following prices hold for Manitoba alone:

Foreign Dried Fruits—There are no changes in prices to report this week. The output is all that can be expected and the majority of stocks are going into retailers' hands. Although the camp supply is good, the camps depend more upon canned goods. It is believed that it is the camp demand for peaches and apricots that keeps these lines firm. The fard dates are sold out in several wholesale houses and there is very little in town. We cannot quote them.

Tapioca and Sago—The tapioca market is certainly on the rise and higher prices are sure to come in both lines. The demand has been heavy and the prospect for a continued good market is in view.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, N.S., June 2, 1910.

The local grocery markets are in excellent condition at the present time. Business in all lines is reported good and the prospects are that it will continue. Mackerel are now striking in along the coast, and as prices are high for this class of fish a lot of money will be put in circulation.

There has been a drop of one cent per pound in butter, but the dealers say that the cut should be greater. A jobber remarked this week that prices are often quick to advance, but slow to drop. The decline in prices here is not to be compared with Montreal, the market there, according to advices received, being much easier. The best butter is selling at 28 cents per pound. There is a fairly good supply of eggs coming on the market now, but the demand is rather light. They are now selling at 19 cents per dozen.

Canned goods and preserved fruits are in good demand, but the sales of smoked meats are limited, owing to the prevailing high prices.

Stocks of vegetables (outside potatoes) are pretty well cleaned up. The potatoes now offered for sale wintered well, and they are considered excellent stock for the season of the year. The U.S. cabbage coming on the market is of poor quality. The price is high and the dealers do not care about handling large quantities, as they claim that there is no money in it just at present.

Green truck is coming on the market in large quantities now. The grocery stores are brightened up by the addition of rhubarb, spinach, lettuce and radishes. The quality of the U.S. strawberries received so far this season is fairly good and the retail price, twenty cents a box, is considered to be fairly reasonable.

The importations of molasses into Halifax this season continue heavy. Two schooners arrived here this week with large cargoes. One from Barbadoes brought 552 puncheons, 81 hogsheads, and 91 barrels. Another from Trinidad landed 250 puncheons, and 430 barrels. The price of molasses is firm, and the demand is fairly good.

BERMUDA ONIONS IN TEXAS.

The extent to which the "Texas" Bermuda onion has gained a footing on the market substantiates the statements that Texas has stolen a large part, if not all, of Bermuda's onion trade. Climate conditions were about equal and where Bermuda boasted of a few thousand acres, the Lone Star state had thousands of square miles to devote to the culture of the onion. Planters went from Texas and secured the entire output of onion seed, and Bermuda, where the onion has deteriorated, finds its expected source of regeneration cut off in the time of need.

This change has come about within five years. Last year Texas grew and shipped 3,000 carloads, delivered by truck express to seaboard and interior points and never glutting the market with an over-supply. In the season Hamilton, Bermuda, was able to make but two shipments a week, in passenger steamers, and all delivered in New York. Bermuda ships now less than a quarter of what its output was when the market was all its own.

COMPLAIN OF BUTTER QUALITY.

Guelph, Ont., June 2.—Guelph grocers are having a great deal of difficulty in getting good butter. On the market on Saturday morning the range of prices for butter from 18c to 25c a pound was in keeping with the wide range in quality. In this connection, J. A. McCrea stated to your correspondent, that a great deal of the butter brought in by farmers was not fit to sell, and that it was with considerable difficulty that he was able to secure three or four sources from which to get cream separator butter, almost equal in quality to creamery butter, which he could sell at 25c a pound. R. Robinson, of Robinson Bros., complained of the same difficulty. "There is no money in handling either butter or eggs," he said, and they only dealt in them to accommodate their customers.

PROTECTING THE CONSUMER.

New York, June 2.—George Stadtlander, proprietor of a large grocery store in New York City, and president of the New York Retail Grocers' Association, displays the following sign, which was one of the resolutions passed at a recent meeting, in his store window: "That the members of the New York Retail Grocers' Association will not weigh or sell wooden dishes with butter. Net weight is our motto."

By actual weight twenty-one of the ordinary wooden butter trays weigh one pound and these when weighed with butter mean that the consumer is paying from 30c to 32c a pound for wood. The butter is first weighed and placed on the tray afterwards.

TRADE NOTES.

The Travelers' Club, London, Ont., opened their new building last Friday night with an old-fashioned house warming.

The retail grocers of London, Ont., began their Wednesday half holiday on Wednesday afternoon, June 1st. The annual excursion of the Retail Grocers' Association of that city takes place on June 15 to Detroit.

TO THE ONLOOKER.

The Grocer recently received a communication signed "The Onlooker" which if published would make interesting reading, but for some reason or other he has neglected to sign his name. That prevents, of course, the publication of the communication which refers to the recent Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange convention.

If correspondents would always send their names—not necessarily for publication but as a matter of good faith—it would insure recognition of their communications and their names would as well be held absolutely confidential if so requested.

Heavy Production of Butter and Eggs Just Now

Market is Generally Easier as a Result and Some Express the Opinion That Bottom Price Has Not Yet Been Reached—Provision Market is Quiet and Trade is Hardly Up To Normal—New Cheese Coming in, But Demand is Stilll For Old Make—Poultry Market Brighter.

Throughout the country the production of butter has greatly increased of late and as a result prices have slumped more or less. In some places it is believed the bottom price has not yet been reached, but it is not anticipated that any future decline will be of unusual extent. While the production is large at present, it must be remembered that the demand this year is greater than ever and authorities have expressed the idea that importations will be larger than heretofore. The export of cream to the United States is another factor that must be considered.

The production of eggs has been maintained at a top figure and prices are easier. Produce men agree that the amount stored away this Spring has been much greater than in former years. The trade is about finished storing now.

There has not been much change in the provision market. If the supply is not unusually heavy the demand is not exceeding it and the market is nothing more than normal at present.

In regard to poultry, prospects are brighter. Broilers are more plentiful and their season is just beginning.

The new make of cheese is securing a footing on the market. There was an easier feeling on export goods early in the week. The English home make is coming in and New Zealand stock is also competing with the Canadian article. Among the trade the demand is for the old cheese although there is some demand for the new make. It is hardly sufficiently matured yet to receive much demand.

Butter—Owing to the large influx of new make the market has dropped off slightly. New milk creamery is still fairly firm at 24½-25, however.

Rimouski and Temiscouata stock is commencing to arrive, and still lower prices are looked for.

With regard to cream exportation it is worthy of note that as a direct outcome of the United States trade, Cowansville board has lost its pre-eminence in local circles. Receipts for the week are 14,-682 packages as against 9,293 packages 1909. For the season they are 41,414 packages as against 32,264 same season last year, both figures showing decided gains.

Cheese—Cheese prices are down over 1c. This is probably due to the slack demand in England on account of the large influx of New Zealand make. Values are lower this year than for the past few years. It is expected that we will strike the flush much sooner than usual this seasonf

WINNIPEG.

Butter—All butters have dropped, much to the relief of all concerned. The event was caused by an influx in the quantity of cream production and grass butter is on the market for the rest of the season. What the future will be is uncertain, but low prices are not expected at any time. Best grade creamery is 26 cents. No. 1 dairy is strong at 25 cents and No. 2 is quoted from 17 to 19 cents. The trade has greatly improved this week, and it is exident that a great percentage of the public have been going light on this commodity.

Eggs—A firmer market prevails for all Manitoba fresh eggs. The price of 21 cents, which is quoted to-day may be advanced if the extensive pickling operations continue much longer. The supply from all parts of the province is good and liberal prices are being offered in the attempt to pickle a large quantity for next winter. No Manitoba eggs will be shipped until the preserving houses are satisfied, then, western shipping will be vigorously resumed, it is expected.

Cheese—It is too early yet for Manitoba cheese and none will be marketed for at least a month. Ontario cheese, the only product here, is jobbing at 13 cents to-day, and as the Ontario stuff diminishes firmer prices may be expected. As soon as local production commences, of course a lower market will prevail. The Manitoba product is not so popular as the Ontario, which is always in demand and two prices will undoubtedly prevail during the summer.

Lard—United States producers are anxious to land trade in the west and the competition which they have worked up with Canadian producers has weakened the market just now. We quote the following reduced prices.

Pure, 20-lb. pails	3 60
" 3-lb. tins, 60-lb. cases	11 00

Maple Syrup—It is reported that supplies are all in from the production source. Wholesalers have considerable stocks on hand, but it is reasonably believed that there will be shortage before the season is over and higher prices will naturally prevail. The following quotations hold to-day.

How Losses Accrue Handling Light Weight Butter

One Grocer Shows a Leak of $195 in One Year—Blame Attached to the Producer, Whose Name Should be Printed on the Wrapper—Amount of Short-weight Butter Confiscated in one City in 1909.

"Those grocers in country town who are buying butter by the roll or case from the farmers and selling by the pound are most of them losing money," remarked a Canadian grocer the other day.

"The fact is," he added, "merchants do not give sufficient attention to buying goods which they sell by weight; if they did many of them would check losses which now amount to $200 or $300 per year.

"I do not think it is fair to consumers to have them pay 35 cents for a pound of butter when they only receive 14 ounces. It means that in every eight pounds a family uses it loses 35 cents.

"Many of our customers have scales and, I venture to say, they use them to purchase in the most economical and careful place. Should a customer discover that she is being cheated, intentionally or unintentionally by the merchant, out of 2 ounces in a pound of butter the probability is that she will not give that merchant another order.

"I have no doubt that many grocers lose customers in this manner who spent from $300 to $400 dollars every year in their stores. This is caused because the merchants bought butter that was underweight from the farmers.

Figures Loss of $195.

"Supposing for instance that I bought on an average 200 lbs. of butter every week for my trade. If 100 lbs. of that were short by 2 oz. to each pound I would be paying out $3.75 more than I should, buying at 30 cents per lb. In a year that amounts to 52 times $3.75 or about $195. If I make sure to treat my customers squarely and give them 16 oz. to the pound I lose $195 in a year —a fair sized leak isn't it?"

This merchant has done some hard thinking along these lines and now he weighs every pound of butter that comes into his hands from farmer or factory. None question his right and he only pays for what he gets. There is no complaint he claims, and in fact he has found farmers and their wives more careful themselves in making up their prints when they discovered that he was strict about his purchasing.

Nevertheless he does not trust to luck —everything is still weighed out of the basket or case systematically and paid for on a weight basis.

Large Quantity Confiscated.

In one large Canadian city last year the official inspector seized 2,649 pounds of butter which was underweight. This was all confiscated and given to charitable institutions and meant a loss to the trade in money value of some $7,000 or $8,000.

It is safe to say that not one-fifth of the total light weight butter was seized.

The authorities are up against a big proposition when they begin to trace such a fraud to its source. It is difficult to locate the farmer who sold the light weight butter to the village or town merchant who in turn passed it along to his customers or to wholesale houses who sold to retailers and through them to consumers in large cities.

A correspondent suggests that the name of the producer should be placed on the wrapper of every roll. In this way, he maintains, the practice of making light weight butter would be eliminated, as no person would care to have his name published as a maker of an article short of the standard weight.

Have Trouble With Inspectors.

Other grocers complain of inspectors weighing butter in their stores. If found short they do not hesitate to make the information known to any customers who happen to be on hand. They claim this to be unfair as the fault does not lie with them.

If this is general it is a matter for investigation; nevertheless merchants should weigh their butter when they get it and pay for what they receive and nothing more.

This is the only way to play safe, and the scientific grocer of to-day wants to play safely every time.

SPECULATORS IN EGGS.

New York speculators in eggs, says the N. Y. Journal of Commerce, who a few weeks ago were said to be going out of the cold storage business, have evidently had a change of mind, as the warehouse reports from 28 of the 32 big plants show 1,119,000 cases of eggs laid away for next fall and winter. This is twice as many as they held last year at this time. Each case holds thirty dozen so that a pretty big supply is assured. The speculators are looking for still higher prices next winter, and calculate to get rid of their stock at a handsome profit when strictly fresh eggs are selling at retail for 5 cents apiece. They may be disappointed at that, as they were at the finish of the recent season. Many housekeepers are now "putting down" eggs on their own account, using liquid glass as the preservative, and that fact will lessen the demand for the speculators' output.

The Expected Has Happened in Flour Markets

Prices Broke This Week Before a Decline of 20 Cents—Total Decrease of 40 Cents During Past Month — The Break Was Anticipated in Last Week's Grocer—Trade Has Become Dull —Cereal Markets Still Healthy.

Flour broke again on Tuesday, the decline being general, amounting to 20 cents a barrel. With export trade practically at a standstill, and nothing doing in in general, it was not more than was expected.

Wheat dropped recently on Chicago markets five cents a bushel and the late decline in flour is easily understood. Large supplies overlapping the demand along with the improved outlook for the new crop explain the situation. The farmers in the Northwest with some 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 bushels in their elevators realized the folly of holding out for better prices with the market ready to go down.

The amount of wheat in sight on May 23rd in the United States and Canada was 33,334,000 bushels and the total visible supply was 82,374,000 bushels.

MONTREAL.

Flour—Flour declined here on Tuesday 20 cents. This was not unexpected as the market has been growing weaker due to abundant supplies and a comparatively slow demand. Buying is in small lots and sales are not frequent.

TORONTO.

Flour—With the market during the past month so listless that trade was gradually going to pieces, prices dropped on Tuesday 20 cents, a second reduction of that amount since May 1st. The decline was nothing more than had been expected and even predicted. Trade in the raw material has been at a low ebb and the drop followed as an almost natural consequence. In the last issue of The Grocer it will be recollected that the flour page was headed, "Flour Market Tottering—Prices Ready to Drop." The decline it is hoped will put a little ginger into trade but one authority stated that he did not expect to see much difference. Following the break, there was a general strengthening reported on all the markets and a slightly firmer tone was noticed, but nothing material was reported. Prices quoted herewith are the standard which prevail here.

ADVICE TO CANADIAN SHIPPERS.

Given by Visitor From the West Indies —Frauds in Flour Claimed.

St. John, N.B., June 2.—E. S. Baker, of Montreal, who for the past twenty months has been stationed in the West Indies as general manager of an insurance company, passed through the city last week on this way from the islands to Montreal. Speaking of trade conditions, he said that Canada has not worked up any trade at all compared to that which she would enjoy if intelligence and push such as the opportunities warrant were expended by Canadian shippers.

There is a great market there he said for Canadian flour and butter. The flour sold there now as Canadian is a complete fraud, he claims. It is a yellowish brown in color and is a much cheaper and dirtier product than the standard brands manufactured in the Dominion. Most of it is shipped from New York. In order to get flour such as he was accustomed to use, Mr. Baker said he had to send an order direct to Halifax.

"There is one thing you can tell Canadian shippers interested in the West Indies, which would be greatly to their benefit. I have noticed that the representatives of Canadian firms who tour the islands make their trips very hurried ones. If these firms want to do anything worth while they must send their men for longer periods than the majority are assigning them at present. A traveler who goes around merely with the boat, and limits his stay at most points according to her schedule, has no proper opportunity of displaying his samples and becoming acquainted. He must go for longer periods. The English firms think the business of such importance that they would not limit a representative's time to less than five or six months, and a year is none too much."

The Irish Grocer, Drug, Provision and General Trades' Journal.

Have you heard the "back to bread" cry?

Of course, Brother Grocer, the food fads are merely straws indicating the way of the wind.

Displaying the anxiety of a wiser public towards NUTRITION in foodstuffs, the fear of the dire vengeance of an offended, overworked stomach.

Daily more and still more people are finding out that good WHITE BREAD in its infinite varieties is the real, genuine "staff of life," the cheapest, most sustaining item on the bill of fare. And more and more people are getting "flourwise" to the distinctive advantages of FIVE ROSES.

For, you see, FIVE ROSES flour makes better bread best.

Thus does FIVE ROSES make your profit limitless—by raising the limit on your sales.

For the Manitoba strength that is in it increases the food value of the oven consequences.

Then the flavor inimitable and the eating qualities multiply the bread consumption—since when we relish it, we eat two pieces where only one was eaten before.

Aren't you keenly anxious to collar YOUR share of the Bread Revival?

Aren't you going to teach YOUR trade the value of good bread?

By selling FIVE ROSES, Brother Grocer.

Don't you want to find out for yourself the real reasons why FIVE ROSES commands the largest sale in Canada?

Think what it might mean to you, to your goodwill, to your cash register.

Then, Brother Grocer, don't YOU need the money more than the "other fellow"?

New Fruits are Being Offered in Abundance

Prices are Generally Easier, Consumption is Heavy and Trade is Fairly Brisk—Pineapples Cheaper—First Arrivals of Apricots and Peaches—Good Business Reported in New Vegetables—Higher Prices Expected in Lemons.

In referring to these markets it may be pointed out that the production in almost every case in the list of vegetables and fruits is abundant. Reports from New York bear out this statement which in a large measure explains the easier prices that are prevailing. Texas onions, owing to heavy shipments are easier, and the same may be said of pineapples. The lowest auction price was reached a week ago when pines were sold in New York at from 95 cents to $1.50 a crate.

Apples, celery and grape fruit are about done. The heavy production of fruits is having a general effect one upon the other. As might be expected when there is a plentitude of any one line it is bound to affect some other. The abundance of pines, strawberries, etc., have made the trade in oranges rather quiet. There was a noticeable oversupply of strawberries during the early part of the week, although the supply of fancy grades was temporarily short. The quality of the surplus was not all it might have been.

As stated in a previous issue, the markets in some lines are likely to do an aeroplane stunt at any time. Reports seem to be a unit in regard to the present season being a successful one. The lemon quotations remain firm and, due to the shortened crop, prices are expected to be stronger before many weeks have passed. The lemonade season has not opened to its full extent yet and this will be another factor to be reckoned with.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—Apples are going higher every day, particularly spies, which are now selling for $8 per bbl., and are scarce even at that price. Grape fruit are greatly in demand and as a result are bringing a higher price, $6 per box. Trade is good in all lines.

Fish.—Gaspe salmon is arriving earlier than former years, and is in good supply. As a result prices are weakening daily. Mackerel are now coming from the lower provinces. Lobsters are scarce on account of the long close season. A few river sturgeon have found a strong market, which will undoubtedly last for a few week's to come. Supplies are good with a steady demand.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—Holiday week witnessed a decline in the price of pineapples, a glut in the strawberry market, the arrival of the first peaches and the first apricots. Strawberries which are now arriving from Maryland were received in an oversupply and some of them were of questionable quality. The holders hastened to unload and prices dropped to ten and even eight cents a box. Some claim that the holiday had something to do with the situation, but several dealers brought in large stocks, which did not improve matters. Prices are back to from 12 to 14 cents again with a lively demand.

Pineapples have been received in New York from Porto Rico in greater quantities than ever before, and while the shipments are heavy, the price which was previously rather high has been seeking its natural level. Oranges are slower than usual with the market affected by the abundance of other fruits. Lemons are steady and are expected to be firmer.

Apples are to all purposes done for the present season. Grape fruit has almost reached the same stage. New peaches and apricots have been received from the Pacific coast states. Cherries are in fairly good demand.

Pineapples (18's) are really worth about three dollars.

Vegetables.—Trade continues steady in green vegetables. Prices are generally much easier and there is scarcely any bottom to the market. A price offered to-day may be unchanged to-morrow or it may be higher or lower. The supply is ample. Celery is practically off the market, the last source of supply seemingly being exhausted. Dealers report that the demand has spread among the

WINNIPEG.

Green Fruits.—Apples are all off the market now and cannot be had at any price. While they lasted, however, prices were quite low, due no doubt to the inferior quality of stuff. There is plenty of the following supplies on the market and local distributors claim that prices are gradually lowering. The present low market in cranberries is due to a surperfluous local stock, and the prices may go up at short notice. Hood river strawberries have just arrived and the quality is reported good.

Vegetables.—Rhubarb (pie plant) lettuce and onions are plentiful and prices are lowering. Onions, cucumbers and potatoes are about all that are being imported, the other lines being hothouse stuff. Celery will be in soon again and the market will be fairly strong.

ONIONS ALLOWED TO ROT.

Referring to the onion market the Fruitman's Guide says: "The expected has happened. Continued liberal shipments of stock that according to some authorities should have been allowed to rot in the fields, has done the trick for this market. It is said on good authority that one of the big docks of the Southern Pacific Steamship Co. is loaded down with stock waiting a market. There are some authorities here who estimate the unsold stock of onions on this market—all kinds included—as close to 100,000 crates. The big bulk of the stock is made up in Texas and the prevailing prices for the week have been 50 cents up to $1.60 a crate. It was thought that the Bermuda season had finished, but a good many thousand crates have come forward during the past few weeks, and now this stock is bringing more money than Texas stock.

"In the opinion of some of the best posted authorities here the shippers in Texas or their advisors are to blame for the existing conditions, and the methods of shippers in withholding information as to quantities of stock available for market are not getting commendation here. The fact that Bermuda onions now coming on the market are selling for more money than home grown Texas onions seems, too, to be a reflection on the ability of the Texas growers to properly market their crop."

NOTES FROM FRUITDOM.

The largest peach crop in ten years, is the report from East Tennessee.

Sicily produced last year 70,000 car loads of lemons, California 6,000.

Valencia oranges are about due for shipment, navels having almost reached the end of their tether.

News from California states that the Valencia orange crop is as near perfect as has ever been in the history of the Porterville district. None of the fruit has been injured in the least by frost.

Aubrey Smith, of Orlando, Florida, is still marketing strawberries. He started Thanksgiving Day and has been picking every day since except Sunday, making five months in all. The highest price received for his berries was fifty cents and the lowest fifteen cents per quart.

Nature is Florida's greatest benefactor. This state is supplying the northern part of the continent with new potatoes, tomatoes, strawberries, squash, celery, spinach, etc. Peaches will soon follow with watermelons, etc., and in about two months the orange season will again be ushered in.

What is probably the largest grape fruit tree in Florida yields the owner about $250 a season. It produces an average of sixty boxes of fruit a year. If it were possible to have an acre of fifty of these trees yielding a like amount would return $12,500 a year. No such yield has yet been reported, but returns of $1,000 an acre are quite common.

B. Follina of Fratelli Follina, lemon growers and shippers, Palermo, Sicily, was in Toronto recently. Referring to crop conditions Mr. Follina stated that the crop was not up to the average this year and prices are likely to be higher than usual. This crop will not be shipped for another month and it is anticipated that lemons will be quoted under strong market conditions.

SELLING SOAP DIRECT.

Grocers of Belfast, Ireland, are also discussing the right of the manufacturer selling to the consumer direct. At the last meeting of the Board of Management of the Belfast and North of Ireland Grocers' Association, a soap manufacturer was accused of selling his product from house to house. The firm in question said they bought all the soap they sold retail through the grocers and paid retail prices for it, and that they were prepared to guarantee or sacrifice a large amount if it could be proved that such was not a fact. But there were some who questioned the statement and claimed that there were tons of the soap being sold to families throughout Belfast which had not passed through the grocers' hands.

Several members asserted that they had been paid full price for their soap by the distributors, while others stated that they had never received an order at all; and others again expressed the opinion that the orders were not fairly divided. It was finally resolved that the secretary send a letter to the firm protesting against the door-to-door sales.

WANT $2,500 DAMAGES.

A case in which the grocery trade is interested is before the Exchequer Court of Canada in St. John, N.B., this week when Justice Cassels will hear the suit of F. B. Reid & Co. vs. the King. J. W. Y. Smith and J. Fred Edgett, of Moncton, doing a general wholesale grocery business as F. B. Reid & Co., are suing the Intercolonial Railway for $2,500 damage done to their goods which were stored in the railway's freight shed at Campbellton, N.B., on Thanksgiving Day, 1907, when the shed and contents were destroyed by fire.

Stepping Stones to Success

Quality is remembered long after price is forgotten. Use "Quality" then as a "Stepping Stone to your Greater Success."

"Stower's"

Lime Juice Cordial will not ferment. No impurities—no adulterations—the "Quality" preparation that is blended just right.

Codou's Macaroni

White, delicate, tender—the product of a factory famous for its cleanliness. Codou's Vermicelli, fancy letters and pastes, are quite as renowned for their superiority. The product commands an ever-increasing patronage from the best class of trade.

Griffin & Skelley's Fruits

The dried and canned fruits, packed under the "Griffin" brand, admit of no argument as to quality—there can be nothing better than the "best." Seeded Raisins, Canned Fruits, White and Green Asparagus, Prunes, Seedless Raisins, Cured Fruits of all kinds, but only the highest quality of each.

Olsen & Kleppe's Norwegian Sardines

The "Albatross"—a small, specially selected fish. The "Ambrosia"—equally good, but not so small. These two brands (in pure Olive Oil) represent the finest of their kind to be procured. Among English epicures the demand is persistent—and very large. Use "Quality" as a stepping stone to success.

Do You Sell Wafers?

If so, read what a Pacific Coast firm have to say about the keeping qualities of

Frou-Frou

The World's Greatest Wafer.

Seattle, Washington, Feb 1, 1910.

MacGreegor Specialty Company,
Toronto, Canada.

GENTLEMEN:

In reply to your favor of 27th ult., would beg to state that Frou-Frou is the best seller we know of on this coast, once an order is placed it means a repeater.

The goods have many great merits, one of the principal ones being they keep fresh, moist and sweet indefinitely, never knew of a single can becoming rancid. We placed Frou-Frou on the Great Northern R.R. Steamer "Minnesota," one of the largest in the world, and it is on salt water all the time and in the different tropics, and we reserved a can for a test as to its keeping qualities, and on its last arrival here December 22nd, 1909, the can that was left open was just as fresh and sweet as when placed on board, being nearly a year back and forward from Japan, China, Manilla and other far Eastern points to the port of Seattle.

Yours faithfully,
THE THOMPSON-GAY CO.

Grocers run no risk in stocking this honey-combed, cream-filled wafer, any season of the year. The crispness and flavor of Frou-Frou are always the same.

If you have not yet tasted the taste of Frou-Frou, you may do so by sending us your name and address, when a generous sample tin will be at once sent to you.

Dominion Guild Endorses Contract Selling Plan

Like the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, They Want to See it Rule—Annual Convention in Montreal—Are Opposed to Quantity Price and to Manufacturers Discriminating in Favor of a Few Retailers—An Open Letter to Traveling Salesmen—The New Officers.

Montreal, June 9.—A great deal of work was accomplished at the 20th annual meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild, held here on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

Besides topics of special interest to the wholesalers being discussed, there were addresses from a few manufacturers and retailers, who were present.

Representative wholesalers from Halifax to Vancouver were present.

President L. E. Geoffrion was in Europe, unfortunately, as was President Carrier, of the Provincial Guild.

As will have been already observed, the name of the association was changed back to the old style.

MONDAY MORNING SESSION.

Armand Chaput, as chairman of the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, welcomed the members, and trusted they would have as profitable and pleasurable a time as all had in Victoria last year.

Arch. Miller, of Quebec, was proposed as chairman, and read the President's address which was as follows:

"In meeting to-day to take up the 20th annual meeting of the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, it must be gratifying to all those present to realize that while we have not made the progress that could have been made, and would undoubtedly have been made, had all the trade more earnestly co-operated in this very necessary work, we have at least accomplished many things that have been a protection and benefit to the trade in general.

"It is because of the many difficulties that confront us—the many complex problems which have to be solved—the many questionable methods employed in business—that the necessity exists for the trade getting together from time to time to devise ways and means for bettering the business in which we are engaged.

"Firstly, then, careful thought will lead us to the conclusion that there are some features of the business that require our very special attention—some features of the business that, if left to go unchecked, would undoubtedly send the trade on the downward path, and lead to a condition that would be not only ruinous from a financial point of view, but that would be discreditable to the intelligence that must necessarily be represented for the successful conduct of a wholesale business.

Secret Rebate Evil.

"Perhaps we have no greater evil to contend with to-day than the deliberate violation of manufacturers' selling contracts by secretly rebating on many lines of goods, the margin on which, in many cases, is not sufficient to cover selling expenses. In this connection, a solution to this vexing and demoralizing practice should claim the attention of those present, if necessary, for a whole day, and ways and means can be adopted to prevent it, and no time should be lost. With a view to bringing in a report suggesting a remedy for the abuses that at present exist (which remedy, while it may not be an absolute cure, would at least work in that direction) would suggest the appointment of a committee to bring in a report to this meeting at the earliest possible date. A proper solution to this difficulty will undoubtedly build the grocery business on a solid foundation, and, in a great measure, solve a difficult problem with which we have to deal.

HUGH BLAIN, TORONTO.

In a measure this was done at the convention of the Ontario wholesale trade, and resolutions passed, and methods endorsed that if endorsed by the entire trade of the Dominion would go a long way towards putting the business on a better and more satisfactory basis. A great deal of time and effort was put forth to make the meeting of the Ontario wholesale trade of profit, and a success, and it will depend upon the action of this meeting how much benefit the trade of the entire Dominion can derive from the efforts recently put forth by the Ontario trade.

So much for the ethics of business. If we once get them on a good, honest basis it will be easier to accomplish results in other directions.

Now, having regard to heavy lines of importance to the trade that are at present being sold on a basis that cannot possibly cover the expenses of doing business, it would be well to direct your attention to some of the principal ones.

The Canned Goods Trade.

You have already received circulars from the secretary directing your attento the fact that if you desire to make a margin on canned goods the matter remains in your hands. So far as the Ontario trade is concerned, I am safe in saying that they desire to make a profit, and they realize that the only way to do it is to work in harmony with the Dominion Canners, Limited.

The situation in canned goods is greatly improved from the viewpoint of making satisfactory arrangements for sale of same, and we have with us to-day representatives of the Dominion Canners, Limited, who have come prepared to submit a proposition that will ensure the trade a margin, provided the trade in turn are prepared to co-operate with the Dominion Canners, Limited. It cannot be expected that they can accomplish this unless they have the cordial support of the trade. There is nothing clever about selling goods at cost, or a fraction over cost—such action rarely brings satis factory results, and undoubtedly a good healthy business on a paying margin is much more satisfactory to a reasonably inclined wholesale man than a large volume of trade with no margin.

We are handling some heavy items, the margin upon which does not cover selling expenses. Among them might be mentioned condensed milk and cream and laundry soaps. The volume of the latter is considerable, but not sufficient margin is made to cover the cost of selling.

The Ontario trade reached the conclusion that the only way of dealing with matters of this kind was through what they called a "Manufacturers' Committee," which was appointed at their annual meeting in Toronto, and they, in conjunction with a committee of retailers, will approach manufacturers jointly or singly as necessity requires.

In conclusion let me emphasize the fact that every man in the wholesale grocery business, having regard to his turnover, is equally interested in putting the grocery business on a healthy basis. Undoubtedly, progress has been delayed by the peculiar mental attitude of some of the trade. They have not displayed that generous disposition necessary in a work of this kind, but have rather inclined to run their own show believing that they will succeed best in that way. Every man is entitled to his opinion, but the fact cannot be overlooked, that, had no effort been made through an organization to improve trade conditions, business to-day would be badly demoralized, and would show very serious losses all round. It must not be overlooked that the conditions of trade to-day are largely due to the efforts of a few active workers in each locality. Unfortunately, it seems to be difficult to get all the trade to wake up to a realization of the necessity for cordial co-operation. The work we are doing must, of necessity, be educational, and the results accomplished must depend upon the state of development reached by the members of the trade, in properly appreciating the actual conditions that prevail in business, and the absolute conviction that only by united effort can we better ourselves. Successful association work requires hearty co-operation, and we are here to-day to, if possible, to think logically for the correction of trade evils, and intelligently negotiate for better arrangements. I have not addressed you in high-sounding phrases and paid complimentary remarks to those who deserve them, but have endeavored (and I hope I have succeeded to some extent at least) to impress you with the importance of the fact that these meetings involve hard and conscientious work if good results are to be attained. Properly applied, there is sufficient capital, energy, and ability connected with the grocery business to put it on a first class basis; but you can rest assured our success will depend upon the measure of unanimity that prevails, and the willingness on the part of all those connected with the trade to assume their fair share of the work necessary to accomplish results that we hope this meeting will bring forth.

Mr. Miller paid a nice tribute to the memory of the late Col. Davidson, who had been such a prominent and welcome figure at past meetings. A letter of condolence to Mrs. Davidson, from the Dominion Exchange, had been sent and acknowledged.

Messrs. Cross, Beckett and Cook, appointed last year to draw up a new set of by-laws, requested the appointment of another consulting committee for discussion of the by-laws arranged, on behalf of the assembled members, said committee to report Tuesday morning.

Messrs. Gross, Symons, Letellier, Smye and Ethier were appointed.

Endorse Work of Ontario Exchange.

When it was proposed that the Dominion Exchange should endorse the proceedings of the Ontario Exchange at their meeting April 25, 26, 27 and 28, Fred Smye was called upon to briefly outline what was accomplished at that convention.

He referred to the success of the meeting which was fully reported in The Canadian Grocer. The proceedings had attracted favorable comment all over the continent, many complimentary letters having been received from large United States wholesalers among others.

Settling the suggestion that the meeting approve of the minutes of the Ontario Exchange, the following motion was made :

Moved by W. C. Cross, seconded by J. S. Royer :

"That the Canada Whalesale Grocers' Exchange are in entire accord with the Contract Selling Plan in which the manufacturers exact a condition providing for a declaration when required by them.

"That the Canada Exchange put itself on record as being opposed to quantity price, believing it to be not only an inducement to encourage violations of selling contracts, but also hurtful to the best interests of the retail trade in general.

"That this Exchange also goes on record as being opposed to manufacturers discriminating in favor of a small percentage of retailers to the damage and detriment of the large percentage of retailers—such action on the part of manufacturers being unfair, and if persisted in by the manufacturers being a sufficient reason not to entitle the manufacturers to the support of either the retail or wholesale trade."

Carried unanimously.

MONDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

H. C. Beckett made a motion for the appointment of a committee to consider what might be done to improve conditions in the trade generally. Messrs. Beckett, Cross and Miller were named, and asked to report in the morning.

S. Villa brought up the question of status of members, raising the point as to whether a non-member of a local or provincial exchange could be nevertheless, a member of the Canada Exchange. This resulted in the following motion being put and carried :

"That it be incorporated in the by-laws of the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange that no firm shall be eligible for membership unless said firm is a member in good standing in the local and provincial exchanges.

G. E. Barbour suggested the appointment of a permanent secretary. In the discussion which followed, participated in by Messrs. A. H. Pafford, H. C. Beckett and Gardner, it developed that the Ontario Exchange had some experience with a paid secretary who devoted himself exclusively to their work. He proved unsatisfactory, through no fault of the secretary himself, but because it was found that better results were accomplished through efforts put forth by members of the Exchange themselves.

The subject was then dropped.

A cablegram from President L. E. Geoffrion was read :

To the Chairman :

I wish you best success and regret very much to be unable to be with you to work in the interest of the association. Best wishes to all.

L. E. GEOFFRION.

Canned Goods Arrangement.

R. L. Innes, S. Nesbitt and W. R. Drynan, representing the Dominion Canners' Limited, were present for a time, and entered into a short discussion with the members on the arrangements to be made for the marketing of the 1910 crop of canned fruits and vegetables. Before retiring a general suggestion as to the proposed plan was placed before the meeting by Mr. Drynan. Subsequently the matter was thoroughly threshed out, the chief point emphasized being that the grocery trade profits, both wholesale and retail must be retained. The canners said that the fact that their ownership of practically every factory in Canada amounting to anything would ensure economical operation, which, in turn they claimed made it certain that prices would always be fair to wholesaler, retailer and consumer.

All the discussion on this subject was preliminary in its character, the representatives of the canners' having been requested to meet the members of the Exchange again on Tuesday, when representatives of the various provincial exchanges would all be present.

TUESDAY MORNING.

Monday's good resolve to make an early start was not made good, and it was 9.45 when the meeting was called to order, instead of 9 o'clock.

Back to Old Name.

The new constitution and by-laws were up for discussion first thing.

One of the most important changes adopted was the decision to revert to the old name of the association—the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild. This was thought to be more suitable than the present name, which was chosen at the meeting in Quebec two two years ago.

The new by-laws were drawn up in such a way as to meet all requirements of the Dominion, Provincial and Local Guilds. After being read the by-laws were accepted, after some little discussion.

Retailers Represented.

E. M. Trowern and J. A. Beaudry, representing the Retail Merchants' Association were present, and addressed a few words to the meeting.

Mr. Trowern stated that it had come to be recognized that the only way to succeed now-a-days was through associations and associated effort. Much good had already been accomplished by the retail association, but after all, the retailers were only a unit, and to secure the best results, a unit in all branches—manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers—was required. The day was coming, he said, when these bodies would act as one, when improvements would be made which could not now be conceived.

Working Together.

Mr. Beaudry said that gradually the retailers all over Canada were beginning to work harmoniously together. Quebec grocers had been much interested in the resolutions adopted at the Ontario Guild meeting in April, on the occasion of the conference with the Ontario retail grocers. Local retailers were in entire accord with these resolutions, and heartily endorsed them.

Replying to a question by Mr. Beckett Mr. Beaudry said that the retailers in Quebec would be only too glad to meet Ontario grocers to form a committee, federal in its scope, for the purpose of conferring with a federal committe of the wholesale grocers to discuss ways and means of bettering trade conditions generally.

Concluding Mr. Beaudry remarked, that, speaking for the Quebec grocers, he believed thoroughly in the principle of distribution through the triple channel of manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer.

A Universal Sentiment.

Major Butler, of the Shredded Wheat company, stated that he had within three weeks attended the annual meetings of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, and the National Wholesale Grocers' Association. At these meetings he had found that the same sentiment prevailed as did at the present gathering. There was a pleasing insistent desire to eliminate trade abuses, and to improve conditions through association work.

Freight Weight Increase.

Mr. Tilston, manager of the Montreal Board of Trade Transportation Bureau, addressed the meeting on the proposed increase in minimum carload weights by Canadian railways.

He explained that the proposed table of increases would have to be submitted to the Board of Railway Commissioners when it would likely be submitted to various business bodies.

It is proposed to increase the minimum rate on classifications 1, 2 and 3 to 24,000 lbs., and classes 3, 4 and 5 from 24,000 lbs. to 30,000 lbs.

Hard on Retailers.

Fred. Smye said that the increase of the minimum rate from 24,000 lbs. to 30,000 lbs. would be a hardship of the greatest kind, on the retail grocers of Canada, in that a 24,000 lb. carload of assorted groceries, representing as it did an investment of some $2,000 on an average, meant about as big an order as any Canadian retailer was in a position to give. It was difficult now to make up a car; if the minimum weights were increased it would be almost impossible to do so.

Samuel Villa remarked that this was a second increase in minimum weights, and would accentuate the hardships felt at the time of the first increase.

Various suggestions were thrown out by different members, and it was finally decided to leave the matter in the hands of Mr. Tilston, and Mr. Walsh, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association's transportation expert. Mr. Tilston will be given the views of the grocery trade in different parts of Canada, as well as specific instances likely to be useful to the experts when making formal objection, before the Railway Commissioners, to the proposed change.

An Address to Travelers.

H. C. Beckett reported on the work of the special committee named to suggest trade improvements. He presented a written statement which was received with much approval. It was in the form of an address to travelers, suggested to be read, or otherwise conveyed to wholesale grocery salesmen by individual houses, the idea being to send copies to every wholesale grocery concern to make this possible. The address was as follows:

To the salesmen of Canada, engaged in the wholesale grocery trade.

Gentlemen,—"You are aware of the unsatisfactory condition of the grocery trade in every department, the buying department, the selling and settling department. To you, representing the selling department, we would say that you are the custodians of this, perhaps most important branch of our business. To you is entrusted the reputation of the house, its honor, its integrity, its capabilities, its success. It largely depends upon you what the commercial standing of the house shall be. We select you to represent us for the honesty, the intelligence, the ability which we believe you possess and we ask you to consider seriously the inherent responsibilities which you have assumed as representatives of the house. You must elevate the standard of business morals and the character of your house or you must debase the standard of business morals and the character of your house. Each salesman, therefore, whether he is in the sample room or on the road, carries with him the good name of his house, and it behooves him that it shall be kept by him unsullied.

ARMAND CHAPUT, MONTREAL, QUE.

The President of The Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild.

"The members of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild feel it to be their duty to make this task as easy as possible for you to perform, and have used their best efforts to make such arrangements and adopt such methods as will enable you to do a clean, straightforward, honest business. To enable you to exercise that sterling business ability characteristic of the genuine salesman without the fear of competition from unfair and dishonorable means. We desire to ask your special attention to the "Contract Selling Plan" in connection with the voluntary "Declaration" supported by the "Secret Commission Act" now embodied in the "Canadian Criminal Code."

Penalty For Secret Rebating.

"This section of the criminal code provides among other things a penalty 'upon conviction on indictment of two years' imprisonment or a fine not exceeding $2,500 or to both and upon summary conviction to imprisonment for six months with or without hard labor or a fine not exceeding $100 or to both who

(b) Corruptly gives or agrees to give or offers any gift or consideration to any agent as an inducement or reward or consideration to such agent for doing or forbearing to do or for having after the passing of this act done or forborne to do any act relating to his principals, affairs or business, or for showing or for forbearing to show favor or disfavor to any person with relation to his principals, affairs or business, or

(c) Knowingly gives to an agent, or being an agent knowingly uses with intent to deceive his principal, any receipt, account or other document in respect of which the principal is interested and which contains any statement which is false or erroneous or defective in any material particular and which to his knowledge is intended to mislead the principal.'

"You will observe the sub-section 'b' provides against a salesman or traveler giving a clerk or agent without the knowledge of the clerk or agent's principal any rebate or consideration, and subsection 'c' provides against a salesman or traveler giving a rebate or consideration to any person without the knowledge of his, the salesman or traveler's principal. The seller, therefore, being an agent cannot give a bribe or inducement of any kind to anyone without his principal's knowledge without being criminally liable and even with the consent of his own principal cannot give a clerk a bribe or inducement without the knowlege of the clerk's principal without being criminally liable. It is equally clear that a principal cannot give a clerk a bribe or consideration either without the knowledge of the clerk's principal without being criminally liable.

"This construction of the Act by the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild is upheld by the opinion of E. F. B. Johnston, who enjoys the highest reputation as a criminal lawyer. This view of the Act has never been seriously questioned by the grocery trade. The trouble has been to get evidence of these illegal acts. It is here, therefore, where the usefulness of the Declaration comes in and which in accordance with the recommendation of the Guild must be taken by the seller when called upon in case of a violation or a supposed violation of the Act.

Has Right to Refuse.

"It is, of course, the right of anyone to refuse to give this Declaration either from a sense of being guilty of the offense or from any other cause, but you must remember that your principal is under contract with the manufacturer that you or himself or both will take the Declaration when called upon and if you or he refuses, the manufacturer is pledged to the trade not to sell his products to your principal, or impose an agreed penalty for breach of contract. It is therefore imperative if you remain a grocery salesman that you should take this Declaration.

"'There is no shuffling, there the action lies in his true nature; and we ourselves compelled, even to the teeth and forhead of our faults, to give in evidence,' as Shakespeare puts it.

"It is, therefore, clearly established that our contracts with the manufacturers must be observed if we wish to remain in the grocery business. Both you and ourselves must adhere rigidly to the prices and terms stipulated and you will also observe that in the form of Declaration recommended, you have to swear that you have not sold sugar, tobacco or other proprietary goods at less than the established prices, nor given more discount off for cash on any class of goods than provided for by the established rules of the trade.

"These arrangements we are pledged to adhere to and all of us, both principals and employes, are in honor bound to faithfully carry out.

"Gentlemen, we want you to be honorable business men. We want to be honorable business men ourselves. We want you to keep the interest of your house in view. We want you to keep the interests of your customers in view. We want your relationship with the retail trade to be dignified and fair. We want you to assure the retail merchant that the wholesale merchant will be ever watchful of his welfare. We want you to discourage the sale of any but goods that will afford the retailer a reasonable profit. We want you to assure him that his competitor cannot buy proprietary articles at less than he can. The retail merchants are honorable business men. We want you with their assistance and with our assistance to place the trade, both wholesale and retail on a satisfactory basis so that we may all be able to make a reasonable profit and raise the grocery business to a position that will be the emulation of all other branches of trade."

A Mistaken Idea.

Mr. Beckett remarked that the address was suggested by the fact that when the secret rebates act was passed many wholesalers apparently led their travelers to believe that it meant nothing. This was altogether wrong. The Government would assuredly take action whenever there was ground for prosecution.

A nominating committee was appointed, consisting of H. C. Beckett, C. H. Gross, K. MacKenzie, J. F. Edgett and Mr. Prevost.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The morning session lasted until half past one, and it was nearly four o'clock before the meeting convened in the afternoon.

Sugar on the Slate.

Most of the time at the disposal of the convention was occupied in a lengthy and aminated discussion of the sugar question. Owing to the increased cost of doing business the sugar trade was deemed to be in an unsatisfactory condition, and it was felt that steps should be taken to improve conditions. The matter was referred to a committee for investigation.

Canned Goods Arrangement.

The question of canned goods came up and was finally settled by the adoption of a selling plan along the general lines of past arrangements, which is intended to result in an equitable deal for manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer.

THE WEDNESDAY SESSION.

The most important matter attended to on the last day of the convention was the election of officers. The result of the ballot was as follows:

President, Hugh Blain, Toronto, Ont.; vice-presidents, Robt. Kelly, British Columbia; W. Georgson, Alberta; H. B. Gordon, Manitoba; Geo. E. Bristol, Ontario; Archibald Miller, Quebec; R. F. Randolph, New Brunswick; R. M. Symons, Nova Scotia.

Next Convention in Toronto.

A telegram was read from the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States, wishing all success to the meeting and a reply sent.

It was decided to hold the next meeting in Toronto. A vote of thanks to the Montreal trade for their courtesy during the convention was passed. Mr. Smye moving it regretted that the pressure of business made it impossible for members to more fully fill in with the entertainment plans of the Montrealers. A vote of thanks to the Board of Trade for the use of the Council Chamber for meetings was also passed, as was a vote thanking Mr. Miller for the manner in which he conducted meetings in his capacity as chairman. In the afternoon the delegates were entertained to a trip around the harbor.

TRADELETS.

The supply of "taffy" ran short after Tuesday morning.

The Maritime Provinces were well represented as usual.

Kenneth Mackenzie, the old reliable from Winnipeg, was right there.

Glad to see C. H. Gross come all the way from Vancouver. That's the right spirit.

"Foxy Grandpa" kept good order and conducted the meetings in business-like fashion.

Fred Smye is certainly a hustler—he and Harry Beckett make a great team, alright.

G. E. Barbour is a St. John man who doesn't wear velvet gloves when he is talking.

We missed brother Randolph from Fredericton. Must be doing a heavy business down east.

The Carson-Sutherland combination from the Limestone City operated together right through.

The "Baby Doll' wore a happy smile at all times—besides an appropriated carnation on Tuesday.

Friend Provost has the right idea and he's not the kind that, to quote Harry Beckett, "lays down."

A. H. Pafford knows what he wants and has a mighty good idea of the shortest way to get there.

The delegates were entertained at luncheon, at the Canada Club, Tuesday at noon, by the Montreal Guild.

Secretary Cook did everything to make the visitors feel at home—as he always does when the convention is held in Montreal.

Fred Smye knew what he was talking about when he said wholesalers made more money by attending the meetings than by staying away.

Armand Chaput, although he took a back seat, entered into the discussions—and was on hand when the white flowers were going round.

Major Butler: "The secret rebater will get the retailer, if not to-day, then to-morrow. The only way to avoid being caught is have nothing to do with the gentleman."

"The Little Iron Man" worked just as hard as ever. Some very nice things were said about him by the members of the Guild, who can appreciate the arduous tasks he undertakes.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

Cleveland Grocers Decide on the Weight Plan — Electric Fan Contrivance For Driving Flies From The Window—Chatham Grocer Advertises Source of Produce—Nothing Lost Through Early Closing.

Decide to Sell by Weight.

Cleveland, O., June 8.—Four hundred of the leading grocery stores of Cleveland, O., last week inaugurated the plan of selling vegetables and groceries by weight and not by measure.

This change comes as a voluntary concession on the part of the Retail Grocers' Association. It probably means that within a short time the dry measure method of sale and purchase of these commodities will be practically abolished. The Cleveland consumer now asks for 12 pounds of apples, peaches, beets, carrots, tomatoes, onions, etc., instead of a peck, or three pounds instead of two quarts. Irish potatoes are bought at 15 pounds for a peck.

The experiment had already been made by some of the big stores and they report that their customers were well satisfied.

Electric Fans Scare Flies.

Bracebridge, Ont., June 9.—Grocers of this town have little trouble in keeping flies from the window. This is how it's done. Bracebridge has a wonderful electric lighting system giving 24 hours' service. Nearly every store owns one or two electric fans, which, being placed in the display window, speed with such lightning rapidity that flies and other insects have no time to linger at the temptations before them.

Telling Whence Produce Comes.

Chatham, Ont., June 9.—W. J. Easton, a Chatham merchant adopts a novel idea with reference to his holiday meat trade. In his advertising, which frequently takes the form of reading notices, he gives the names of stock raisers from whom his cattle, calves, lambs and hogs are purchased. For instance, in Thursday's paper he states: "There are some exceptionally fine Easter calves . . . fattened by Thos. Smith, concession 5, Raleigh, especially for the Easter trade." In his advertising last Christmas Mr. Easton quoted probably a dozen or more stock raisers of prominence as his source of supply.

The idea, something new in the meat trade here, should not only interest grocers who run meat shops in connection, but might also be adaptable to the handling of butter, eggs, maple syrup, and summer fruits among other lines. It is at present not an uncommon thing for customers to patronize a certain grocery store because it handles Mrs. So-and-so's butter—though, in the event of that lady's butter being sold out, the customer is generally satisfied with any other butter the grocer may recommend.

The scheme of utilizing the name of the actual producer as a drawing card for the grocery seems to offer possibilities. Of course, there is the danger that the grocer may be building up prestige for some fellow merchant to whom the butter woman or other producer may later see fit to transfer her supply. Nevertheless, the mere act of specifying where a certain line of produce comes from usually carries a great deal of weight with ordinary buyers who, as a general rule, don't know the producer named from Adam.

Loses Nothing by Closing Early.

Toronto, June 9.—Another enthusiastic worker for early closing and the Wednesday afternoon holiday the year round is A. A. Martin, 202 Lippincott Street. For his own satisfaction he has given the early closing a trial and is quite satisfied he has lost nothing by it.

Mr. Martin says a man working until 10 and 12 o'clock every night is not capable of doing his business justice the next day. He closes at 7.30 in the evening and sales after that hour would scarcely pay for the gas, he says.

P. R. Morrison, of 127 Lippincott St., is another strongly in favor of shorter hours and both gentlemen would like to hear the opinions of other Toronto merchants.

TRADE NOTES.

G. K. Nauta, representing "De Jong's" cocoas and chocolates, Wormerveer, Holland, is making a business tour of Canada. He was in Toronto this week and will visit Hamilton and London before going to the Pacific Coast via Owen Sound, Fort William, and Winnipeg. He also represents a Rotterdam wine and liquor firm.

The Hamilton, Ont., Commercial Travelers' Association has presented the Hamilton Sanitarium with a furnished cottage, costing $1,200. At a recent enthusiastic gathering of about 300 Hamilton citizens and the sanitarium committee, E. J. Fenwick, vice-pres. of the Travelers' Association made the presentation and J. J. Evell, the chairman of the sanitarium committee replied.

FRUIT AND GRAIN CROP OUTLOOK

The present is an anxious time for growers of crops, both fruit and grains. Too much or too little moisture means much to them.

This year, however, none in eastern Canada can complain of too little rain, but for a time it looked as if the west would suffer on this account. However, timely rains, and snow in some parts, relieved the situation and from present prospects the west will yield as good, if not better, crops than in 1907. The acreage is much more.

In British Columbia the fruit outlook is for a heavy crop; in fact, growers look for the largest in history. All the trees seem to have come through the winter without the damage that was sustained a year ago.

The weather in the Niagara peninsula has for some time been backward and cool, but that of the past week was much better.

There promises to be a fine crop of strawberries there. The early varieties are ripening, and the Williams, which is largely grown in that section, have set for a heavy crop and will begin to ripen about June 20.

Raspberries look well, but sweet cherries will be medium to light, the rainy weather affecting many orchards.

Plums, the Japanese variety, have set a light crop, but European varieties will be a medium to full crop.

Pears of nearly all varieties have set a full crop. Grapes will only be a medium crop from present appearances. Apples had a full bloom and are setting well, and many orchardists are spraying thoroughly for codlin moth.

From present appearances there will be, on the whole, a good fruit crop. Work is well advanced and there has been little or no injury from frost.

Tomatoes are backward, but warm weather will remedy this. Fruit lands are selling freely at high prices.

A SUGAR SCHOOL.

Something unique in the way of technical education is to be attempted at Glasgow, Scotland. This is none other than what is termed a sugar school, where young men are to be technically trained in regard to matters appertaining to the sugar trade.

The particular training is designed to fit the pupils of the school to take positions as managers, engineers, overseers and chemists at the sugar mills, which are located in different parts of the Empire.

Scotland has for many generations been famous as a centre for refining sugar. Some of the wealthy men in Glasgow are ambitious enough to think that her sons may take a greater part than heretofore in the manufacturing of the raw material, and they are backing up their ambition with substantial contributions of money in order that technical educational facilities may be provided.

Who knows but possibly the young men trained at the proposed technical sugar school at Glasgow may ultimately assist in solving the problem of the production of beet sugar in Canada, which has not by any means yet realized the anticipation of its promoters.

THE APPLE QUESTION AGAIN.

New light has been thrown on an old subject by a large United States apple exporter.

Recently he told of his troubles during the past year: "Farmers do not even stop at putting seconds and culls in with No. 1's, but even fill in with cider apples."

The result was to lower the whole market tone to such an extent that many of the largest exporters were unable to realize a profit.

This statement was made regarding the U. S. pack, but Government records here show that the same thing has been going on for some years past, and instead of being on the decrease, is becoming more and more general.

If our farmers could only be made to feel how our apple trade with England was suffering from just such small trickery, there would be a stop to it from most quarters. Unfortunately, they do not seem to realize that Canadian apples are gradually losing their pre-eminence in the English market.

A Canadian exporter estimated that fully half of our export of No. 1's would show tricky packing. This is becoming a matter of more than local interest. It is a national question, and one which so far has failed to reflect much credit on the Canadian farmer.

The only remedy seems to be to keep preaching, and wherever possible, have the commission men take up the matter, insisting on honestly packed apples. Even the numerous convictions for violations of the law on this matter have seemingly had little effect.

It is sincerely to be hoped that this year will see an improvement.

ANNOUNCE FLOUR DECLINE.

As will be seen from a report in another part of this paper, the retailers of Halifax, N.S., are alive to the advantages secured by the recent decline in flour.

They are featuring this fact in their advertisements and are very wise in doing so as a good many of the general public will patronize their stores for flour when a reduction in price has been announced.

It would be advisable to not only feature flour just now in the newspaper advertisements, but in the window as well, providing a few show cards are used to announce the decline and the lower price. This ought to bring good results.

B. C. RETAILERS COMPLAIN.

Another increase is noted in hams and bacon in the British Columbia market. One brand of hams is up from 22¾ to 23½ cents, while bacon has advanced from 28½ to 29½ cents.

These items fluctuate more than any others there, and it all depends on the stock on hand. If the stocks are heavy, the price is dropped a fraction of a cent for an inducement to the retailer, and when the stocks are low, the grocer pays a little more for the same article.

There has been more than one complaint in British Columbia, not about hams and bacon alone, but of other lines, the prices of which are handled in the same way. On the coast, the opportunity is greater than in large cities in the east, since the point of supply is not so convenient, and a few days' delay makes a big difference in the stock in hand.

FROM THE FAR EAST.

Making a Selling Window of Vegetables and Fruit

A Simple Arrangement That With Show Cards and Price Tickets is Sure to Bring Business — How It Can Be Constructed and The Vegetables and Fruits to be Used—Designed For a Corner Window.

The accompanying suggestion is for a fruit and vegetable window. While it is simple and does not require much ingenuity to construct it, it should be a good drawing card for any grocery store.

As will be observed from the shape, it is designed for a corner window, but the same idea can practically be carried out in a one-sided display.

The foundation is just a common board one, built somewhat on the stair fashion, but with slanting steps and a level platform on top.

Around the base of the window may be placed cans of vegetables such as corn, peas or tomatoes, end to end. If the labels are turned up a more attractive effect will be secured.

Next to the cans may be placed a row of carrots as suggested in the drawing, only they should be packed close together to hide the window floor. A row of beets similarly packed might come next. On the second landing corn on the ear is one suggestion, but, of course, the grocer may make this greens of some kind, asparagus, peas in the pod or any other vegetable he wishes to sell. If corn is used a row of canned corn above with the labels up would be appropriate.

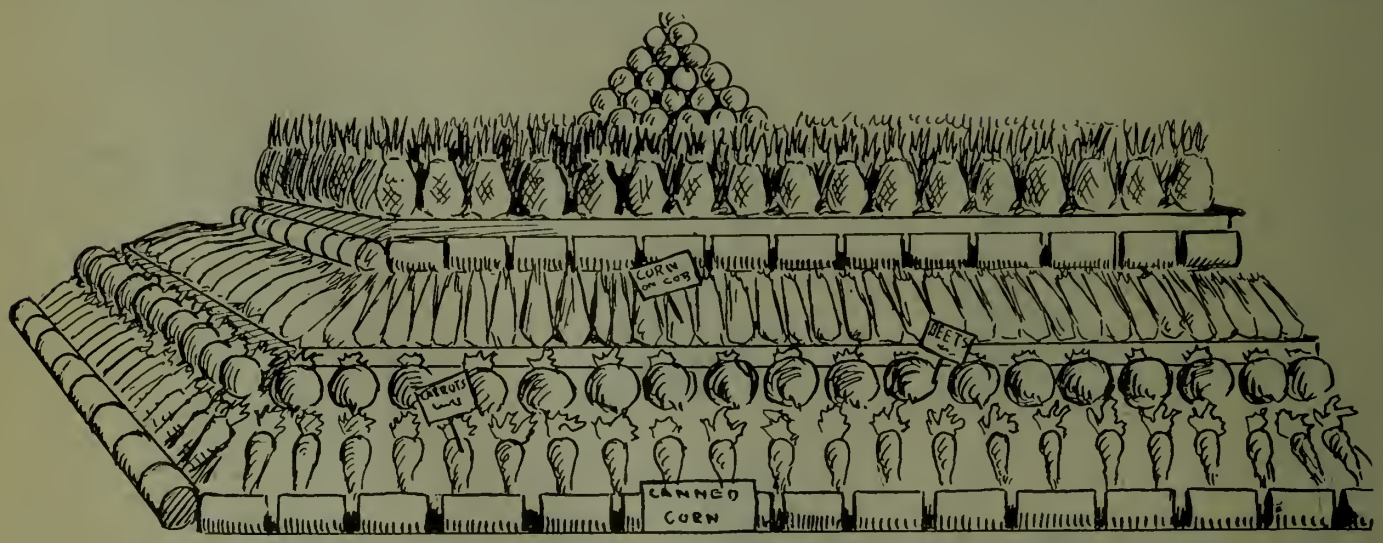
Use Tomatoes For Color.

To give a little color to the display use tomatoes by piling them neatly all the way round.

The top landing in the drawing made by The Canadian Grocer's artist is allotted to fruit—pineapples and oranges—pineapples, because these are now in big demand for preserving, and oranges as they have become a grocery staple with a demand all the year round. The pines occupy the entire platform, with the exception of a neat pile of oranges in the centre, and they are arranged symmetrically and close by each other.

To make such a display a good seller a few window cards telling of the superior quality of the various articles, their origin, etc., should be scattered here and there. The price in such a case should also be given.

It is almost as simple to make a neat display like the above as it is to throw the different fruits and vegetables carelessly into the window. Any clerk who has the interests of his employer at heart would be glad to arrange it if it were suggested to him. If this is done The Grocer would be glad to learn of the results.



A Suggestion For Dressing a Window With Canned and Fresh Vegetablesand Fruits.

NEW OFFICERS ELECTED.

Winnipeg, June 9.—The Caterers' Association, of Winnipeg, which comprises the wholesale and retail grocers, butchers and confectioners of the city, met on the evening of June 2 and elected the officers for the coming year. President Ald. Wilton acted as chairman. The vote ran as follows: President, E. Tugwell, Foley Bros. & Larson; vice-president, C. E. Christic, grocer; treasurer, W. A. Bartram, provision merchant; secretary, E. V. Battley, butcher; committee, Harper Wilson, Ald. Wilton, Ald. Gowler, B. Holman.

The association is to meet next week again to make arrangements for the annual picnic. Several invitations have been received from outside points offering sites for a pienic ground. It is expected that Winnipeg beach will be the chosen place but it is difficult to get a date when the grounds are not occupied.

SOCIABILITY AND HARMONY.

J. A. McCrea & Son, Guelph, Ont., and their staff are among the foremost of Ontario grocers in promoting a social feeling among the members of a retail store. Recently they met at the home of one of the staff where a pleasant social evening was spent, and at the same time presented R. J. E. McCrea, on the eve of his marriage, with an address and a handsome club bag. This retail firm regularly holds little social functions and the result is that all work in perfect harmony in the store.

TRADE NOTES.

Theodore O. Leonard, a Detroit traveling salesman known to many in Canada died recently.

Geo. Ruppel one of the grocers, of Elmira, Ont., is building a new residence which when completed is expected to be one of the finest homes in that pretty town.

The Dominion Government has subsidized a property in Palmerston, Ont., for a Public Cold Storage. It will be operated by the Palmerston Cold Storage Co.

Thomas Burton and Hazen John Burton, of St. Andrews, Charlotte County, N. B., have entered into a general partnership for carrying on a retail grocery business at St. Andrews, under the name of H. J. Burton & Co.

R. W. Wilson who was head clerk for Steel Bros., Fergus, Ont., for some twelve years has purchased the grocery and confectionery business of A. H. Foot, of the same town.

Davidson & Hay, Limited, wholesale grocers, of Toronto, are suing J. Broughton and W. Ball, retail grocers, for $336 and costs in County Court. Plaintiffs say they sold goods to defendants for $1,333.73, and that a deposit of $1,010.63 has been paid. The balance of $323.10 includes $12.97 interest. Mr. Ball claims that he dissolved partnership with Mr. Broughton before the goods were purchased, which the latter admits to be right.

HELPS HIM IN HIS BUSINESS

W. J. Ireland, Tottenham, Ont., writes as follows:—Thank you for your valuable "Grocer" which I appreciate a great deal. It helps me in my business very much.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS.
Rice.—Up 15c.
Seed Tapioca.—Up ½c
Ginger and Mace.—Very firm.
Sugar.—Firm.

Montreal, June 9th, 1910.

The feature of last week was the 15c. rise in all lines of rice. This change took place just too late for publication in the previous issue. It has had a decidedly beneficial effect on trade in this line, buying being indulged in freely.

The short sugar war in the States attracted considerable attention. It caused refined prices in New York to drop to the $5 mark.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week the wholesale grocers met here in Montreal. A full account appears on another page of this issue.

Dr. McCarrey, government health officer, has been very busy of late confiscating spoiled foodstuffs. Among the items were a lot of canned lobsters.

The constant rain during the past few weeks has had a bad effect on trade in general. Collections are poor and buyers seem to be afraid to lay in any large stocks. It is to be hoped matters will improve soon.

Sugar.—Since the recent advance there has been a slight weakening in the price of raws, and U. S. refiners took advantage of it to start a short cut price war. The two concerned were the Federal and the American Sugar Refining Companies. Prices touched the $5 mark. Evidently the matter has been settled, as prices are again almost normal. Trade is only fair here.

Syrups and Molasses.—Molasses trade is only fair at present. The bulk of the trade passing is for choice, but there is a fairly even division in all lines.

Evaporated Apples.—During the past few days local demand has been stimulated to a considerable extent. The cause is thought to be the large buying of late for export. The poorer grades are pretty well exhausted and most of the trade passing is in the higher grades.

Beans and Peas.—There is little change in the bean situation. Export trade is still holding its advantage. So far, this buying has had little effect on local trade, but there are signs of coming activity in case it continues.

Peas are quiet at unchanged prices.

Rice and Tapioca.—Just too late for publication last week all lines of rice went up 15c. This change is ascribed to the large increase in demand in China for foreign rices, partcularly Burma. At the advance the sale is brisk.

Tapioca is firm and seed tapioca has gone up. It is now quoted at 6-7c. Sales are only fair, however.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—There is a first class demand for vegetables of all the standard kinds at prevailing prices. Fruits are somewhat dull in can, but in glass the trade is quite considerable. It is thought that the growing ease with which green fruits can now be distributed has had a slackening effect on the canned fruit trade.

TORONTO—"I never saw such a strong demand for canned goods at this time of the year as is now being felt," were the words in which a local dealer referred to the conditions in that market. ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Currants—Growing firmer.

Raisins—Strong market.

Sugar—Steady.

Toronto, June 9, 1910.

Several features regarding the markets should interest grocers. Sugar, currants, raisins, rice and tapioca all need watching, and careful study of any conditions that may affect these markets. The weather man and Governmental strictions as to the extent of the crop have been at work hand-in-hand in Greece, with the result that the old stock of currants is quoted high, and in sympathy with this condition the new crops are expected to be opened at high quotations.

Raisins and olives in Spain are reported to be suffering from drought, and as yet no reports have been offered to the contrary. At any rate, the market is firm.

In spite of the tendency to weakness of some time ago following the last advance, those who are following the sugar market cannot see any signs of lower prices. The dull weather of late has not had a helpful effect on the sugar market, which with real summer conditions is expected to brace materially. The advance in rice is somewhat unexpected. It has not yet become general, but is expected to before long.

A United States rice dealer reports that the weather conditions are still unfavorable to the planting and growth of rice, and unless abundant rains come to the rescue the coming crop will be much less than expected. The crop of the past season was bountiful and excellent in quality and during the era of low prices large quantities of inferior grades were ground up for stock, low-priced Japans being used in place of screenings, which later, under renewed demand for brewing purposes, advanced sharply. Recent estimates of supply ahead reveal an extraordinary situation; and instead of an extraordinary surplus, it is now believed that the carryover will be less than last year.

Sugar—The sugar market is quiet though steady and firm, running along firmly since the last increase. There was a slight weakness following the higher quotations, but the market stiffened again and is now firm. Future options are higher than those offered for this month in raw sugars, and it is surmised from this that prices will go higher before long. Cool weather has had a certain depressing effect on the sugar market and dealers are waiting for fine weather.

Dried Fruits—As pointed out in last week's issue of The Grocer, the dried fruit market is at present particularly interesting. The reports which have been received regarding the currant crop in Greece have been confirmed by additional cablegrams, and certain brokers have advised jobbers that in view of the reiterated reports that they believe it is not a case of exaggeration, and that the opening prices may be the lowest of the season. Already during the past week there has been reported an advance of one shilling on the old stock in Europe, and the speculative quotations on the new stock have gone up the same amount in sympathy with the movement in the olds. Raisins are almost equally firm, and are being quoted at ½c higher than previous prices.

Prunes are also steady. In fact, the dried fruit market is altogether interesting and changes may be expected in more than one of the items.

Winnipeg, June 9, 1910.

The people of the west have been disappointed over the lateness of spring. The weather during March and part of April was exceptionally fine but May was a disagreeable month. When June opened and it was still cold and wet, the feeling of disappointment grew and was fully warranted by the great falling off of trade. It is believed to be true that atmospheric conditions more readily affect trade in Western Canada than in any other section of the country for reasons quite unknown, except it be the feeling that weather has everything to do with the prospective wheat crop of the country.

To-day it can confidently be said that the condition of the grocery trade is absolutely the reverse of what it was three weeks ago when a wonderful buoyancy prevailed. Prices have either been reduced or weakened and it would seem that retailers have almost quit buying. A few hours will dispel the pessimistic feeling. The snow that now lies three inches deep at Calgary and Edmonton will before this goes to press be gone, and the strain on the wheat growth will be lifted.

Of course collections are not good now. Under any conditions they would not be heavy at this particular season. But the good trade of the past few months and the increased population and other encouraging circumstances will keep money well circulated.

Foreign Dried Fruits.—The general line of dried fruits from California are likely to advance shortly. The occasion of the stronger market is the reports of severe damage by frost, which report is daily being certified to from the various centres of the State. It is peculiar that although prospects are for a stronger market, yet the trade is weak locally just now and recent importations of Valencia raisins had to be reduced in order to stimulate the output. When this slight backset is remedied no such prices as are now being offered will prevail.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, June 9, 1910.

With the reduction of 30c per bbl. in flour, there has been no reduction in the price of bread. This decrease has been looked for, since the increase was made at the time flour went up, and if the cause holds good one way, the consumer declares it should act the other way. Customers in more than one instance are making complaints to the grocer, but he can do nothing except look pleasant and try and point out that he is not the one to blame.

There has been a general advance in olive oil, one firm jobbing at from $3.90 to $4 per dozen quarts.

A surprise to the ordinary man is contained in the prices for canned strawberries and raspberries. Generally the strawberries are the highest, but there is considerable difference in their favor just now.

The potato market was never in the condition it is this spring. Last winter, prices were high, and it was hard to get good potatoes, in fact it was declared that Ashcrofts had all been used. When the warmer weather began to come, potatoes found their way in, and now the market is flooded with them, Ashcrofts and all. Ashcrofts were at $40, but now they are quoted at $20, and those who have any quantity are selling at even less to get rid of them. Locals are offered at the buyer's price. Evidently they overstepped themselves, and the holding has brought less money than if they were sold first thing last fall.

Some good eastern butter is to hand in 56 lb. boxes, at 30c to 32c, the price being the same for boxes or bricks.

California sweet oranges are jobbed at $3.50 all sizes, while navels run from $3.50 to $4.50, according to size. The sweets, although they do not present such a good appearance and have a few pips, are held by many to be the better fruit, even if the price is lower.

Strawberries are coming on the market in greater quantity and are $3 a crate. The crop this year promises to be good.

The butter markets are a little easier this weak. More fresh made dairy is now coming on the market than for some time, and in consequence the price has a downward tendency. Some good dairy butter was offering this week at 25 cents per pound.

Eggs are in light demand. The receipts are fairly heavy, but the price remains firm at 19 cents. Some of the dealers who had large stocks on hand

A Toronto Grocer's Success

Standing in the store of a successful Toronto grocer the other day a gentleman heard a lady ask the price of oranges. "30c. and 40c.," replied the grocer, a man of few words, and added, "The 40c. are the better buying." The lady took the 40c. The gentleman also wanted oranges and he too followed the grocer's advice.

To the Manufacturer or Wholesaler——

If it were possible to employ a traveller who could call on 7,000 of the best dealers all through Canada every week, what salary would you figure he'd be worth—even supposing he did nothing more than go in and shake hands with these dealers, under such circumstances they'd be glad to see him.

Would he be worth $200, $300 or $500 per week? Many a house would pretty nearly let him fix his own salary.

Equip an advertisement in the Canadian Grocer with a verbal handshake for every dealer in Canada, and a frank, brief, pointed talk about your goods and you add a traveller to your staff who will make 7.000 calls a week for you at a salary of $4 to $8 a week—less than you would pay a first-class stenographer.

Of course this traveller won't displace any of your regular salesmen, but he will help them to sell more goods and open up more new accounts.

sold eggs a little lower, but the market price is the figure stated.

All jobbers say that the high price of pork products is restricting sales to a large extent. The demand for lard, hams, and bacon shows a heavy decline, and there is not much prospect of the prices becoming easier.

One of the principal changes in the grocery market is a drop in the price of flour. The decline is about 25 cents per barrel on all grades. There is only a fair demand for flour for household use at this season of the year. Some of the retail dealers are featuring flour prices in their advertisements this week.

The fruit dealers report business brisk. Fruits of all kinds are now coming on the market in good supply. Collections were a little slow towards the end of the month, but since then there has been an improvement. Rhubarb is scarcer than usual, much of it having been killed off by frosts early in the season. Bananas are in full demand, and the quality of the fruit in recent shipments is much improved. The price ranges from $1.75 to $2.40 per bunch.

United States cabbage dropped one dollar per barrel this week. It is now quoted at $2 per crate. U.S. beans are selling at $1.75 per box. Pineapples are in good supply and are selling at $3 per crate. Bermuda onions are still on the market, and are quoted at $1.50 per box.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., June 9.

With the advent of warmer weather there has been increased activity in nearly every branch of the commercial markets. Eggs have dropped to 19 and 20 cents a dozen for new laid stock, and 17 to 18 cents for the case variety. Butter is also cheaper, being quoted at 22 to 23c in tubs and 24c to 27c in rolls. Bacon has advanced 2 cents per pound and is now selling at 18c to 20c wholesale. Both Manitoba and Ontario flours declined during the week. Manitoba's are now quoted at $6.15 to $6.25 and Ontario's, $5.45 to $5.75.

All over the province now the farmers are busy putting in their crops and the indications point to a much greater yield this year than last season. Vegetables are well advanced and are reported fully a month ahead of other years. The crop of hay, grain and potatoes will be considerably larger than in past years and 1910 will doubtless be a banner year with the farmers unless something unforeseen occurs.

Manitoba Fish Exports High Since First of Year

In View of High Prices of Meat in the U. S., the Latter Country Imported More in Two Months Than During 1909—Steps Being Taken to Preserve Fisheries in That Province—Conditions Existing There.

Winnipeg, June 9.—Of the many industrial enterprises in Manitoba opened during the past few years perhaps the fish trade has been one of the most important. It took many years for the people of this country to recognize that there was a wealth of resource in the fisheries of this province.

Until about six years ago the three great lakes were teeming with fish of all varieties and no one seized the idea of their tremendous commercial value, except possibly a few local fishermen who found a ready demand for a limited number within the province.

When the trade did open however it opened large, for a strongly capitalized firms from below the border began fishing operations with a view to supplying an eager market in the large cities of that country.

As a consequence within three years after this export trade began it was reported that our provincial fisheries were being rapidly depleted, and by foreign operators. Nothing was done, however, by the authorities for many months and the exportations increased, and our fish were growing more scarce. Fortunately however (from the standpoint of those who were creating the agitation), the large export firm with unlimited interests elsewhere, failed, and of course the fishing to a large extent ceased.

About this time, however, some action was being taken toward the restoration of fish in the lakes and also in the way of the curtailment of exportation by foreign operations.

$226,000 Worth Exported.

The Dominion Fishermen Commission which made the investigation was the means of stimulating the U. S. custom officers to gather some interesting information.

It was pointed out that the export during the last few months has reached tremendous proportions. It is estimated that the value of the fish export during January and February amounted to over $226,000 while the entire fish export for 1909 amounted to about $170,000. This is accounted for by the fact that meat prices in the States have made great advances recently. The great part of the export during the past winter has been frozen fish which were sent to almost every part of the country. White fish is the principal fish being exported, but there has been an increased demand for all grades, and the market has gone up to an average of about seven cents to the exporter.

What has been true of the export trade however, is not altogether true of the trade in this province or this country.

One of the wholesale fish companies states that the trade here is not particularly active, and that prices have not been enhanced. He also states that the Dominion Government was justified in curtailing the exportations from local waters, but as yet the damage has not been serious.

"In fact," he states, "with the present restrictions and with no summer fishing except on Lake Winnipeg for two and one half months, and with the further limitations of a 2,000,000 pound summer catch, the depletion will quickly be made up. Local fish dealers do not want to over-fish the lakes. It is to our interest to preserve them and severe restrictions may at the same time be necessary and an injury to the trade."

Lakes Were Overfished.

In connection with the Dominion Fisheries Commission report, it sets forth the belief that all the lakes of Manitoba had been over-fished, that some of the more valuable species such as whitefish and pickerel, had decreased very seriously in size and abundance, and that sturgeon was on the point of extinction. It sets forth that the evidence showed conclusively that the Manitoba fisheries had been unduly controlled by foreign fish operators, who have dictated the prices of fish and secured the major profits; that the better grades of fish were sent tothe United States, which curtailed the home supply; and urged, in view of the rapidly increasing population, that every effort should be made to restore the fisheries. It is urged that summer fishing on Lakes Winnipegosis and Manitoba be prohibited, and that on and after January 1, 1911, the closed season be applied with a view to restoring the pickerel and whitefish.

WANT EARLIER CLOSING.

The grocery clerks in the retail stores in the business district of St. John, N. B., are endeavoring to induce the proprietors to close the stores at 6.30 p.m. instead of 7 p.m. as at present. The clerks contend that under the present system they usually have to wait at the stores until about 7.15 which makes a long period between dinner hour at 12 o'clock and supper about 7.30. Several of the employers have expressed sympathy with the movement.

Little Girl: "That bun you sold me yesterday had a fly in it, and muvver says you ought to give me another one."

Baker: "I can't do that; but tell your ma that if she'll let me have the fly back I'll give her a currant for it."—Punch.

Present Heavy Production of Cheese and Butter

Reports From Country a Unit in This Respect—Prices in Each are Lower—Butter May be Cheaper—Lard Slightly Easier—Production of Eggs Still Continues at High Figure — Provision Market Quiet.

Butter is presenting a feature in the heavy output that is now being recorded. In spite of the fact that Quebec is shipping cream across the border and in other parts of the country the same practice obtains, the manufacture of butter and cheese is far in excess of the output for the same period last year.

The indications are abundant outputs of both butter and eggs. In regard to the former, prices are easier and it is believed that they have not yet reached the minimum. From Ireland, Holland, England, etc., the manufacture of butter is equally high and export trade has suffered and prices have lost their firmness. Cheese is also easier.

The production of eggs continues at a high mark with prices down. Cold storage concerns are filled and trade is directed to home demand.

Poultry and honey markets are quiet although the former is about due to brighten up.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—Conditions are improving in all lines of provisions. Prices have remained steady and trade has been showing a gradual increase.

There is a slight weakening in live hogs which are now quoted at $10.

When the roads improve still further increase in buying is looked for.

Butter.—Butter is going to be plentiful this year if signs do not fail. Already the receipts show a gain of about 20 per cent. over last year. The cows are doing well and the quality so far has been good.

Provisions.—With the exception of a slight decline in lard the provision market shows but few changes. The prices of live and dressed hogs are also easier. Receipts have been light but business has been fairly active. The season is close at hand when the demand for smoked and cooked meats reaches its maximum. Dealers state that this season is featured by the breakfast demand for smoked bacon and cooked hams have become general favorites. Butter.—Deliveries have been steady and with production higher as expected, prices should take on an easier tone. Those who have been through the country recently state that conditions are favorable and the indications are for a heavy flow of milk. While cheese factories will be largely benefited by this condition yet the production of butter is bound to be heavier. There are some who believe prices will be lower than at present. This depends largely upon the output.

Cheese.—Prices in cheese are somewhat easier, due largely to an easier tone in the export prices. Old cheese is pretty well cleaned out. The new make is reaching high figures, showing the output to be much greater than last year. Cheese boards are receiving from 10½ to 10¾c a pound for the new make.

Butter.Creamery from the province is jobbing at 24 cents to-day, being 2 cents below last week. Two cars are to be made up by June 15 for shipment to the coast which will tend to keep prices well up. The full grass butter is not widespread on the market yet but will be in a few days and it is not expected that prices will be much lower. No. 1 dairy is 22 cents.

Eggs.—With a good supply and the jobbing price 21 cents, eggs are likely to drop soon. The coast province has stopped buying now and the demand is only a local one.

Cheese.—Local cheese factories have opened recently and although the product is not so good as the all grass cheese will be, it is enjoying a good sale at about 12 cents. Ontario cheese is always popular here and is moving now at 13½ cents.

EARLY SATURDAY NIGHT CLOSING.

Hamilton Grocers are Considering This Move—Picnic on July 20 to the Falls.

Hamilton, Ont., June 9.—The advisability of retail grocery stores closing at 9 o'clock on Saturday evenings during the months of July and August, came up for discussion at the last meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association. If the large stores were going to close at 6 o'clock on Saturdays during the above months, the grocers ought to at least close at 9.

This was the argument that nearly all the members put up, and it was decided to circulate a petition among the various stores on the question. The matter will be decided at the next regular meeting.

"This staying open until midnight is not what it is cracked up to be," stated John Forth, who also pointed out that if the grocers could be induced to close at 9 o'clock on Saturdays during the summer months it would be likely that they would close on Saturdays the whole year round at that time.

The picnic of the association will be held on July 20 and will again go to Niagara Falls. This was agreed upon in spite of the fact that Grimsby citizens tried hard to get it for Grimsby Beach. The majority felt that it was their duty to give to those who patronized their picnic the best possible outing.

TO PREVENT GLUTTING

The West Anxious to Distribute Fruit Systematically — First National Fruit Show for Vancouver.

Vancouver, B.C., June 9.—In previous seasons, owing to lack of knowledge of where fruit supplies were wanted, there were gluts in certain points on the prairie, and this is to be obviated this year by having a special commissioner of the government watch the market closely and keep in touch with the authorities by wire. They in their turn will keep the growers and shippers informed, so that the fruit may be sent exactly where it is needed.

Growers in the Kootenay, the Okanagan, the coast districts and Vancouver Island are all sanguine that the fruit crop this year will be the largest yet. All the trees seem to have come through the winter without any damage, such as was sustained a year ago. This being the case, it is an opportune time to hold the first Canadian National Fruit Show, which is on the boards for the first week

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

(Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.)

There has recently been placed upon the market a development of the Automatic Springless Weighing Machine for retail merchants which is truly a wonder. By this new machine a much wider scope of utility is provided than by any other weighing device or scale heretofore invented. This scale practically gives the merchant two complete automatic scales in one. An ingenious, automatic device, operated by a simple turn of a knob, instantly changes the scale from a ten pound to a twenty pound or back from a twenty pound to a ten pound automatic scale, as may be desired. At the same time the range of selling prices per pound is also changed, allowing the merchant to see instantly the value of goods at any one of fifty prices. Scale manufacturers never before have given the merchant a computing scale with so many different prices per pound. For the weighing of higher priced goods which are sold in smaller quantities, this two-scales-in-one machine has especially designed a range of higher prices operating with the smaller weighing capacity. The lower priced goods, naturally sold in larger quantities, are handled by the features of the scale having the lower price range and the larger weighing capacity. With all these great results, the machine is simple. Any child can readily understand and operate it. It is a product of the inventors connected with the Toledo Computing Scale Company, Toledo, Ohio.

Cereals Have Been Sustained by the Weather

Delayed Summer While Not Benefiting Some Lines of Business, Has Helped the Cereal Market — Flour Market Steady, Following Recent Decline—Reports Refer to Better Trade as a Result—Wheat is Slightly Firmer.

In sympathy with a tonc of firmness that has been given the wheat market of late, the flour market is slightly stronger. This steadiness prompts the opinion that there will hardly be another decline in flour although it is not said so in words. Conditions are still favorable for a big crop in the west this year. Recent rain with snow has provided ample moisture for the present.

The total acreage under crop in Alberta this year is estimated at 1,582,973 an increase of 27 per cent. over last year. In a general way, trade in wheat is dull but the situation in flour, judging from various rcports has improved since the last drop in the price.

Business in cereals has been assisted by the chilly weather of the last three weeks and trade is reported quite satisfactory.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—Flours are firm at the recent declinc. Trade has been somewhat improved by the change, but weather conditions are so poor that the buying is in small lots. Export trade is rather light at present.

Flour.—Since the decline that occurred on June 1st, the local market has been exceptionally steady. In addition to this wheat has been quoted at slightly higher prices of late and it is believed by some that the lowest quotations have been offered. There havc been no changes in the prices if flour since last report.

COLLECTED OVER $1,095.

Chatham, Ont., June 9.—At the monthly meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association last Tuesday, the collection department was the central theme of discussion. The department has completed the first year of its existence, and, despite the fact that much time was necessary for organization and that the retirement of Collector Murdock last winter involved nearly a month's interval, over $1,095 was collected by the collector directly in the course of the year, all of it slow pay money and much of it regarded as hopeless. In addition, much money was paid direct to merchants, fewer credits have been asked, and the general tone of credit business throughout the city is represented to have perceptibly improved; while there is the added feature of the insurance afforded the merchant through the delinquent list.

Organization for the coming year is now in progress. Here and there are merchants who are dissatisfied with the results; but the majority will undoubtedly renew, since the new collector, Ernest Askunas, now has the department in good working order and it is in a position to give better results.

The example of the grocers, who sent John McCorvie and Wm. Potter as delegates to the recent convention at Toronto, is being followed by the local R.M.A., President A. D. Westman being appointed as delegate to the convention at Kingston. An invitation was also extended to Provincial Secretary E. M. Trowern to visit Chatham next September, when the annual banquet will probably be held. The election of officers for the local branch will take place after Mr. Westman's return from the general convention this month.

Experience!

You remember in the old days there was a system of apprenticeship usually about four years' grinding to learn a business.

After serving this term one was supposed to be quite proficient. In time one became an expert in a chosen field—if one stayed with the work.

Experience made one such.

Now, it's fully twenty-five years since we began making Bordeaux Chocolates. In the first few years we learned all they could teach us about them.

But we were not satisfied. We did not feel we had attained perfection. We kept on plugging.

Eventually we considered we had reached highest attainable perfection.

Everyone complimented our quality by imitating it.

So we registered our brand—for your protection—the public's—our own.

That perfect confection, the result of our experimenting, our experience, has since been known, and is now famous as the

and it's an all-the-time winner.

Five Roses costs more and yet costs less

YOU WHO buy to sell again, have YOU ever figured the True Cost of Things?

So as to know your Real Margin of Profit.

For instance, Brother Grocer, take this matter of "flour."

Let us consider together how Cost is made up—not the Cost of Production, you know—but YOUR Cost, the cost of selling to Mrs. Ultimate Consumer.

First, of course, comes Invoice Value—what you pay the Maker to get Possession.

This is "First Cost."

But you can't base your Profit on that alone, for the Difference between First Cost and Selling Price doesn't always yield a profit, sometimes a Loss.

Isn't that so, Brother Grocer?

So you must add Something Else—what?

Rent, Light, Insurance, Collecting, Delivering, Bookkeeping—in short, your Cost of Doing Business.

And you add your own Salary and that of your Help.

Likewise, the Time it takes to convince the buyer, for Time is Money, you see.

And you figure a Speedy Turnover.

And like a Scientific Retailer, you throw in something to cover the Risk of Dissatisfaction, the Possible Loss of a Customer.

For Satisfaction Insurance has a Money Value of its own—your repeaters are worth something.

It's your Goodwill, Brother Grocer—your only asset the morning after a fire.

So you see, don't you, why some flours cost more than others while costing less, why a Fat Gross Profit may go hand-in-hand with Nothing Net.

Maybe you are harboring a robber in your cash box.

Just see, Brother Grocer, how FIVE ROSES flour pays you more in every way:

By saving Time in selling, since Extensive Advertising has made known the quality advantages, the success elements of FIVE ROSES.

So you have more time to push goods harder to sell.

And it saves board-bill by never outstaying its welcome, reducing your stockkeeping.

Makes your dollar travel faster by quickening the Turnover, increasing your available capital, allowing you to take advantage of market opportunities.

Allows you to sleep on both ears, free from worry and controversy with customers due to the "cussedness" of poor quality.

Gives you free advertising through the wagging tongue of Genuine Satisfaction.

Figure all this, Brother Grocer, in YOUR cost when you next order flour; figure all this and more when you compare Net Profits with Gross.

This is no dream of an idle mind, but a business-building fact as evident as your own hopes of success.

Don't you see that every bag of flour you sell that is not FIVE ROSES is like a thief in your Cash Box, a leak in your Till?

Reducing Present Profits and Future, Brother Grocer.

Reducing your Confidence in your Salesmanship.

Can't YOU—won't you—see it this way!

Potatoes Dearer, with Higher Prices Expected

Some Dealers Even go so Far as to Express an Opinion That the Price Will Reach One Dollar—Scarcity is Reported, Particularly in Ontario—Tomatoes are Firm — Pineapples Experience Heavy Demand and Firmer Prices Prevail—Lemons are Strong in Tone.

Press rumors that have lately been noticed from different parts of Ontario referring to a scarcity of potatoes has been followed, as least so far as Toronto is concerned, by increased prices. They have not been confirmed for other localities, but dealers are all quoting at the increased price, and it has been stated that the condition will become general and higher prices will be asked before the new crop is marketed.

Pineapples have sold heavily of late at fair quotations. There is now a sign of firmness which is general. Slightly higher prices are looked for. Oranges are uneventful. The lemon market is firm, although it has not received any strength from the weather. Dealers are awaiting for news from the east in regard to any damage the earthquake of Tuesday may have done.

Tomatoes are firm. The Canadian hothouse variety is now coming in, but has not relieved the situation yet.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—Strawberries are coming in freely, and that cause, along with poor buying on account of the rainy weather, has weakened the price to 15c. Oranges continue to have a heavy sale. Pineapples are down to $3, owing to heavy receipts.

Fish—Trade is improving in general now that the summer resorts are opening. There is a gradually increasing demand for most lines. Supplies are coming in fairly well, and prices are pretty well maintained. Mackerel and Gaspe salmon are more plentiful and at slightly lower prices.

Fruit—As might have been expected, the weather has had a slightly deterrent effect upon the green fruit market, both from the producing and consuming ends. Pineapples have held the centre of the stage, having beat out strawberries for first place. The demand has been heavy, the retail trade having assisted greatly by featuring this fruit from the preserving standpoint. The supply has been ample, but prices have undergone no change. Strawberries are being received in continued abundance before an increased demand. Prices are quoted from 13c to 15c, and some call them even at 16c. Lemons are strong. A slight falling-off in demand was noticed recently, but the fine weather will bring the usual heavy call for this fruit. A large consignment of Verdelli fruit is on the water and will likely be quoted at high prices. Apples are pretty well cleaned out. In regard to pines, it may be said that the market has shown firmer tendencies and quotations are slightly higher.

Vegetables—Probably the strongest feeling locally at present is in potatoes, which, although a drug on the market a short time ago, have of late shown a scarcity which has toned up the market. It is also predicted that owing to the nature of the season the new crop is going to be later than usual, which stimulates the market still more. Delawares are up to 75c a bag, and Ontarios are quoted at 55c and 60c a bushel. Throughout Ontario various reports are arising substantiating these statements. Several dealers expressed the opinion that they believed the dollar mark would be reached before long. At any rate, the market is strong just at present, and there is every reason to believe that it will go higher.

Tomatoes are also being quoted at a higher mark and are quite firm. Onions have been rather irregular of late. The demand still exceeds the supply. The Egyptian onions are apparently nearing the close of their market. There is a good demand for imported green vegetables, with prices, if anything, slightly advanced. Canadian hot-house tomatoes are arriving at 17½c pound.

WINNIPEG.

Green Fruit—Apples do not figure in the market now, since the best grades have all been cleared off, and jobbers are asking a moving price only. Grape fruit is popular, as are also pineapples and strawberries. Strawberries from Hood River will be off the market next week, and new goods from Missouri will arrive soon. The stock there is reported good.

Vegetables—A wide range of import stuff is having a good sale at moderate figures. Jobbers claim that lower prices prevail just now on southern grown stuff than is usual at this time of the year. The low price of potatoes here at present is a feature of the trade, and the good demand for Egyptian onions is also remarkable.

Fish—There is plenty of halibut and whitefish on the market. In addition to these, goldeyes form a considerable part of the trade in the fresh-caught fish. The salmon stock is growing lighter, due to a slow production on the Pacific. The frozen fish trade is light, but there will be some moving for a few weeks yet.

Buying and Handling Vegetables at a Good Profit

What Some Grocers Pay Particular Attention to—Advisability of Always Keeping Fresh Stock on Hand and Making Rapid Turnover—Methods Used in Display.

Spring vegetables afford the grocer a fair profit with but slight possibility of his sustaining a loss. This statement is volunteered after obtaining from retailers their opinions based on their own experiences in this regard.

As soon as the prices become favorable—when market gardeners begin to bring in large quantities of lettuce, onions, radishes, carrots, tomatoes, etc.—the grocer will find that his customers expect him to carry a stock of these articles. The average grocer, however, anticipates the demand, not waiting until a customer asks for them, and prepares to handle them. Some go at it in a half-hearted manner, as if they were afraid they might find themselves with a heavy stock on hand and lose money. Others are systematic in their method. Instead of depending entirely on a catch trade they enquire among their customers in an endeavor to secure a list of persons who will regularly purchase new vegetables. Still another grocer will follow the latter method to a certain extent, but he will also decide that he is going to make a specialty of the fresh goods, for the profit that is in them, and also as an aid to his grocery business.

In any event vegetables do not require a great deal of attention. That is, there is not the same anxiety felt by the dealer as in the case of perishable fruits. It is true that vegetables should not be held over three days if possible, and if the grocer is careful in his buying and makes an effort to promote his business he will find that he is replenishing his stock at least every other day, and that it is fresh and wholesome.

One grocer carelessly remarked: "No, I never have any trouble. I have not lost a dollar's worth of goods all season. The most of what I did throw away might easily have been sold, but it was getting stale and I knew it. I felt that if I sold it, I might possibly lose a customer, so I gave fresh goods and I know that customer would be entirely satisfied. There is nothing gained in being greedy. The customer who does not relish the goods she purchases from you is not likely to be pleased, and worse than that, she might give your opposition a call the next time. The possibility and the probability of such an occurrence was one of the first lessons I learned when I started in the business. My employer one day gave—but what's the use, everybody knows the truth of the statement from their own experiences, and it is not necessary to tell mine."

Keeping Them Fresh.

It is of prime importance that the vegetables should be kept fresh. It is well that they should have an appearance of having just been gathered, with the dew not yet gone from the leaves.

There are various methods of securing this end. Some grocers have the slipshod system of leaving them on the counter, pouring over them a little water now and then. This is hardly an excuse for decent care. The counter gets dirty even if it is devoted to vegetables alone. Some use a shallow tub, which serves the purpose satisfactorily, but on a small scale.

Some have prepared a shallow vessel of galvanized tin suitable for a counter or a window. Others again install a fountain, which is not only a novelty, attracting attention to the vegetables, but admirably serves the purpose of keeping them fresh, thereby prolonging their virility.

These fountains are of all sizes, some occupying an entire window, which is set apart to boom the sale of vegetables and for display effect. Others are smaller and may be placed in a window or in a prominent place in the store. Moss placed around the border of the lower basin of a font with pebbles here and there in the water adds tone to the whole and creates a favorable impression, according to a grocer who has one of these fountains.

In regard to keeping goods fresh, a grocer states that he kept lettuce a week in his cellar and it was in excellent condition when he brought it up. It is safest and best, however, not to obtain too big a supply, and as in handling of fruits, it is well to do what may be termed a hand-to-mouth trade.

Bramwell's Epsom Salts

Not a "by product" but manufactured especially for the most particular class of trade—folks who are super-sensitive over quality. It's as easy for a camel to go through the eye of a needle as for impurities to be discovered in Bramwell's Epsom Salts.

Unlike ordinary "Salts," they contain no moisture. Great dryness is a distinguishing feature of the Bramwell product.

Made by particular people for particular people. Made in St. Helens, Eng.

Contain No Moisture

Olsen & Kleppe Sardines

The English trade in Olsen & Kleppe's Sardines is enormous and grows steadily from year to year. The product has a national reputation for quality. The two special brands ("Albatross" and "Ambrosia") signify small and medium sized fish respectively—each the best of its kind.

Packed in Olive Oil whose purity can not be questioned. Selected with the skill and care that long experience dictates. Sardines that reach the top-notch of perfection.

Delegates in Attendance at the Convention in Brandon—Photograph taken in Front of the City Hall.

Hard-headed Business Men Discuss Western Problems

Annual Convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada at Brandon—The Business and Transportation Questions Affecting the Great West Intelligently Ventilated—Delegates Present From the Three Big Central Prairie Provinces—To Lethbridge, Alta., in 1911.

Staff Correspondence.

Brandon, Man., June 14.—An organization in western Canada which is growing stronger year by year, both in numbers and potency is the Associated Board of Trade of Western Canada.

It takes many years for a body covering such a great area and having for its aims the improvement of diversified interests to get its machinery into smooth running order. But the seventh annual convention of that association held in Brandon, June 9-10, was the most successful one since the efficiency of the body, both in its integral parts and its ability to handle large questions became prominent. Last year at the convention held in Saskatoon, Manitoba was represented for the first time. The delegates from that province and particularly from Winnipeg, evidently did not throw themselves entirely into sympathy with the work of the boards from the other provinces. Last year this was a detriment. This year there was no trace of this divided feeling, and the delegates united as one harmonious body to discuss in perfect sympathy such questions as were introduced from the various centres.

The work of arranging the details of the convention were well worked out beforehand by Secretary J. T. Hall. One result of the smooth working machinery was the shortening of the convention session by about seven hours over any previous sitting; and although there were not so many resolutions submitted as last year, yet there were more resolutions retained for discussion than last year, and the discussion also proved to be more intelligent and concentrated.

Out of thirty resolutions submitted by seven local boards of trade only four were struck out by the resolutions committee. This proved that the questions which were vital for the different points appealed to the resolutions committee as questions of great interest to the west as a whole.

E. M. SAUNDERS, MOOSE JAW,
Elected President of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada.

Most of the questions under discussion revealed the fact that the west was developing faster than the various governments, federal and provincial realized. There were urgent needs dominant everywhere which the boards of trade were anxious to bring to the attention of the governments.

On Wednesday evening, the day before the scheduled date of the convention, the resolutions committee met to prepare the program, so that everything was in readiness to proceed next day.

THURSDAY MORNING.

The resolutions committee submitted their report with M. Isbister, Saskatoon, in the chair. The report was accepted. The appointment of committees was then taken up and the following were named as the committee of procedure: President William Cousins, Medicine Hat; Judge Maguire, Prince Albert; F. Nation, Brandon; C. N. Bell, Winnipeg; G. Knowles, Moose Jaw.

A committee to draft a resolution re the death of the late King and accession of George V. was named, consisting of Judge Maguire, Prince Albert; E. D. Martin, Winnipeg, and J. A. McNicol, Lethbridge.

The report of the secretary was called for and although practically nothing but statistics was reported, yet this feature was intensely interesting since it showed a balance of about $122.65 on hand, the receipts totalling up to $612.

President's Address.

President W. Cousins, Medicine Hat, read the following address:

"As a retiring president of the seventh annual convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada, I have herewith the honor to present and deliver the annual address.

"In doing so, I desire to express my appreciation of the honor you conferred on me last year when you elected me to preside over your deliberations — an honor that I consider worthy of any man's ambition; and esteem more highly to-day than when first conferred because of the assemblages of representative business men here, and because of the wonderful growth of Western Canada during the past twelve months.

"In these days, when graft and bribery have so much to do with selecting men to fill representative positions, it is very gratifying to know that such considerations have had and still have nothing to do with the election of a president of this, the most representative body of live business men in this part of the Dominion of Canada.

"The attendance at this convention—the second in which Manitoba participates, and the first to be held in Manitoba—must be a source of satisfaction to those who have labored so earnestly to make the work of these conventions a means of securing the attention requisite to the welfare and development of Western Canada.

"Conventions have been held in the principal cities of Alberta and Saskatchewan. To-day, we are here in Brandon the centre of what may safely be called the greatest wheat section in the world.

"It is customary for each president in his annual address, to take up a considerable amount of time in going over those things that are worthy of attention, but I know that you are business men and take it for granted that you are quite as well acquainted with what is going on, as I am. Therefore, I will not take up your time at any great length, but will mention a few things that I noticed. President McAra said in his 1907 address, that if we had a favorable season, he would venture to say that the value of the 1908 crop would reach $125,000,000.

Money Coming From The South.

"The people from the south who are invading our country (and we are glad to see them), are bringing in $100,000,000 in cash this year—and how much more in benefits, no one can begin to estimate.

"The same wonderful development is taking place all over Western Canada for the past year that had been going on for the previous seven years.

"To-day, we are in the eye of the world. In New York, and in Chicago, the latest and most popular song is about one of the presidents of our big milling companies, "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" and in Washington, the question, "Why go to Canada?" is as important as the question, "Should Women Vote?"

"Towns have sprung up in places which were bald-headed prairie last year; steam ploughs are now working up the soil on the vast tracts of country over which the buffalo roamed in countless thousands within the memory of many of you; elevators and flour mills have been built and are gathering in the golden store of grain that will make our country one of the greatest in the world; tall chimneys have been built in all the cities of our land and we are starting in to manufacture. It will not be long before we make our own needles, and thus save the heavy freight charges which we have had so much reason to complain about.

The Great Growth of the West.

"When the first convention was held in Calgary, seven years ago, the population of that city was then 10,000; and to-day, it claims close to 40,000.

M. ISBISTER, SASKATOON,
President of the Saskatoon Board of Trade.

"At the convention at Regina, the delegates from a place on the Saskatchewan River, called Saskatoon, invited all the convention delegates to visit them, and even had the nerve to agree to furnish each delegate with transportation and pay their hotel bill—no mention being made as to bar account. I can say, as one of the delegates, who accepted the invitation, that the reception we received on that occasion at the hands of the people of Saskatoon, will remain green in my memory as long as I live, because while under the influence of their hospitality, I purchased a number of lots in what was then a village, but is now a large-sized city. Lots very close to where I bought, sell for twice the price per front foot now, that I paid for a twenty-five-foot lot then.

"How different is this to the early days, even in the memory of so young a man as myself. During my first year in the country, I was told by one of the leading manufacturers in Canada, that he would not give us his watch and chain for the whole country from Winnipeg to Vancouver, and would not care to sell me a carload of stoves unless I could get my father to guarantee payment, because he was afraid there would never be enough people in the country to use them. To-day, he has a warehouse in every large centre between Winnipeg and the coast.

"In the Province of Alberta, I have seen apples grown that for flavor and appearance, can not be beaten, and it is known to most of you here that strawberries grown in Manitoba for the Winnipeg market are the best flavored in the world.

Annual Stock-Taking Time.

"With our natural advantages, we know what a great nation we are to become if we use what we have, right; and it is well to meet as we are doing now to take stock once a year and consider the questions that affect our interests. It may be that the Associated Boards of Trade have not had all to do with the development that has taken place, but it is a fact that the big start took place about the time of the organization of the association.

"Delegates who have been in the habit of attending these conventions, have expressed to me their doubts as to whether it is worth while to hold these meetings, and say that they do not know that we have done much good. They also complain that whether we have or not, they are not in a position from lack of information to know what the results have been. This brings up an important matter which is the remuneration to be paid to the secretary, and the cost of printing for the various Boards of Trade, information as to what has become of their, and other, resolutions. To do this, we need money; and I would recommend the appointment of a committee to go thoroughly into the matter, and bring in a report with which the convention may deal as they think proper.

"If you will take a look over the subjects discussed and dealt with at the conventions held prior to this one, you will see what a great deal of matter we have handled and when you consider the effect of our bringing these matters to the attention of those concerned and consider the advantage of the attention they have had, and the improvements wrought through our efforts. I am sure you will agree with me when I say our labor has not been in vain, nor our time wasted, to say nothing of the mutual benefit derived from bringing together men from all parts of the three provinces.

"At our last convention, the remuneration to be paid our secretary was left to the executive to arrange, Mr. Hall kindly consented to accept the work for $300 per annum, which the executive considered very reasonable; in fact, a less sum than the work was really worth.

and decided to leave the question of increasing this amount to the convention.

Freight Rates on Coal.

"One of the most important questions brought before the convention at Saskatoon by the delegates from Moose Jaw, was regarding the freight rates on coal. This was left with the executive to take up and discuss with the representatives of the different railway companies and take, if necessary, before the Railway Commission. The executive consisting of President, William Cousins; First Vice-President, E. M. Saunders; Third Vice-President, A. E. Cross and our Secretary, J. T. Hall, held a conference with the representatives of the C. P. R. and the C. N. R. in Winnipeg. As far as the conference is concerned, it was a very pleasant one, and we left for our respective homes feeling that we would be able to come here to-day and expect that this convention would at once pass a vote of thanks for the efforts made in behalf of the public by the executive; but we won't expect that vote of thanks to-day unless you find that the rates have been put down to your entire satisfaction. That we did not succeed in our mission we are free to admit, and it is due to the fact that the railway representatives are better posted in regard to freight rates than are the members of your executive. We feel now that rings were worked around us and we must confess defeat.

"The resolution being brought up by Moose Jaw at this convention, No. 11 on your list, "The Appointment of a Freight Expert for the Province of Saskatchewan," I commend to your favorable consideration as a way of geting better results.

"In conclusion, let me again thank you for the honor you have done me in selecting me as your chairman. I trust that the high standards set by former presidents has been maintained, and that your deliberations here to-day may be productive of much good."

Election of Officers.

President Cousins called for the election of officers which resulted as follows:

President, E. M. Saunders, Moose Jaw, Sask.; first vice-president, W. Georgeson, Calgary; second vice-president, M. Isbister, Saskatoon; third vice-president, C. J. K. Nourse, Lethbridge; fourth vice-president, E. D. Martin, Winnipeg.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Freight Expert.

W. E. Knowles, Moose Jaw, brought forward the following resolution which was slightly discussed and carried.

"That a recommendation be sent to the governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta requesting that they engage a freight expert in transportation matters whose duty it shall be to study the freight tariffs of the railway companies operating in the provinces and endeavor to adjust any differences arising between the mercantile interests and the railway companies in connection with these tariffs."

Distribution of Harvest Hands.

This resolution also emanated from Moose Jaw with W. E. Knowles as its sponsor. He made a strong plea in the light of past experiences everywhere in the west and with the possibilities of a heavy crop this coming season.

The resolution recommended that the Board of Trade, the governments of the three provinces and the railways, cooperated in the matter of properly distributing harvest hands.

There was no one to speak for the government but W. B. Lanigan, C.P.R. assistant freight traffic manager, was present and spoke on the question. He said: "This is a serious question. The railways admit that they are unable to complete their plans due to heavy traffic in all departments. Not only in the distribution of harvest help but for all dependable business it is urgent that steps be taken to bring help into the country. The country is going to suffer if some feasible system is not put into operation to do the necessary work in the country and properly locate the great influx of immigrants. It is necessary that the different provinces and the railways co-operate in the matter. I suggest that each district put a special man on the field to estimate the number of men needed for a given locality and report to a combined committee from the government and the railways."

J. T. HALL, MEDICINE HAT,

Re-elected Secretary for Another Year.

F. M. Selanders, Saskatoon, said: "Last year from Saskatoon about fifteen hundred messages were sent out to get an estimate from the farmers as to the amount of help required. Out of that number applications came in from only two. The farmers cannot be depended upon; the railways and governments must take the matter up."

The resolution was carried.

Sheep Industry in the West.

W. Georgeson, Calgary, introduced a resolution regarding the sheep industry of Alberta. It was along the line of the much needed protection to all live stock interests in the country. The people of the provinces felt that particularly the foothills of the Rockies, where there were thirty-four townships and which were practically useless for anything else should be used for sheep culture which would be a great source of wealth to the country.

The motion was seconded by W. Cousins, Medicine Hat, and carried.

Accommodation for Immigrants.

W. Georgeson, Calgary, moved a resolution to approach the Dominion Government for better accommodation for incoming settlers. It was brought out in the discussion which followed by C. N. Bell, C. Webster and others that although some places in the west had no complaint in this regard—Winnipeg for instance had a splendid immigration system—special places should be named where the government should be asked to look into the question. The resolution was amended to cover this and was carried.

Better Customs Facilities.

"WHEREAS the general settlement of the west is causing numerous wholesale manufacturing and jobbing centres to be established where a large amount of importing is done, thus necessitating the maintenance of an adequete staff at the said points, and

"WHEREAS at the present time a number of these ports of entry are not supplied with a sufficient number of hands, and

"WHEREAS this condition of affairs not only causes considerable loss to the different merchants but also retards the general business of the country.

"Therefore this convention desires to urge upon the Honorable Minister of Customs the necessity of increasing the facilities at such ports throughout the west by adding to the staff a sufficient numher of hands to handle the work without delay to the importer."

This resolution was introduced by W. Georgeson, Calgary, and was felt to be an important one.

"We just wish to call the government's attention to the fact that they are not moving fast enough to keep up with the conditions of the country In the customs departments there are often vexatious delays. A week is sometimes required to get an article through when twenty-four hours should be sufficient," he said.

It was agreed to state the matter specifically to the government and the motion, seconded by Chas. Webster, was carried.

The Naming of Grains.

P. Loney, Moose Jaw, brought forward a resolution respecting the naming of grain grown in the different provinces, or a suitable name for wheat grown everywhere in Western Canada.

A. Kelly, Winnipeg, thought it was a mistake to change the name "Manitoba No. 1 hard" as it now had a world reputation which was a distinct asset to the commodity.

In the discussion which followed nearly everyone was in favor of leaving the name unchanged. Mr. Shaw, traffic manager C.N.R., referred to the "Duluth" wheat in the United States as applied to the grain grown in three states. Besides it was a question for the terminal elevators to decide.

W. B. Lanigan, C.P.R., Winnipeg, recalled the history of a brand of cheese produced in different counties in Ontario where the name was an asset to the trade. In this connection Mr. Lanigan took pains to do honor to the name of Hon. T. Ballantyne who was the pioneer cheese producer of Ontario.

The resolution was withdrawn.

The committee of procedure submitted their report at this point. It was presented as follows by the chairman, Thos. H. Maguire:

"Your committee appointed at this morning's session to consider the best means to be adopted to give effect to the resolutions passed at the seventh annual meeting, beg to make the following recommendations:

"That your executive, when they deem it advisable, request the assistance of the Boards of Trade at the capitals of the three provinces, to take up on behalf of this association, matters that the association desire to present to the several provincial governments, and that the said Boards of Trade on behalf of the association, use their best efforts to have the Provincial Government carry into effect by legislation or executive action, the expressed views of this association.

"That where matters dealt with by this association are to be presented to the Federal Government, that the Executive not only present such matters to the government in writing, but also, when possible, by deputations and by direct appeals to the representatives in Parliament and the Senate from constituencies in the three provinces.

"That the progress made by the Executive in the securing of results from the action of the association in various matters dealt with from time to time, be communicated by the secretary of each Board represented in this association, by a leaflet or circular letter issued, say, monthly.

"That this association take such action as will result in making the annual income of the association equal to, at least, $1,000.

"That the salary of the secretary for the coming year be placed at $40 per month, in view of the increased duties to be required of him."

The report was adopted and the meeting took up the matter outlined in clause four re the increasing of funds.

H. B. Gordon, Winnipeg, suggested an increase of 50 per cent. in membership fees. This was thought to be too small, and it was moved by F. Nation and W. Cousins, that the fee be fifty dollars, instead of twenty-five. It was carried.

THURSDAY EVENING SESSION.

Opening Indian Reserves.

Be it resolved that this convention request the Department of the Interior to favorably consider the question of greater activity in throwing open Indian reserves for settlement.

W. Georgeson, who introduced the resolution, stated that the Indians were rapidly dying off, and that they do not develop the country. At present it is estimated that over 565,000 acres more than the Indians are entitled to are in their possession. This would make room for about 19,000 white people.

D. S. Beech, (Cardstone, Man.), stated that in his district there were 365,000 acres of excellent land possessed by the Indians. The difficulty to get the land is that the Indian agent has to sell it and they do not like to lose their jobs. The Government has not made any effort to secure the land, and open it for agricultural or railway purposes, but he thought they would if this association approached them. The motion was seconded by C. Webster and carried.

To Repeal Liquor Statutes.

Section 4 of Chapter 38 of the Statutes of Saskatchewan for 1909, prohibits any municipality from collecting a business tax from a hotel or any liquor licensed business. J. Loney (Moose Jaw) considered this unjust, and asked the convention to have the statute repealed. It was seconded by W. Cousins (Medicine Hat). After a brief discussion, in which it was brought out that the question was wholly one for the municipalities to deal with. It was withdrawn.

JUDGE T. H. MAGUIRE, K.C., LL.D.,
Delegate from Prince Albert Who Introduced Several Resolutions.

Interest on Overdue Accounts.

W. J. Birnie (Carman, Man.) moved the following:

"Resolved that this associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada are of the opinion that legislation should be enacted to make it clear that overdue accounts shall bear interest from date due on the same terms and same rules as are now provided for overdue bills and notes."

Mr. Birnie, in moving the resolution, admitted that it aimed at the curtailment of a lengthy credit system, and would tend to bring a retail business into an established system of cash, which, he claimed, was necessary for the maintenance of a successful business.

F. Nation (Brandon) said "A merchant ought to be able to settle the account himself without getting the aid of law. I have had no trouble in this particular regard."

Judge Maguire—"Giving notice to the creditor would render the debtor liable to interest, just as legally as in the case of bills and notes."

W. E. Knowles—"A Carman lawyer stated that accounts running cannot bear interest."

There was an evident difference of legal viewpoint, but upon motion the resolution was carried without much discussion.

Fire Insurance Policies.

This resolution, which is perhaps the most radical one on the whole programme, was introduced by W. J. Birnie, of Carman, Man., It read:

"Whereas the present forms of fire insurance policies are many and varied, and in many cases are worded in such an ambiguous manner as to be difficult of interpretation and open to serious objection. The objectionable clauses are numerous and tend to useless and costly litigation."

"Therefore, be is resolved that the Governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta be petitioned to introduce and pass such legislation as will make the using of a standard form of fire insurance policy (free from such clauses) compulsory."

Mr. Birnie said: "This resolution may appear rather difficult to carry into operation, and may seem rather one-sided until the details are gone into carefully. It must not be taken for granted that my opinion is that all fire insurance companies are grafters, and that the policyholders are all innocent victims, but I have long considered that legislation regulating the terms of fire insurance parties might, with advantage to the insured and without undue hardship to insurance companies, be enacted. Fire insurance policies are accepted without proper scrutiny into their provisions. It is difficult to name any security that requires more care than fire insurance policies, as at present drawn up, and insurers must of necessity be experts and give their most careful attention to the wording and conditions of the policies they accept; and, no hardship would be entailed upon the fire insurance companies by compelling them to adopt a standard form of policy easily understood and devoid of all contentious clauses."

The resolution was seconded by H. E. Robison (Carman).

Joseph Cornell, a Brandon insurance company manager, spoke in favor of the resolution. It was the ambiguous wording contained in the policy that necessitated the change. A standard form of policy, which originated in New York, was now used throughout the United States, with great satisfaction. Mr. Cornell compared several clauses in the New York policy with the policy of a company doing business in Manitoba. He made it clear that the U. S. policy was more simplified and would be more easily understood by the average policyholder.

After a brief discussion in favor of the resolution it was unanimously carried.

Sign Posts in Backwoods.

The first resolution from Prince Albert recalled the fact that there was much pioneer life yet in the great west. Judge Maguire who moved a resolution to have signs established in new districts for the guidance of travelers and new settlers related some vivid experiences of those who had wandered many miles out of there course because of the lack of anything to guide them on the journey. Delegates from the cities and settled portions were inclined to be unsympathetic toward what seemed to them amusing incidents, but those who had "been there" made it clear that it was no joke. The resolutions carried with a good majority.

Telegraph Rates.

Judge Maguire moved a resolution to request the railway commission to go into the matter of reconstructing the telegraph rate schedule for the three western provinces. The resolution was, however, based upon false premises, namely that the Board of Railway Commissioners refused to take up the matter formerly, and after a warning by Mr. Georgeson against such a resolution it was withdrawn.

In the discussion, however, it was brought out that the railway companies practically admitted that the telegraph rates were too low in Ontario and Quebec and to overcome the loss of revenue to these provinces they raised the rates in the west. It was argued that such rates as were allowed in the east should hold in western Canada. In consideration, however, of the fact that the railway commission was already dealing with this question, the resolution was withdrawn.

Householders' Tax.

"Whereas by recent legislation there has lately been added to the city act an amendment instituting what is known as the householders' tax, and whereas this tax is opposed to the principle of taxation without representation, therefore be it resolved that the government be urged to remove this clause out of the statutes."

The delegates approved of this resolution by the trend of the discussion, but it was thought to be a matter for the Western Canada Municipalities Association, and was withdrawn for this reason.

Judge Maguire, Prince Albert, introduced the resolution.

President E. M. Saunders made two announcements at this point, relative to the entertainment features the following day.

At five o'clock Friday an automobile tour about the city had been arranged.

At seven o'clock the same evening a banquet was to be given in Aagaard's Cafe.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Steam Boiler Construction.

"Be it resolved that this convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada, do respectfully draw the attention of the Dominion and Provincial Governments to the hardship suffered by manufacturers and others, owing to the existence of special separate steam boiler and boiler inspection and engineers' certificate requirements for the different provinces, and urge the desirability of early legislation with a view to providing for a boiler construction and Inspection Requirement Act of Dominion-wide application.

This resolution emenated from Brandon and was moved by John Hanbury. The response that came from every part of the house proved that the question was one of great significance to the country as a whole. One speaker stated that he purchased three boilers for Saskatchewan and wished to purchase more for Alberta of the same type but the provincial regulations forbid him. He also pointed out that it was a severe hardship upon manufacturers to comply with the various provincial regulations and they were necessarily delayed in making satisfactory deliveries. It was carried heartily.

WM. COUSINS, MEDICINE HAT,

The Retiring President of the Associated Boards of Trade.

Mining Stock Restrictions

Whereas it is certain that with the construction of the Hudson Bay Railroad considerable mining areas will be opened up in the north of Saskatchewan and the N. W. T. and whereas this will almost inevitably lead to the flotation of schemes devised for the sole purpose un fleecing unsuspecting investors, therefore be it resolved that representations be made to the provincial governments urging them to make even more strong the legislation in the matter to of mining and similar company promotion and the sale of stock in such companies.

The Prince Albert sponser, Judge Maguire, stated that there were already cases where men were reduced by fraudulent promoters of gold mine schemes, and he thought the law was not stringent enough to curtail wildcat schemes. One of the requirements that a promotor should produce, should be a certified prospectus of the company he represents. Cobalt was named as centre where much harm was done by illegitimate selling of stock.

In support of this resolution, W. Georgeson (Calgary), said in part:— "Something should be done to protect the innocent public. There are both legitimate and illegitimate companies, which alike fleeced their shareholders. There was a company selling fire insurance, that was legitimately formed, and did business in a proper way, and floated stock for a good purpose. I among others, took shares in this company. We were all fleeced. The company could not be touched, they had enacted their business legally, but they should have been examined by a government commission, to make them more secure. At present the world is crazy over rubber and oil stocks. Someone is going to lose heavily, and when the schemes begin to float widely in this country the public should have adequate protection against them. The trouble is we cannot see the difference between a good thing and a poor one. If it turns out all right we like the money, and if the scheme fails we are sorry, that's all. It is unfair to ask the government to do something which we ourselves cannot figure out. But the resolution is alright, if only to draw the attention of the public to bad paying schemes."

The resolution was carried.

Vacancy on Railway Commission.

S. C. Burton (Regina), moved:—

"That it is the opinion of this convention that the vacancy on the railway commission be promptly filled by a western man with commercial training and having a full knowledge of conditions in the west."

Mr. Burton stated that names had been presented by all business people, and the farmers were anxious to be represented. It was reported that the Moose Jaw Board of Trade asked to have the vacancy filled in 1908, and Hon. Geo. P. Graham had acknowledged the letter, but it was not known why the appointment was delayed. E. D. Martin supported the resolution strongly, and said the matter was urgent. It was carried.

Navigation of Saskatchewan River.

A resolution was adopted urging the Dominion Government to continue the work of opening the water course between Winnipeg and Edmonton, and the sourthern portion of the river. The resolution also expressed satisfaction with the action of the Government in opening the Red River by constructing the St. Andrew's locks.

Judge Maguire and C. N. Bell stated that the Government had outlined a larger scheme than western men knew of, and they thought that the Board of Trade should encourage rather than urge further work. It was believed that the great river would fully justify any expenditure that the Government saw fit to expend upon it. The Mississippi River was referred to as the artery of the United States, and the Saskatchewan River would be the same to Western Canada.

Mr. Martin said that now coal was brought down from Edmonton to Winnipeg at $4.50 per ton, and by boat, coal could be landed profitably at $1 per ton.

Hon. G. R. Coldwell was introduced to the convention, and spoke briefly on this point of navigation, stating that it would be highly beneficial for interprovincial trade. The resolution was carried.

Duty on Imported Fruits.

"This convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada respectfully urges that the Honorable Minister of Customs take into consideration the re-adjustment of duties charged on imported fresh fruit and vegetables, and this association would further suggest that a specific duty be levied."

W. Georgeson (Calgary), brought forward this resolution, which had a widespread interest in Western Canada. He argued that the duties were excessive, and the consequent changes on the public was very large and the volume of trade was small. The resolution aimed at the increase in the volume of trade. He thought that when the weight of the package was included in the duty charge that it was time to complain. He believed that a satisfactory schedule for shipper and consumer could be arranged at lower figures on all fruits and vegetables.

W. Cousins (Medicine Hat).—"This is a question which has been up for twenty-five years and the trouble arises when our own fruit growers try to protect their market."

J. A. Nicol (Lethbridge). — "The matter of duty would stand further enquiry, for I think the duty is not solely the cause of the present high price of fruits and vegetables. The middleman is getting the odd nickel. We are growing our own stuff in southern Alberta and British Columbia, and we do not want a lower duty."

C. N. Bell (Winnipeg).—"A duty schedule should be arranged for certain months of the year. Sometimes it could be arranged to have the stuff come in free, but the fruit growers in the east and west strongly oppose better trade relations in the matter of fruits, and it is almost impossible to have anything done."

F. Nation (Brandon), was of the opinion that what was needed for cheaper fruit was co-operation between importer and consumer.

J. A. Simington, a fruit importer in Moose Jaw, stated that the resolution only touched the fringe of the problem, and did not meet the needs of the consumer or the requirements of the country. At the present time B. C. fruit growers were anxious to have the duty raised. Peaches bear a 50 per cent. duty, and this was beneficial to the grower for a certain time, but it was not necessary to have the duty continually at that figure. As for vegetables, there would be no injury to the growers of this country to have them come in free.

The resolution was referred back for re-adjustment.

Lethbridge in 1911.

The last business taken up by the convention, was the choosing of the next place of meeting.

J. A. McNicol, Lethbridge invited the delegates to visit his home city next year, and without discussion the invitation was accepted.

The meeting adjourned with a vote of thanks to Brandon for the splendid accommodations offered in the City Hall.

At five o'clock an enjoyable auto ride to the Experimental Farm was given the visitors, and at seven o'clock the delegates were treated to a gorgeous banquet at which many interesting and witty speeches were delivered.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

Vancouver Retailers Excited Over Price-Cutting by New Grocery Firm—How One Grocer has Worked up Big Trade With Farmers—Lindsay Merchants Having Trouble in Obtaining Early Closing—Chatham Grocer Proves That the Consumer is After Quality in Pineapples.

Old Trouble of Price-Cutting.

Vancouver, B.C., June 16.—With the establishment of a grocery section by David Spencer, Limited, the small dealers are wondering what will result. A determined bid is being made for the trade, and to get it standard articles are offered at a reduction that cannot fail to have effect. Of course, this cannot be maintained, as goods are being sold at a loss for the sake of advertising, and the question is if the people will remain with that firm after the first low quotations. Cash has to be paid, and when figures are back to the normal, with the ordinary cheap catches, most people will realize that the bargains were for a purpose.

It is particularly annoying to the smaller dealer to have customers take their cash away in such instances as these. It is generally the one who has an account to settle and who hardly ever has the cash on hand for their regular dealer. It is a repetition of the departmental store trade in the small towns. When the customer has no money handy, or wants it for something else, credit is obtained of the local dealer, and when the cash is available it is sent away, regardless of the favors that were asked for.

Some of Spencer's prices are as follows: A jam, 15c per one-pound jar, (sold ordinarily at 25c); pineapple, four cans for 25c (usual two tins for 25c); salmon, 10c (usual, two tins for 25c); sugar, (B. C.) 18-lb. sack, 90c, (usual, $1.25); baking powder, per 12-ounce tin, 30c, (usual, 40c); one brand of catsup, two for 45c, (usual, 35c each).

Such catches as these are apt to appeal to the householder. In one instance, where the catsup was ordered, it was found the stock had been exhausted, and something would be sent "just as good." This is an old story. In fact, one of the cut dealers in Vancouver declared only a short time ago that while standard articles were offered at a reduction, the effort was always made to get the customer to buy the other kind at the usual profit. Generally, this ruse was successful.

Early Closing at Leamington.

Leamington, Ont., June 16.—The business men of Leamington have unanimously agreed to early closing on three nights a week. A written agreement has been drawn up and is signed by forty merchants, to the effect that they will close their places of business at 6 o'clock on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. Exception is, as usual, made where such nights come before holidays or during fair week. On Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights the stores will remain open as heretofore. The agreement came into operation on Monday, June 6.

As the merchants are practically unanimous, no difficulty is anticipated in carrying out the agreement, which many hope will pave the way to early closing on all week nights except Saturdays.

Trouble in Getting Early Closing.

Lindsay, Ont., June 16.—Lindsay grocers are having their troubles in securing enough signatures for the early-closing by-law. The petition was circulated and every merchant on Kent Street, but one, signed in favor of early closing, but the mapority of the merchants in the small corner stores scattered in the wards of the town, refused to close, and consequently the two-thirds was not reached. The clerks employed in the main stores are anxiously awaiting the outcome.

A. S. Harrison is the only grocer in town who handles an ice cream parlor in connection with his grocery business. He claims that it pays, and that is the reason why he is not in favor of closing his store at six o'clock.

Mr. Harrison makes considerable profit when excursions are in town. He caters to the public and attracts the attention of the passer by displaying neatly-printed signs that do not fail to catch the eye.

Secured the Higher Price.

Chatham, Ont., June 16.—In connection with the sale of pineapples for preserving, a local grocer has just turned a rather neat trick.

He had bought quite extensively of pineapples of the better quality and larger size, which he calculated on retailing at $2.25 or $2 a dozen for preserving purposes. He found, however, that other merchants were offering pines at $1 50 a dozen or even less, and that the public, attracted by the lower price, overlooked the fact that the cheaper pines were always somewhat smaller.

Confronted with the prospect of having to sell at a loss, the grocer, instead, sent out his boy with instructions to go around and buy one dozen of the smallest pineapples he could pick up at rival stores. These the grocer placed in his window, labeling them, "The $1.50 a dozen quality." Side by side with them he placed a dozen of the $2 pines. The contrast in size was so striking that the grocer had no difficulty in disposing of the large fruit at the higher price, while the cheaper fruit remained uncalled for.

Big Butter and Egg Trade.

Stratford, Ont., June 15.—McCully & Haugh, grocers, of this city, may be said to specialize on butter and eggs, being particularly active in these two lines. They employ four men whose duties are devoted entirely to the packing of butter and counting eggs.

Recently they shipped to their agents in Toronto 2,800 dozen of eggs and 2,300 pounds butter, which may be considered a fairly good day's showing. Their local business reaches a maximum on Saturdays, when their average sales amount to 700 or 800 pounds of butter and about 600 dozen eggs. They have developed an extensive trade with the farmers of their district, and are always willing to take their offerings of butter and eggs, no matter what quantity may be offered.

It need hardly be added that not only does this firm reap benefits from their extensive business in butter and eggs, but it is helpful to their general business.

McCully & Haugh have also developed a large trade in potted plants, this business being almost entirely confined to the spring and early summer. Their premises are arranged according to modern ideas, combining all the features that are now found in grocery stores that are really business factors.

Windows for Scotchmen's Day.

Bracebridge, Ont., June 16.—Extra efforts among the grocers were made this week in preparing better and brighter windows, and also in making the interior more attractive. This was for Scotchmen's day (Wednesday), when some thousands of visitors were in town.

Summer trade is upon us, and the way the grocers are hustling is good to watch. People when they come to Muskoka generally get the Muskoka appetite and that is the secret of the merchants getting busy.

A Simple Novel Display.

Lindsay, Ont., June 16.—Jos. Brown, grocer, employed a novel method of attracting the attention of the pedestrian last week. He happened to secure two extra large hen's eggs, and also an extra small hen's egg. These he supplemented with an egg of medium size and placed them in his show window for exhibit. He then had a newspaper reporter refer to the odd collection in the daily paper, calling the attention of the reader to Brown's window. Many a person stopped and examined the large eggs. It worked well.

Nation & Shewan, one of the general mercantile houses of Brandon, Man., are making additions to their premises.

P. F. Millman, of W. H. Millman & Sons, Toronto, is back to business again, after an illness extending over two months.

CANADIAN STRAWBERRIES IN.

As anticipated in The Grocer a couple of weeks ago, Canadian strawberries were placed on the market this week.

Not until about the end of next week, however, will they likely be ready in abundance. The season has been an unusually good one for strawberries since the frequent rains and rather backward weather prevented them ripening in too big a hurry. They therefore have had plenty of time to mature and good, healthy, well-flavored fruit is expected.

In figuring out prices, fruit canners and preservers, who are packing increasing quantities from year to year must be considered. It is likely nevertheless that prices somewhat similar to a year ago will prevail.

The crop outlook in the prairie provinces is becoming more promising as the days and weeks go by. Recent rains and warm weather combined have done much to make this favorable condition and with continued warm weather and occasional showers this year's western grain crops will be the best in history.

In looking into the future of the Nova Scotia apple crop, prospects are bright. The blossoms are set well and show no damage from frost. J. W. Bigelow, president of the N. S. Fruit Growers' Association declares that if good weather continues that province may expect a crop of 1,000,000 barrels for export trade. It is a significant fact that Nova Scotia has never yet lost an apple crop by frost.

Plums, pears and all small fruits in Nova Scotia promise an abundant crop.

In the Muskoka district of Ontario the huckleberry bushes are healthy due to plenty of rain and the crop is expected to be a record one.

Farmers in Waterloo County, western Ontario, report having to sow some portions of fields of grain twice on account of devastations made by the "wire" worm in low lands. The grain crops in general, however, all over Ontario are looking fine.

SECRET REBATER UNPOPULAR.

That the day of the secret rebater had passed has become our firm belief since the recent law was enacted by Parliament. Anyone having any doubt as to his immunity from prosecution if he continued to operate would have been convinced that he must indeed be a man of high courage if he had the "nerve" to practice after learning what the trade thought of him and his methods.

At recent conventions of both wholesale and retail grocers various speakers representing both branches of the trade condemned the practice of secret rebating, and those who practiced it, in the strongest terms, and took measures to detect offenders, who will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. It is a regrettable fact that in some instances the new law has been looked upon as simply another statute which would be law on the books only.

Nothing is further from being the exact situation. The trade is practically unanimous in condemning secret rebaters, and 95 per cent. of Canadian merchants will do everything possible to make effective this important Government measure. Manufacturers, as well as wholesalers and retailers have promised their active co-operation.

It is pleasing to see such unanimity of sentiment in regard to so pernicious a habit, which, to use a paradoxical expression, should have been stopped before it began.

BORROWING A MAN'S DAGGER TO STAB HIM.

A manufacturer in a short address recently let drop a remark worthy of consideration by all sections of the trade. It was to the effect that a man's trade mark is just as much his private property as his horse or his hat, and anyone who, in any way, injured his trade mark did wrong just as much as he would by detracting from the value of any other piece of property the man might possess.

Too often we forget the fact that after all a trademark, while an intangible something, is a very concrete proposition to the man who owns it. The majority of trade marks have been purchased at the expense of several hundred to several million dollars paid out for publicity. A trade mark is of no use unless it is known, and it cannot be made known unless it is advertised.

There may be some difference in the minds of some people between the spending of money to buy a horse and the spending of money to buy a trade mark. But if there is their morals are a little upset. Few of us relish the title of horse thief, yet some of us do not consider our action criminal in taking another man's trade mark for our own purposes.

DISPLAYING EGGS IN THE SUN.

For a long time The Canadian Grocer has been pointing out the losses which accrue every year through the unscientific handling of eggs. According to a large produce dealer the loss is estimated at 17 per cent. of the entire production in Canada.

How is this loss to be prevented?

Farm and Dairy, a farmer's paper, points out that the principles upon which our egg trade is conducted are radically wrong. The loss that results is caused by the neglect of many trifles which when summed up make a large aggregate.

The producer is not the only one at fault. One illustration will serve to fix the responsibility for part of the trouble and loss elsewhere. A leading produce merchant in a city last week was making a specialty of fresh laid eggs. He put them in his window immediately behind the plate glass. Shortly after noon the sun was shining directly on these eggs. The temperature they were in must have ranged about 100 degrees for most of the afternoon.

Under such conditions it would not be long before those eggs would be ruined. The merchant did not realize that the germs in the eggs were being started well on the way to incubation and that every moment they remained in the window they were rapidly deteriorating in quality.

How much fancy butter could that merchant have sold at the current market price had he put it in the window beside those eggs? The corners of the prints would soon have rounded off, and the quality be lost. No merchant would think of exhibiting butter in this way; yet, because the eggs have shells, although their quality is as rapidly destroyed, they are frequently exposed in this way.

There is much to learn about the egg business by dealers and merchants, as well as by the producers. A general campaign of education has long been due. In order to market eggs at the best possible price, the farmers in several districts are organizing into co-operative fresh egg circles.

Opens at Eight O'clock and Closes at Six Sharp

Another Strong Advocate of Concentrating Business in a Short Time Period—Keeps Premises in First class Shape—Does This on Wednesday Afternoons—A Believer in Show Cards, Which he Writes Artistically Himself—No Worry Over Department Store Prices—Regular Deliveries Every Two Hours.

Toronto, June 16.—Perhaps no grocer in Toronto has made more rapid strides toward success than R. N. Walker, of 68 Harbord Street, who now has a modern grocery store.

Although practically a young man, he has been in the business for sixteen years. After serving six years with Clancy Bros., at the corner of Major and Harbord Streets, he went into business on Queen Street West, with his uncle, Mr. Notter, where he made steady progress for several years, but finding the hours from 7 a.m. to 10 and 12 p.m. too arduous, he decided to try the northern section, and located at the southwest corner of Robert and Harbord Streets. There he and his brother, C. J. Walker, entered into partnership as Walker Bros.

After a couple of years of hard work their business had grown to such an extent that they found their premises too small, and decided to buy the property on the opposite corner. At this time C. J. Walker severed his connection with the firm, but his brother still conducted the business under the old name.. The property being his own, Mr. Walker took great pride in improving it in every possible way.

His Methods Systematic.

His success may be largely attributed to his systematic methods of doing business. He keeps everything running smoothly, and in this way has gained the confidence of all his customers. The store is opened at eight o'clock sharp each morning, and his customers all know just when they can find him in. Mr. Walker says he no sooner reaches his store at that time when the phone orders commence. At ten o'clock regularly his first delivery goes out, and every two hours after, a delivery wagon makes the round. His customers are now educated so that the orders are never too late to catch the deliveries, and seldom is he asked to have parcels delivered in the intervals.

Doesn't Worry About Others.

With regard to the large department stores cutting prices in groceries. Mr. Walker says it does not hurt his business a particle. He can sell goods as cheaply as they can.

When advertising specials in canned goods. vegetables, fruits, etc., he writes a neat, display card, in which art he is quite proficient, and this, together with other ideas, enables him to secure a good share of the trade.

Closes Sharp at 6 O'clock.

Mr. Walker takes as much pride in having his store neat and attractive as he does his own home, and everyone appreciates cleanliness. He also believes in having a few hours to himself, closing his store every evening, except Saturday, at 6 o'clock. He is also closed on Wednesday afternoons in the months of June, July and August, and is now considering the question of closing on Wednesday afternoons the year round. He says he does not believe that his business will suffer to any extent. The half-holiday, he considers, should be used to improve the appearance of the store, and he thinks he can make more money by so doing.

Mr. Walker would like to see early closing throughout the city, and from his own experience, cannot see where the grocer will lose any business thereby. On the other hand, he will be benefited by the shorter hours.

The grocer requires his daily rest hours the same as the average workman, and by closing early he will not only put more energy and vim into his business, but he will be more cheerful in his dealings with his fellowmen. Shorter hours, he claims, help to liberate the grocer or clerk from practical slavery, make the clerks appreciate work and the glad smile they bring attracts the customer and creates only favorable impressions.

Question of Weighing Paper Bag with the Sugar

Examinations in England That Grocers are Trying—Held by Institute of Certified Grocers—Successful Candidates Get Title "F. G. I."—Problem in Slicing and Weighing Bacon—Methods for Securing Public Support Apart From Cutting Prices.

Oliver Bryant, a Midland, Ont., merchant writes The Canadian Grocer as follows:—

> "I am enclosing a cutting from the London (Eng.) Daily Mirror, of 6th May, which possibly may interest you. Shall we ever see the like in Canada, think you?"

The enclosure is as follows:

Judged by his examination papers, the grocer of the future will be a "man of parts"—a veritable "super-grocer"!

Twenty students sat at the Westminster Institute yesterday on the occasion of the first national examination held by the Institute of Certified Grocers, which entitles the successful candidate to write "F. G. I." after his name.

Selected at random from their three papers, headed respectively Law, Commodities and Methods of Business and Principles of Advertising, some representative questions were:—

Law.

Is a tradesman entitled to charge interest on overdue accounts?

Suppose a man is proved to have sold food or drugs mixed with injurious ingredients and is prosecuted, what must be shown to escape conviction?

A grocer carrying on business in a university town supplies an undergraduate (eighteen years of age) with champagne to the amount of £80 on credit.

The undergraduate was well supplied with pocket-money by his parents. Can the grocer recover the price?

Is a grocer justified in weighing the paper in which tea or sugar is to be wrapped with the commodity sold?

Is a married woman entitled to pledge her husband's credit? If so, to what extent?

A "BACON" CONTROVERSY.

Commodities.

Describe with the aid of a diagram how to cut up and price a side of bacon weighing 60 lb., costing 78s. per cwt., invoice date February 15, to show 15 per cent. profit.

What eggs would you buy for ready money trade in winter to sell at eight, twelve, sixteen a shilling, and in summer twelve, sixteen, twenty a shilling?

What character of teas would you use in a blend for hard water, and what for soft water?

Give the various growths of ginger and the purposes for which they are generally used; also describe the reason for their adaptability for the above purposes.

Write down in order of importance the countries whence we obtain rice, sago, tapioca.

Business and Advertising.

What methods would you adopt, other than "cutting prices," for securing public support?

You have a useful, reliable and profitable (but not largely advertised) line, probably with your own name on; what methods of sale or advertisement would you adopt for placing same with your customers and the public?

In addition, candidates were engaged in practical tests yesterday.

"Tea-matching" was one of them. It was complicated. From seven pots of tea, fourteen teacups of tea were poured, two from each. Then they were "shuffled," and the would-be F. G. I. had to rearrange, by tasting, the fourteen cups into their original pairs.

£100 Prize.

"The man who comes out first in this examination," Aubrey Rees, the secretary, told The Daily Mirror, "gets £100 besides his certificate."

"But the 'exam.' is primarily conducted for certificate purposes, and in years to come we hope that all self-respecting grocers will be able to write F. G. I. after their names and over their shops."

All the twenty candidates competing in the final yesterday were picked men who had passed the necessary preliminary tests at the various provincial headquarters.

About the first thing, The Daily Mirror gathered, that a grocer academically inclined would have to do would be to demonstrate beyond all shadow of doubt his abilities in the way of "cheese-slicing."

It was pointed out that to approach a 30 lb. round of Stilton armed only with a length of wire, and to detach from the main bulk the weight demanded by a customer exact to nearest ¼ oz., was, in fact, a most difficult knack to acquire.

PAPER SOLD AS TEA.

Short weight in the sale of such necessaries as bread, tea and sugar was the subject of some remarkable instances quoted by James Allis in a paper read recently before the Society of Inspectors of Weights and Measures, London, England.

Mr. Allis, who is chief of the Public

Things That Shouldn't Be

While Some Grocery Clerks Think Themselves Above Waiting on a Customer, Others Get Too Familiar for the Good of the Business.

Central Department of the L.C.C., gave three instances of the profit made on tea by the inclusion of the wrapper in the weight of the package:—

(a) A gain of 7lb. 3oz. in weighing up every 11lb.

(b) A profit of some thousands of pounds a year obtained by a firm with some hundreds of shops; and

(c) In another case the prosecution alleged that the practice represented a profit of at least £16,000 or £17,000 a year.

In connection with sugar he instanced a case where the proceedings showed that the sales worked out at 12,532 lb. of paper sold as sugar by the firm in twelve months.

Cutting Down Profits on Established Goods

One Grocer Selling for 20 Cents an Article Which Cost 25 Cents—Didn't Know That Money Was Being Lost—A Case of Price-cutting on Soap in Stouffville, Ont., Where Eight Bars of Laundry Soap are Being Sold for 25 Cents—Special Price From a Wholesaler.

By A. H. H.

One would think that there is no grocer foolish enough to purchase goods for $3.10 per dozen and sell the same for $2.40.

Yet this is an actual case and moreover it was not a case of voluntary price cutting; the grocer—who in this case is a woman—retailed the goods at 20 cents each, thinking she was making a profit. They actually cost her 25 5-6 cents each and she was therefore losing 5 5-6 cents on every article, not taking into account her cost of doing business. This is at least 12 per cent.

The above case serves to show the need of close application to business. There are numerous grocers throughout the country doing this every week. They are actually selling goods for less money than those goods cost and they don't know it.

Merchants who are watchful and careful of their selling terms may doubt the statement but it is nevertheless an absolute fact.

Profits must be protected if headway is to be made. A man many open a grocery store who has a couple of hundred dollars and apparently exist a few years on a gross profit of 5 p.c. But all the time he is sinking into a hole which finally buries him.

Where Net Profit is too Small.

Grocers of the next half century will look to adequate profits. Goods for instance which they purchase for $1 per dozen, will not be sold at 10 cents each in places where the cost of doing business is 15 p.c. because that only means 1 or 2 per cent. net profit.

To offset the unintentional selling of goods below cost there is but one remedy. It is business education on the part of the person who buys and who decides upon the market price. He must know positively whether he is paying 15 or 25 cents each for articles.

It must be remembered that while such unconscious price-cutting through ignorance of the cost is injurious to the retail trade as a whole, it effects more so the person who cuts the price. It makes it much more difficult for him to sell at the right price if he discovers his mistake, and also to sell other goods, the relative values of which are known to the general public.

If an article is sold by one grocer at 15 cents which should be sold at 30 cents, other merchants in the vicinity soon find it out. Requests are made upon them for the same price and they are often branded as "cheats" if they do not give it.

In such cases it is wise to inform the price cutter that he is selling much below cost and that he is making a price which will be recognized as the established one if others meet it. Then if they do there will be no special benefit coming to him even if he were the first one to make it. The final result would be that the whole trade in that district will be losing money when they might just as well be making a legitimate profit.

A Cut in Soap Prices.

Word emanates from Stouffville, Ont., that one grocer there is selling 8 bars of ——— soap for 25 cents. His competitors claim that he is not obtaining it from the manufacturer, but from a wholesaler who gives him a special price whereby he can sell it at 3⅛ cents a bar and break about even.

If he advertises well, he is going to sell pretty nearly all the laundry soap in Stouffville for a time. If the source of supply cuts off the special price to him—as it should—then he will be worse off than ever in going back to the established figures.

On the other hand should he continue to sell 8 bars for a quarter others will in time meet his price. Eventually that will become the established price in Stouffville—no one will benefit and all will suffer. The grocer who cut the price in the first place will then have to carry the blame. "He made the rope to hang his competitors and got hung himself."

These are representative evils in the trade which demand attention and when they are successfully coped with the trade will be on a much more sound basis.

EXTRA-PROVINCIAL LICENSE.

Law Which Comes Into Effect in British Columbia on July 1st.

Vancouver, B.C., June 16.—The law respecting Extra-Provincial Corporations doing business in British Columbia passed at the last session of the legislature comes into effect on July 1st.

Regarding the licensing and registration of extra-provincial companies the law reads:

Every extra-provincial company having gain for its purpose and object within the scope of this act is hereby required to be licensed or registered under this or some former Act, and no company, firm, broker or other person shall, as the representative or agent of, or acting in any other capacity for any such extra-provincial company carry on any of the business of an extra-provincial company, within this province until such extra-provincial company shall have been licensed or registered, as aforesaid.

This section shall apply to an extra-provincial company, notwithstanding that it was heretofore registered as a foreign company under the provisions of any Act, 1898, c. 13, s. 5; R.S. B.C., c. 44, s. 123.

Disabilities and Penalties.

If any extra-provincial company shall, without being licensed or registered pursuant to this part, carry on in the Province of British Columbia any part of its business, such extra-provincial company shall be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars for every day upon which it so carries on business, and so long as it remains unlicensed or unregistered under this Act, it shall not be capable of maintaining any action, suit or other proceeding in any court in British Columbia, in respect of any contract made in whole or in part within this province in the course of or in connection with its business, contrary to the requirements of this part;

Provided, however, upon the granting or restoration of the license or the issuance or restoration of the certificate of registration or the removal of any suspension of either the license or the certificate, any action, suit or other proceeding may be maintained as if such license or certificate had been granted or restored, or such suspension removed before the institution of any such action, suit or other proceedings."

When the act was being drawn up there was a provision respecting the doing of business through travelers or by correspondence, but at the last minute this was thrown out. It read:

Provided that taking orders for or buying or selling goods, wares and merchandise by travelers or by correspondence, if the company has no resident agent or representative and no office or place of business in British Columbia, shall not be deemed a carrying on of business within the meaning of this Act.

Provided, also, that the onus of proving that a company has no resident agent or representative and no office or place of business in British Columbia, or that it is not carrying on business in British Columbia, shall in any prosecution for any infringement of this section rest upon the accused, and

Therefore, all incorporated companies, doing business in this province in any way, should either obtain license or become registered before July 1st, as otherwise, they will be not only liable to penalties, but will be unable to maintain any action suits or other proceedings in the courts of British Columbia.

The Markets—Prospects of Canned Goods Prices

Will Opening Prices be Higher or Lower Than a Year Ago?—The Former Is More Likely, But Advances Will be Slight—Big Crop of Strawberries Will Require Plenty of Sugar—Prices May Go Up Again—Firmness in Dried Fruits.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Firm.

Seed Tapioca—½c higher.

Prunes—Firm and likely to advance.

Canned Beef—Higher.

Montreal, June 16, 1910.

Since the weather has cleared up, trade has received a big impetus, and nearly all lines of trade report improved conditions. Collections are much better and orders are being placed for season supplies, where before they were only to meet immediate requirements.

Prices are much the same as last week, the most noteworthy advances being seed tapioca and the three lines of canned beef.

Country buyers are much more numerous and local retailers are laying in larger stocks. Taken all in all, this summer trade promises to be good.

Sugar remains firm in spite of a slightly weaker raw market.

A rather alarming report regarding the tomato situation has been spreading, and has greatly increased the buying in this line. Other vegetables have had a good fair share of this demand, due to the same cause.

Sugar—Raw sugars show a slightly weaker condition this week, though they are still high enough to warrant present refined prices. Trade is dull, however, and buyers seem to be waiting for the weather to settle down before laying in any large supply.

TORONTO—Wholesalers are practically sold out of peas and prices are much higher than the opening figures which came out last July. While corn is quoted at 80c, a number of jobbers would not care to sell that low and tomatoes are firm at 85 cents; some declare they ought to be higher.

So far as canned fruits are concerned all prices are strong and since opening last year are 7½c higher. It is believed that not many canned raspberries are yet on hand, but that there are more strawberries. The latter fruit will be a bumper crop this year and there is likely to be a glut at some time during the season. Canners will therefore likely buy them rather cheaply.

Opening prices for canned goods will be out some time in July. It is not anticipated that they will be lower than last year's opening figures as then canners were shading as near to cost as possible in view of competition. Neither is it expected that they will be much higher this year at least, and if they are sold to wholesalers on the contract selling plan basis, they are likely to remain pretty much uniform during the season. This arrangement is probable this year.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Canned Peas—Almost all sold.

Canned Fruits—Firm market.

Sugar—Large demand.

Starch—Selling well.

Toronto, June 16, 1910.

Warmer weather has stimulated trade considerably during the week. This is particularly so in the case of sugar, canned fruits and vegetables and dried and evaporated fruits. Now is the time to expect hot weather and it is here; and when it comes in season trade responds in particular lines, the same as it does when cold weather comes in its proper season.

So far as prices are concerned there have been few changes. Sugar is temporarily weak but nothing but manipulation contrary to its natural tendency will make it decline. With the strawberry season upon us it is bound to sell rapidly and there is little or no likelihood of it going down. It is generally believed that the end of the month will see another advance.

Teas are quite strong. Reports from the east indicate that newly picked Ceylons are showing a falling off in quality and flavory teas are likely to be scarce. New crop Japans are expected here soon.

Evaporated apples are strengthening and quoted by some higher than a week ago. The reason is that the supply is getting short.

Currants are firm in primary markets due to rains in Greece, while raisins, almonds and olives are strong in Spain due to drought.

Laundry starches are enjoying a heavy sale just now, this being their best season.

Sugar—Locally the sugar market remains about the same as a week ago. Sales are heavy because retailers are anticipating the strawberry preserving season and are getting supplied. This fruit will be an enormous crop and will be fairly cheap so that sugar will sell well from now on. While temporarily the market is not so strong, there is no chance for a decline unless unnatural manipulation, which no person can foresee, takes place. Prices are some 60c higher than a year ago and are likely to go higher before many weeks pass. So far as the visible supply is concerned the total stock of Europe and America, 2,528,572 tons, as against 2,683,823 tons last year at the same date. The decrease of stock is 155,251 tons, against a decrease of 172,292 last week. Total stocks and afloats together show a visible supply of 2,668,572 tons, against 2,788,823 tons last year, or a decrease of 120,251 tons according to Willett & Gray.

Dried Fruits—For a time wholesalers found difficulty in selling dried and evaporated fruits, but recently they have sold well. Prunes are scarce in the medium sized and are firming up at the coast. Some wholesalers are out of apricots almost and prices are marked up. There is little or nothing doing in figs and dates as is usual at this time. Currants are strong in Greece, due to wet weather, as pointed out last week. Raisins are firm in the Spanish market but no price changes are expected to the retailer for a time at least.

Tea—Reports indicate that the new crop Japans are equal in quality to last year, but that the aggregate crop quantity will be less. Prices are firm in Japans, and are from 1 to 2 cents higher than last year. Ceylons and Indians are also firm. A recent London cable says that the quality of Ceylons is falling off and the flavory teas are likely to be scarce for a time. The weather has not been all that is required for the right growth.

Another drop in flour has been made, the quotation now being $6.50. Still there has been no reduction in the price of bread, and the declaration is made that inferior flour is used to a large extent, this having come into requisition when the price soared.

Local butter for the first time for a long period has come down to 30c from 35c.

There has also been an advance in the price of canned salmon, the best grades going up from about $5.75 to $6.50.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, N.S., June 16, 1910.

The wholesale grocers report business fully up to the average for the season of the year.

The butter market shows considerable improvement this week, and prices are much easier. Good dairy butter in rolls and small tubs, is more plentiful. Choice creamery is also down 2c per pound. Eggs are in fairly good supply, and are still selling at 19c per dozen.

Prices of provisions continue high, and there does not seem to be any indication of a drop. The best hams are quoted at 18½c, and side bacon at 20c. These prices are higher than ever before quoted here. There is a marked decrease in the sales of lard, owing to the high price. Tomatoes (canned) are 97½c, less 2½c per dozen on ten-case lots. Rolled oats are lower. There is a good demand for oranges. bananas, pineapples, and the quality of the fruit is excellent. The late arrivals of U. S. strawberries are of better quality.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., June 16, 1910.

Ontario flours dropped another 15c on Friday last, and the wholesale quotation is now $5.50 to $5.60 per barrel. Since the first of January the price of Ontario brands has declined 55c, and Manitoba 40c. Butter has dropped 2c a pound, and is now selling at 18c to 20c in tubs, and 22c to 25c in prints. Prices in other lines are unchanged.

As a result of price-cutting by the local retail dealers the consumers are getting bananas cheaper here now than they can be bought in Boston, where they are landed direct from the steamers. The fruit is selling at 10c to 15c a dozen, and in some cases as low as three dozen for 25c.

GROCERS PASS STRONG RESOLUTIONS.

Want Manufacturers of Proprietary Goods to Sell on Contract Basis—Object to a Price Advance.

Toronto, June 17.—On Monday night the grocers' section of the Toronto branch of the R.M.A., met and among the resolutions adopted were the following:

"That in the opinion of this section it is desirable that the retail grocers should be represented on the joint committee of wholesalers and retailers called to discuss trade questions, by five active grocers at present engaged in business and we recommend that the executive of the provincial section be urged to exercise their authority and appoint five such active grocers on that committee."

"That the representatives of this section of the R.M.A., who meet with the committee of wholesalers to confer with manufacturers with respect to better trade conditions, be instructed to insist upon all manufacturers of package goods and proprietary articles sold in the grocery trade, marketing their products on a direct contract plan thus maintaining a uniform price and insuring to the retailer a legitimate living profit."

"That a committee consisting of W. L. Collard, D. W. Clark and J. F. Holloway, be appointed to wait upon the charcoal firms re the recent advance in the price to the retailer."

"That a committee consisting of five be appointed to wait on a committee from the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association to confer re possibility of amalgamation."

"That the executive board interview the Board of Works in regard to having our pavements properly laid and that the Teamsters' Union, the Wholesale Grocers' Guild and the Bakers' Association and all others interested in the welfare of horses be asked to co-operate with us in this matter."

There was also a resolution passed disapproving of the action of a soap manufacturing company in reducing the size of the bar of its soap instead of raising the price and "thus giving the grocers an opportunity to make a fair profit by selling it at 5c a bar."

Frou-Frou

The World's Greatest Wafer.

MacGreegor Specialty Company, Toronto, Canada. Seattle, Washington, Feb 1, 1910

GENTLEMEN:

In reply to your favor of 27th ult., would beg to state that Frou-Frou is the best seller we know of on this coast, once an order is placed it means a repeater.

The goods have many great merits, one of the principal ones being they keep fresh, moist and sweet indefinitely, never knew of a single can becoming rancid. We placed Frou-Frou on the Great Northern R.R. Steamer "Minnesota," one of the largest in the world, and it is on salt water all the time and in the different tropics, and we reserved a can for a test as to its keeping qualities, and on its last arrival here December 22nd, 1909, the can that was left open was just as fresh and sweet as when placed on board, being nearly a year back and forward from Japan, China, Manilla and other far Eastern points to the port of Seattle.

Yours faithfully,
THE THOMPSON-GAY CO.

Grocers run no risk in stocking this honey-combed, cream-filled wafer, any season of the year. The crispness and flavor of Frou-Frou are always the same.

Warm Weather Aids Demand for Hog Products

English and Canadian Markets Stimulated—Heavy Production of Butter, But Consumption is Likewise Heavy — Export Demand for Cheese Light in View of Prices—Eggs Quite Plentiful

Reports from England indicate a brisk demand for bacon, due in a great measure to the warm weather, which is always bacon weather. The same applies to the Canadian trade, the weather here also stimulating smoked and cooked hams.

The week also showed a slight decrease in the prices of live and dressed hogs, due to somewhat heavier supplies, but there still remains room for declines before the bacon and hog product situation will be placed on a satisfactory basis.

Production of butter is heavy and prices show a weakness. The consumption is heavy, too, and it is not anticipated that prices will dip low. Supplies from Australia and Siberia have diminished on the English market, but the outflow from Ireland shows no signs of falling off. The supply as a whole has diminished.

Up to the present supplies of Canadian cheese on the London market have not been sufficient to overtake consumption. English buyers are unwilling to pay advances asked here and business is therefore somewhat quiet.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—The market is higher for compound lards, due to the continued high price of cotton seed, oil. The advance is ½c. Porks are easier, though the difference so far is slight. The market for cured meats is firm, hams being particularly so. Dressed hogs are 50c cheaper, and live 25c. Trade is only fair.

Butter—Butter is coming in freely at present, and prices show a weakening; 24½c is all that new milk creamery is bringing. All signs point to a large make this year, but undoubtedly the rapidly-increasing consumption will serve to keep the situation strong. Receipts for the week are 20,556 packages, as against 13,492 same week last year. For the season they are 80,370 packages, as against 60,633 same season last year.

Cheese—Demand for export is still light, as New Zealand stocks in England are far from being exhausted. Locally the market is only fair, but about as good as could be expected at this time of year. Receipts are gradually going behind what they were at this time last year, being only 69,066 boxes, as against 70,174 same week last year. For the season they are 226,673 boxes, as against 208,788 same season, 1909. The reason assigned for this gradual loss is the closing down of several of the factories in order to go into the cream exportation business. It is not thought that the effect will be as serious as at first was expected.

WHY WE HAVE DEAR BUTTER.

Not Enough Farmers Trying to Produce It, Says One Dealer.

Detroit, June 15.—A local dealer in butter and eggs asserts that the price of these staples will never decrease as long as five per cent. of the population is trying to supply the other 95 per cent.

This dealer puts part of the responsibility for the growing scarcity of butter upon conditions on the farm. He says, "The situation will never be remedied, so far as the farmer is concerned, until a perfect milking machine is invented. Milking is hard work. Men don't like it, and it is almost impossible for women to do it. The fault is, however, in part with the farmer. He thinks nobody ought to be idle on a farm. A hired hand cannot plough by lantern light, but he can milk by it in the morning and at night, and the employer demands the service. Men won't work under such conditions.

"There are other reasons also for the scarcity of butter. Cows will not give milk unless they have proper fodder. You can get milk if you feed a cow 65 or 70 cent corn, but you cannot feed corn at that price and sell 35-cent butter. Then, again, it takes from 20 to 25 pounds of milk to make a pound of butter; that is to say, from 10 to 12½ quarts. It costs 3 cents a pound, laid down in Detroit, to produce butter. Ten quarts of milk bring 70 cents, and there is no labor or expense other than shipping.

TRADE WITH ITALY AND BELGIUM.

Intermediate Tariff Rates Granted By Canada in View of Friendly Relations.

Ottawa, June 13.—The Canadian intermediate tariff rates granted to France are extended to Belgium and the Netherlands in return for the friendly attitude which these countries have always maintained toward Canada, and in view of the fact that they are now both low-tariff countries, and are entitled to equal treatment with France. Friendly trade relations have also been announced with Italy.

Canada gives Italy the intermediate rates on eighteen items, viz: Macaroni and vermicelli, canned vegetables, lime juice and other fruit syrups, light wines and champagne, castile soap, pomades, essential oils, n.o.p., white and cream-colored lace, and embroideries of cotton, women's and children's Italian clothes, etc., when imported in the unfinished state, church vestments, velvets, velveteens, plush and slik fabrics, ribbons of all kinds and materials, musical instruments and parts thereof, head ornaments, statues and statuettes, and fine kid gloves.

Canada is given the Italian conventional or minimum tariff rates on seventeen of the principal items of Canadian export to that country, viz.: Condensed milk, carbide of calcium, timber and lumber, furniture, carriage wheels and parts of carriages, smallwares of wood, wood pulp, paper, pasteboard, fur muffs, boots and shoes, tools and implements of cast iron or steel, sewing machines, cement, horses, fish and cheese.

At present the largest items in our import from Belgium are glass iron and steel, sugar and molasses. The imports of sugar and molasses reached the figure $248,000 in 1909. The largest item in our import trade from Italy is naturally enough fruits, of which we imported in 1909, $238,000. The corresponding figure for the year previous was $305,000 out of a total fruit export of $20,000,000. Of macaroni and vermicelli we bought in 1909, $73,000 worth, while in the year previous the imports were $94,000, and strangely enough the Italian returns do not classify this product among their exports.

The consumption of olive oil seems to have increased rapidly, the figures in 1909 being $38,000, a more than threefold increase in the last four years. In 1908 their exports were valued at $12,000,000 and they have exceeded $14,000,000.

SOLD ADULTERATED PEPPER.

Kingston, Ont., June 16.—In the police court this week the magistrate fined three grocers who pleaded guilty to having sold adulterated pepper, $10 and costs each. An inspector of the Inland Revenue Department laid the charge. The grocers claimed they bought the pepper from wholesalers, who guaranteed it pure. Some time ago the grocers were also fined for selling impure coffee. The magistrate regretted he had to impose the fine, and urged the Retail Merchants' Association to get after the wholesalers, who, he declared, are partially responsible.

Farringer Bros., Medicine Hat, Alta., are opening into the grocery business, adding it to their flour and feed store.

Economy

NO ALUM

Economy really means—supply to your customers nothing but the best, because it pays in the long run. Baking Powder containing Alum may, and should, cost you a few cents less per dozen than Magic, because it costs less to manufacture. Alum is used in baking powder because it is cheap. Don't handle cheap goods because they are cheap. Cheapness and goodness seldom go together.

MAGIC BAKING POWDER

MAGIC is a medium-priced baking powder and the only well-known one made in Canada that does NOT contain Alum.

PAYS HEAVY EXPRESS CHARGES.

Retail Grocer Complains of Being Taxed by Two Express Companies.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—The difficulty I, with many others, have in shipping produce and getting goods here is principally by express. Toronto is our best market for eggs and butter. In the winter, spring and fall, on account of frost, we are obliged to ship by express. Brownsville is our nearest shipping point, and in shipping from there to Toronto goods have to go by two express companies, and the cost is nearly double what it should be.

It virtually shuts us out from shipping to Toronto, and this should be remedied. I think it is a matter which should go before the Railway Commission. We have no other place for shipping by express, except we go five miles to Corinth. From there goods go by one express company, and the cost is about half the amount it otherwise would be.

But we should not be obliged to go there, when there is an express company almost at our door.

Eggs come in rather slowly in winter and they should be got to market as fresh as possible. It does not pay to drive five miles with just one case, and in the spring eggs are always sold on a drop market.

I hope you will lay this before the Railway Commission and have the matter rectified.

GAVE CASH SYSTEM TRIAL.

New Ontario Merchants Favor It—How They Combat Mail Order Houses.

Englehart, Ont., June 15th.—New advocates of the cash system of doing business are Errett & Co., grocers of this town. Two years ago they decided that they were through with the credit system and announced their determination to their patrons.

"At first," they state, "we noticed a decided falling off in our trade, but after the first month or two the old customers began to come back together with new ones and since that time business has been steadily increasing. We find that we are able to sell our goods possibly more reasonable than previously and this fact is appreciated by the public."

They have not adopted any special collecting system, following only the simplest plans. They conduct special sales which are profitable and which improve trade, bringing in new customers. "Our best drawing sale," said one of the members of the firm, "was that in which we gave to the customer whose cash purchases reached the greatest total a handsome cut glass water set. There was keen competition in this instance and quite a number were materially interested in it.

"We handle only high class goods and have found that it is not such a difficult matter to educate the people in regard to the advisability of buying only goods of quality. At practically every opportunity we endeavor to explain the peculiar advantages and having once explained to a customer's satisfaction they are won over for good.

"The only methods of dealing with the mail order question is to demonstrate to your customers that you can offer them just as good inducements and point out to them their want of loyalty as shown by thus turning the channels of trade away from their home town. It seems that the wholesaler could assist the retailer in this respect by selling at one price only, regardless of quantity, not giving large mail order houses an extra discount. This distinguishing between the large and small retailer is not fair to the latter, who are thus in the very beginning placed at a disadvantage if they have not been given the same terms."

Blended Flour Underwent a Slight Decline

Wheat Market Rather Listless—Export Trade in Flour Practically Nil—Canadian Flour Conditions are Fairly Good—Estimates of the Wheat Acreage in United States and Canada.

The flour market has not shown much improvement upon the past week. From a Canadian standpoint it is a little stronger although some of the millers do not admit it. The total world's supply of wheat is 32,000,000 bus. greater than this time last year and reports of the new crops are most encouraging. Reports given out recently estimate that the acreage of wheat in Canada and the United States respectively are 9,295,000 and 19,742,000.

It has been stated in some quarters that a reverse movement may be expected soon as following the last declines. This is not accepted by the majority, although it is not easy to surmise what way the market will move next. Flour sales are steady.

MONTREAL.

TORONTO.

Flour.—Canadian trade in flour is fairly good considering all the conditions. Export trade is however nil and the market in general has not improved to any extent. Local millers, however, speak fairly well of trade which was benefited by the last decrease in prices. A decline of ten cents in blended flour was reported during the week.

BLEACHED FLOUR QUESTION.

Ottawa, June 16—The question of the bleaching of flour by artificial means, which has been the subject of investigation, as well as litigation, under the Pure Food Laws of the United States, is dealt with in a bulletin just issued by the Inland Revenue Department.

A total of 223 samples were examined. Canada has no legislation with regard to the subject, and whether or not it may be considered desirable to prohibit the manufacture and sale of bleached flour is for the present in abeyance.

The report says that of 75 samples showing measurable amounts of nitrates, twenty-five contain not more than one part per million, leaving fifty samples to contain above one per million of nitrates. The chief analyst says:

"It is amply evident that the bleaching of flour by oxides of nitrogen has resulted from a popular demand for white flour, and a conviction on the part of the millers that they were meeting this demand in a perfectly harmless manner. Whether or not any danger to public health results from bleaching flour by oxides of nitrogen, is a most important question, and one upon which judgment is reserved."

SOME JOBBERS FINED.

Penalized by Soap Manufacturers—Another Net Weight Bill.

New York, June 16—The soap business appears to be gradually getting down to a basis desired by the jobbers. The withdrawal of cash rebates by one of the large firms last week is reported as smoothing out inconveniences on the side of both the manufacturer and wholesaler. This company insists emphatically, however, on the maintenance of its prices, and calls attention to penalties for violation thereof. Another large soap concern is enforcing rigorously the protection of its price lists, and has within a short time inflicted fines on half a dozen New York jobbers who are said to have broken the rules.

The Senate now has a bill on weight branding. It was introduced by Senator Page, of Vermont, on May 10. This makes the situation more serious, from the grocers' point of view. The opposition has made a good fight, but the movement appears to be gaining ground.

Senator Page's bill is all the more important because, unlike that of Congressman Moore, it is not confined alone to the District of Columbia. It concerns interstate commerce. Section 2 reads: "That the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State of Territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country or any article for consumption by man or other animal, in package form which does not have the correct weight, measure, or numerical count on the outside, but not on the bottom of the package, is hereby prohibited."

Reasonable tolerances from time to time are allowed for unavoidable variations in filling such packages and for changes in the weight or measure of the contents due to natural causes.

No dealer will be prosecuted under the act provided he can establish a guaranty signed by the wholesaler, jobber or manufacturer, to the effect that the article is not misbranded.

We would rather our mills were burned or robbed

IN THE commercial world, Brother Grocer, there are worse things than either Robbery or Fire.

For instance?

Anything that might in the slightest degree tend to lower the Tremendous Value and Selling Force of an Established Trade Mark.

A Trade Mark, you see, is a manufacturer's Commercial Signature—his Identification Sign—his Guaranty of Steadfast Quality—his Pledge of Lasting Faith with the Buyer.

An Imposition 'twould be on the consumer's confidence to put out Unworthy Goods, to lower his standard, to fall below his Best, almost a Forgery—being done in the Shadow and Shelter of his Own Signature.

For the maker is forever up against his OWN RECORD.

Then his Trade Mark would deceive, representing his last product for what it was Once but Is Not Now.

Fix awhile your eyes on the FIVE ROSES crest — think what it means to US, to Mrs. Ultimate Consumer, to YOU.

A watchman who never sleeps—whose vigilance unceasing guards your flour custom against that most seductive and unprincipled of all business enemies, the Price Cutter.

Alert to keep your profits whole and safe, your cash drawer air-tight.

This watchman is the FIVE ROSES Trade Mark, Brother Grocer, the label you might see on every flour bag and barrel you sell.

Our greatest single asset—ours and yours, too.

Because it represents and stands for a Manitoba Spring Wheat Flour of a Known and Never-Lowered Quality, of High-grade Pedigree.

A flour backed by 22 years of Making Good—capital enough to secure top-notch men, methods, materials—83 elevators sifting the cream of the crop—a milling plant that is the last syllable in the last word in modern flour-making lore.

Backed by Big Men who would rather a thousand times see their immense plant robbed, burned, annihilated than lower that one essential element—FIVE ROSES QUALITY, by putting out Unworthy Flour.

So you see, Brother Grocer, how safe your custom might be with FIVE ROSES, how permanent your profits.

So henceforth let FIVE ROSES Trade Mark be your flour watchman, guarding your business, your profits, your turnover from the attacks of price cutters, from Unknown and Unguaranteed goods.

Learn what it is to be enthusiastic on a Good Seller, Brother Grocer. And sell FIVE ROSES too.

More Advances in Lemons Point to High Prices

Pineapples are High—Good Demand in all Lines of Fruit—Oranges are Probably the Quietest—Lemons Considered Good Property—Canadian Strawberries are Expected to Reach High Tide of Production in Another Week or Ten Days.

Fruits are enjoying a heavy demand now that their season has begun to reach its zenith. Canadian strawberries have been received from the growers, but the supply has been limited up to the present. Before another week slips around this market, it is asserted, will be its busiest. Oranges are having a steady demand at rather high prices. Lemons were increased one shilling on the home market this week, and continues to give indications of firmness which some have stated may reach five-dollar fruit this year. Nothing definite yet can be offered the trade having to be content with opinions based on present conditions. At any rate, lemons are good property. Following a week of low prices, during which there was a general run on pineapples, prices suddenly braced and have held firm.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—Lemons are firm and there seems a good prospect that the market will advance shortly. Strong demand and rather light stocks are the causes of this expected change. Bananas are higher again. Grape fruit are firm, with a good demand. Supplies of pineapples are coming in freely and prices are down to $2.50 to $2.65. Oranges show a slight weakness, but it is probably only temporary.

Fish—With the exception of haddock, other lines of fresh fish show a decided scarcity this week. This is undoubtedly due in large measure to the storms prevailing on the coast. Mackerel are particularly hard to obtain. It looks almost as if the mackerel season would be a failure this year. Lake fish are rather more plentiful. Trade is good.

TORONTO.

Green Fruit—The warm weather has given an impetus to the fruit business, and owing to the heat, trade is carried on rapidly in order that deliveries may be made to consumers while the fruit is at its best. The local fruit exchange has not yet opened, awaiting the arrivals of Canadian fruits. Strawberries are receiving, but only in small quantities. However, it is expected that the shipments will begin in earnest about the middle of next week. Local dealers anticipate that event and prices should slump, as it is asserted that the crop will be a large one. Grape fruit is being received from California, and is going to the retailer at practically the same quotations as the Florida brands demanded. Pineapples are firm at a higher price. The demand is good. There is a certain amount of waste to the shipments these days, but the wholesalers and brokers suffer most in this respect, as the retailer has an opportunity to see what he is buying. Cantaloupes and watermelons are arriving now from the south. Plums are also among the new lines offered. The demand for strawberries remains firm. In this respect it may be said that Toronto imported over 100 cars of these berries this year, in comparison with 53 cars last year. Oranges are firm, the New York markets paying an advanced price for the best fruit. In regard to lemons there is nothing very definite as yet. They are likely to be higher, according to some reports that have been received. Deliveries have arrived, some of them in none too good condition. Complaints of this nature have been heard in much stronger tone in New York and an investigation will be made by the Government inspector of conditions at the places of shipment. It is stated by some parties that the packers are to blame, but the latter state that the trouble is caused on the boats. At any rate, it is known that some of the vessels had to close their hatches during rough weather for the benefit of the steerage passengers. The fruit became heated with

FROM THE OUTSIDE WORLD.

Filberts are the fruit of the cultivated hazel tree, the term filbert means "full beard" and is so named on account of its having many long "beards" of husks. It is produced largely on the Asiatic shores of the Black Sea.

Russia exported in 1909, 23,472,658 great hundreds (a great hundred being 120) of eggs or a total of 2,816,718,960 eggs. Great Britain took more than one quarter of the entire stock.

Only the best wet dates known as Fard or Nuther Fard are shipped to America, the rest of the Arabian crop going to India.

The general opinion regarding the walnut crop in Orange County, Cal., is that the yield will be normal. There will be about half a crop of apricots.

A despatch from London, Eng., says that baskets of outdoor strawberries from France are on sale at Covent Garden for the first time this year. A basket containing six pounds has realized 4s. Evidently the people of the old land are not as fortunate in their early fruit resources as are the people of this continent.

In England there is a deterioration of pepper going on and the public has become accustomed to the poorer article. White or bleached pepper seems to have supplanted the black or genuine article.

STATE OF ONTARIO FRUIT TREES.

Robt. Thompson, St. Catharines, Ont., president of the Niagara Peninsula Fruit Growers' Association, writes The Canadian Grocer as follows regarding the fruit outlook: "The weather for some weeks has been cool and backward. Notwithstanding this the fruit, when well cared for, is looking well. Peaches are heavily set with fruit, and it will be necessary for the grower to thin heavily if he expects good fruit. In driving through the country the sprayed orchards can be picked out easily as the unsprayed are red with curl leaf. Orchards, when the work was done late in the season or carelessly, are affected more or less. Around Winona nearly all the peach orchards have been sprayed well. Around Grimsby and Beamsville the work has either not been done or very carelessly as orchard after orchard look as if the fire had gone through them. From Jordan and east around St. Catharines, the work has been well done, injured orchards being the exception. Time and sulphur has again proven itself to be the best material to spray with, while the trees are dormant."

RETAILER GETS 18 MONTHS.

A. W. Cooper, a former Nutana, Sask., merchant, was placed on trial recently in the supreme court, charged with obtaining goods to the amount of $850 with intent to defraud. This man arrived at Nutana about fifteen months ago, claiming that he had a large amount of money in England, to prove which he produced letters of credit from various bankers, which afterward proved bogus. He bought a store from B. A. Archibald and goods from various wholesalers, and sold out the stock and pocketed the proceeds and gave his creditors the slip. He was captured, brought back to the city to stand trial, and after being allowed out on bail, jumped his bonds and disappeared May of last year, and was not heard of again until April of this year, when he was captured at Calgary and brought back to Saskatoon to stand trial. He was found guilty and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment.

DISHONEST WEIGHING.

New York retail grocers as a rule are honest, but that there are many exceptions a visit to the Bureau of Weights and Measures will demonstrate. The rogues' gallery there has many exhibits. The officials will show measures with false bottoms and weights, dug out, and filled up with wax and then blackened. The officials will also tell how some of the dealers doctor their scales almost before the back of the sealer is turned, and then exhibit the inspection certificate as proof of their honesty to the doubting buyer. It is the custom to blame the East Side dealer for most of this kind of fraud, but violations are said to be quite common in higher circles. Sometimes, according to report, the large dealer sets a pace in this direction that the co-called small corner store has to follow for self-preservation.

Educating Consumers on Adulterated Foods

Exhibition in London, Eng., for This Purpose—Visitors Shown How Adulterated Coffee, Cocoa, Jams, Etc., are Manufactured —Some Ingredients Detrimental to Health.

An exhibition was recently held in London, Eng., to show the public how certain adulterations are made. The goods displayed were all purchased in various shops. The visitor was shown how cheap coffee is made from chicory, baked chestnuts, acorns, horse beans, etc., all of which have but little natural flavor or aroma. This is provided by the addition of a little of the real article.

Adulterated cocoa is faked from arrowroot, cornflour, sago, tapioca, etc., colored with "cocoa red," a mixture of Venetian red and umber. Inferior cocoas often contain injurious substances, such as red lead, red ochre, sulphate of lime, etc. Cheap chocolate is made in much the same way. Fancy chocolates are often glazed with shellac. Licorice ladders and laces, etc., so popular with children, are faked from chalk and starch colored with lampblack.

To be Found in Jams.

In the production of compound jam, the "fakir" has developed great skill. In the poorer quarters of London one often sees jam for sale at from 11d to 1s 3d per jar of 7 lbs. More often than not it is sold in "penn'orths," such a portion being sufficient to "smear" several slices of bread. Samples of these preserves have frequently been analyzed, and have been found to contain fermented fruit pulp, seaweed, turnips, swedes, beet roots, apple refuse from cider presses, glucose, molasses, saccharin, benzoic and salicylic compounds, red and yellow ochre, vermilion, Prussian blue, tumeric, sulphate of soda, and lime. Where it has been necessary to provide small pips, as in raspberry jam, sawdust is used.

Adulterated Bread.

All sorts of tricks are resorted to in some quarters in making bread. Rye, barley, peas, beans, and potatoes are employed as substitutes for wheat, alum, sulphate of zinc, and other injurious chemicals being added to whiten the product and to arrest formentation.

It is apparent from the above that London has a need for the enforcement of the Pure Foods Act. It is also evident that the people who suffer most from these adulterations are the poorer class, who are unable to pay the high prices. These are not exaggerated cases, for the goods exhibited were actually taken from stores. None of these goods, of course, find their way to the Canadian market, as it demands quality.

TRADE NOTES.

The Christie Fish Co., of Dartmouth, N.S., is to be liquidated.

The Knechtel Grocery Company, formerly of Berlin, Ont., has purchased the grocery business of Beal & Co., Stratford, Ont.

A. L. Beattie, Stratford, Ont., last week moved his stock into his new store on Ontario Street of that city.

THE BEST IN NEW IDEAS.

The Lindsay, Ont., correspondent writes: "I never saw a better number." said J. E. Adams, of Adams Bros., when referring to the recent publication of The Grocer's Spring and Export Number. "The Grocer certainly believes in giving the grocers the very best possible in the line of information, new ideas, etc. The number is a very creditable one in every respect, and the paper itself is a journal I certainly would not be without."

Other grocers expressed themselves in a like manner.

FRIENDS—NOT GROWLERS

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes never comes back to you with growls from the housekeeper. It is always up to the same high standard maintained for forty years, and is always just right. That's why we have the thousands upon thousands of grocers pushing it everywhere. Grocers don't wish to run the risk of losing a good customer by passing out an inferior stove polish, which is wrong more often than it is right. RISING SUN makes friends for you and for us in every household where you put it.

MORSE BROS., Props. - Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

The Polish of Quality!

Lasts surprisingly, Polishes rapidly. Sells phenomenally. Is waterproof. Wears off slowly. Leaves excellent profit.

Such is "2 in 1." Stock it.

Berkel's Improved Slicing Machine

BERKEL'S Latest Improvement Patent Knife Guard to protect operators from accidents by thoughtlessly getting their hands against the circular knife. The only slicing machine in the world that has this protection.

BERKEL'S is the machine with the Patent Automatic Sharpener, by means of which the keen cutting edge on the knife is constantly maintained. The only machine with an automatic sharpening device. Simply press the Carborundum wheel shown in the cut above the knife downward and it strikes the knife edge at just the proper angle, a few turns of the wheel and your knife has an edge like a razor.

Will Slice Boiled Ham and Bacon Down to the Last Ounce

We call attention to the photographic production of two plates of boiled ham, there is just one pound of ham on each plate, it was all cut from the same piece, the eight slices on the right hand plate were cut with an ordinary knife, while the twenty uniform slices on the left hand plate were sliced on a slicing machine. This is an average result. The difference can be more or less marked according to the skill and time given the hand cutting, however the machine never can vary, the customer is always protected by dealing where there is a BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine. Dried Beef can be sliced thinner, quicker and better on BERKEL'S than any other made. The BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine is now used by Grocers, Butchers, Department stores, Delicatessens, Hotels, Restaurants, Hospitals, Educational Institutions, Steamship and Railway Companies, Charitable Institutions, Penal Institutions, the Army and Navy, Soldiers' Homes, etc. BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machine can be set to cut automatically (14) different thicknesses, from 1-40 of an inch up to ¾ of an inch, "it cuts bread or meat equally well," requires no skill to operate and will slice perfectly more meat or bread in twelve minutes than the most expert cutter can slice by hand in an hour. While it is a hand machine, for several years many packers, as well as grocers and marketmen who do a large sliced meat business. have been running their BERKEL'S Improved Slicing Machines by mechanical power. Enough pieces of bacon can be put on this machine to cut 300 slices a minute. This should be of interest to those who put up bacon in boxes, glass or tin cans.

Get Purity Flour To Help You Win The Home-Baking Trade

There is only ONE way for you to win a larger share of the trade of the women who bake their own bread. That is to provide the home-bakers with a better flour than they are at present using.

Provide them with a flour that excels in strength, in nutriment, in uniformity, that will make whiter loaves. Then you'll get their trade.

Such a flour is

PURITY FLOUR

It is made exclusively from the high-grade constituents of the hard wheat berry. It therefore possesses greater strength and nutriment than flour made of the low and the high-grade constituents mixed together.

The tests for uniformity are so careful and exact that the quality of PURITY flour is absolutely the same from the beginning to the end of each crop year.

And the loaves baked from PURITY are as "white as the driven snow"---the pride of the home-baker.

Of course, PURITY flour will cost the home-bakers a little more per bag or barrel, but they will be glad to pay the little extra price for so much extra quality.

And you will have their permanent trade after they have tried one bag of PURITY, for it will prove that it is more economical than ordinary flour, because it makes

Do You Sell Wafers?

If so, read what a Pacific Coast firm have to say about the keeping qualities of

Frou-Frou

The World's Greatest Wafer.

MacGreegor Specialty Company, Toronto, Canada.

Seattle, Washington, Feb 1, 1910.

GENTLEMEN:

In reply to your favor of 27th ult., would beg to state that Frou-Frou is the best seller we know of on this coast, once an order is placed it means a repeater.

The goods have many great merits, one of the principal ones being they keep fresh, moist and sweet indefinitely, never knew of a single can becoming rancid. We placed Frou-Frou on the Great Northern R.R. Steamer "Minnesota," one of the largest in the world, and it is on salt water all the time and in the different tropics, and we reserved a can for a test as to its keeping qualities, and on its last arrival here December 22nd, 1909, the can that was left open was just as fresh and sweet as when placed on board, being nearly a year back and forward from Japan, China, Manilla and other far Eastern points to the port of Seattle.

Yours faithfully,
THE THOMPSON-GAY CO.

Grocers run no risk in stocking this honey-combed, cream-filled wafer, any season of the year. The crispness and flavor of Frou-Frou are always the same.

FREE OFFER

We want every grocer in the Dominion to "Taste the Taste of Frou-Frou." Send along your name and address aud we will mail you a sample tin, with full particulars.

Remember it is more what you get for what you pay than what you pay for what you get that determines whether your business will be successful.—Poor Richard

A Toronto grocer started business away back in 1835 with a strong and steadfast belief in the sale of first-class goods at a fair price as the only basis for building sound trade. To-day this store is one of the largest in Toronto and a national reputation has been established for reliable goods.

Two years ago two young fellows started in to revolutionize the grocery trade in their section of this city. They offered goods at "cheap" prices, but soon found that they could not do this and yet sell first-class merchandise. In their efforts to please the bargain hunters they sold cheap lines. Their goods gave poor satisfaction. They built no permanent trade. Last week the Assignee's sign was on the door.

Some Light on Trade Troubles in Selling Sugar

What the "Sugar Question" Is and Some of the Contentions of Wholesalers—Will the Second Grade Cane Sugar Be Eliminated?—This is What Members of the Trade Would like to See—Cannot Sell It Profitably They Say—Retailers' Orders Accepted by Travelers In Case Market Advances.

At the present time the trade is talking about "the sugar question."

This is a rather complicated question when one considers the various grievances of all the parties interested. The wholesalers maintain that the sugar business is on a pretty bad basis. They have grievances against each other, the refiners and retailers.

One of the troubles as outlined by a wholesaler is the selling of second grade cane sugar. This sugar, he said, is sold on a gross margin of profit of 3 per cent. to compete with beet-sugar. He maintains that, since it costs the wholesaler 8 or 9 per cent to do business, there is a good deal of money lost in selling this grade. What he wants to see is the elimination altogether of the second grade cane sugar.

Accuses Retailers of Fraud.

In this connection another wholesaler had a complaint to make on moral grounds against some retailers. They buy this second grade sugar, dump it into No. 1 barrels, and sell it as No. 1 at reduced prices. This he claimed to be a fraud on the public. Others a little less unscrupulous made it "half and half" and sold at reduced prices which affected their competitors who were honest and who desired to make a little profit.

It is well known to many retailers that when the price of sugar advances they can frequently buy at the former price. Travelers either book their orders for 25 or 50 bags on condition that the market goes up within the week or they will call them up by phone just after the advance and offer them sugar at the figure.

Retailers are often amused at this regularity of travelers of practically every wholesale house in their districts. There is always a competition on to see who breaks the news to the retailer first—the winner gets the order 9 times out of 10 if the grocer is in any kind of a recipient mood.

A wholesale house told The Grocer that frequently orders were received by them amounting to some 600 barrels at the old price just after the advance occurred.

There was a suggestion thrown out at one of the wholesalers' conventions that sugar orders be filled at the price existing when the order reaches the house.

Wholesalers Want Lower Price.

The representative of one of the refineries said that the same question existed between them and the wholesale trade. When sugar advanced the wholesalers very frequently were willing to buy considerable quantities at the old price. He further declared that the wholesale trade were not living up to the Equalized Rates code which says that all orders taken by salesmen shall be billed at the price ruling when the order is taken.

Some wholesalers think that they should have a better profit on No. 1 grade. At the present time they allow the retailer 1 per cent. off for cash if the account is paid within 10 days from date of invoice.

In connection with travelers calling up retailers by phone, wholesalers sending telegrams to retailers, and the booking of orders in advance provided sugar takes a rise, there is the statement that the retail trade is often loaded up with sugar most of which is dead stock for a considerable time. This, it is claimed, frequently aids in the failure of retailer and particularly if he is in the habit of buying large quantities of other goods as well.

The question is therefore a many-sided one and presents features which are interesting to manufacturers, wholesalers and retail dealers in sugar.

TEA PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION.

The increase in the production of tea and the consumption per capita is shown in the following table, taken from an article from the London Economist:

Year.	Total.	Per Capita.
1866	102,265,000	3.42
1876	149,104,000	4.49
1886	178,891,000	4.92
1896	227,785,000	5.73
1906	270,099,000	6.18
1907	273,990,000	6.20
1908	275,415,000	6.18
1909	283,550,000	6.30

Things That Shouldn't Be

A Clerk Who Has a High Regard for Cleanliness Will Not Wipe His Face With His Apron.

Toronto Grocers Had Enjoyable Trip to Cobourg

The Twentieth-Fifth Annual Picnic of The T.R.G.A. was a Splendid Success—Weather Was Fine and Travelers Were Defeated in The Ball Game by 14-4 — Nothing Occurred to Mar the Pleasure of a Delightful Outing — Visitors Were Given the Freedom of the Lakeside Town.

(Staff Correspondence.)

Toronto, June 23.—Native runners arriving late this afternoon from Cobourg convey the intelligence that the lakeside town has almost resumed its usual quietness recently disturbed by the invasion of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association on Wednesday, June 15.

It was the occasion of their 25th annual excursion and as they have grown in years they have likewise ripened in experience with the result that they have fun-making down to a science. In this regard they were aided and abetted by many Knights of the Grip who apart from their ability to sell soap, spice and clothes lines are past masters of the art of provoking mirth.

Mayor Field at the head of a civic delegation met the grocers and their one thousand excursionists, when the good ship Turbinia tied up at the Cobourg dock, and in a graceful speech extended the freedom of the town to the invaders who accepted it with pleasure and an "I thank you."

Then did the show commence. It must be noted, however, that the Weather Man was in the best of humor and dispensed a brand of sunshine that warmed the hearts of everyone and kept Dave Clark close to the water pail. It has since been learned that Brother Bond at the last meeting of the committee, was deputed to see what could be done about guaranteeing a fine day. To carry out his task it is stated that he paid an official visit to Old Sol, who for weeks had been sulking, told him a couple of funny stories that put the old fellow laughing, and at the time of writing he is still smiling.

Of the simultaneous attacks on the various hotels there is not much to be said. The invaders literally swept all before them, stormed the dining-rooms and left only ruins behind. There was a noticeable tendency to tarry on the part of the committee who had charge of the sports, dinner having almost incapacitated them. Finally, however, a long 'bus swung down the street with Frank Johnston on the end seat, megaphone to his lips heralding the announcement that the main show was about to begin.

Some of the Fast Runners.

The sports and games claimed the attention of the crowd at Victoria Park. The events were numerous and were well contested, some of the finishes being of the keenest. The number of incidental amusing occurrences were grateful interpolations. Space will not permit recording all the results, but the Hall of Fame must be opened for some of the principal events.

100 yds., members only—1, R. Davies; 2, C. F. Thorne; 3, J. M. Cork.

50 yds., members over 45 years—1, T. Clarke; 2, D. W. Clarke; 3, D. McLean.

One quarter mile, members handicap —1, D. Bell; 2, C. F. Thorne; 3. D. W. Clarke.

Wholesale merchants' 100 yds.—1, E. McBride; 2, J. Smith.

The relay race was a hummer. It was a quarter mile with each team consisting of eight men, four grocers and four travelers. It was probably the best event of the day and the winning team did well to win out. The winners were Messrs. Ford, Bone, Kingston, King, Thorn, Smith, Harding and Elton.

The Ball Game.

But the event, par excellence, the head liner, the big attraction was the baseball game, Grocers vs. Travelers. The former entrusted their destiny to Bob Davies and during the five innings of play the travelers had a busy time of it. Everybody enjoyed the ascension and Dave Clark, the official scorer growing tired of chalking down the runs, implored the grocers to desist, which they finally did when the score board showed 14 runs to 4, with the commercial men on the short end of the teeter. Even the close friends of the grocers were somewhat doubtful regarding what the score would be and Bob Davies himself scarcely looked for a walkover. The ball was as big as a pumpkin before it behins to turn yellow, and the bat was no thicker than a fat broomhandle. For four innings the game was a whirlwind with all kinds of excitement of which the umpires contributed no small part by their decisions and their efforts to escape slaughter at the hands of an infuriated multitude. They were lured back again, however, each time and all went as merrily as a marriage bell.

The grocers lined up as follows: F. Thorne, 1b.; H. Johnston c., R. Davies p., T. Gould 3b., J. M. Cork c.f., T. Clark 2b., J. Williamston rf., J. Burns s.s., Carlton lf.

A Great Catch.

Thorne was the "Grimshaw" of the game, driving the young balloon deep and hard for three runs out of four times up. Stevens the travelers' box artist was easy for the grocers, who gave evidence of considerable ability. Jerry Burns distinguished himself by catching a screamer straight from the bat. It stuck in his hands like gum and retired the travelers who had the bases full, but two men were down. Jerry likewise found himself on first and a wild throw went far over the baseman's head. He was half pulled, half helped around the circuit stopping at each base only to be started again by Thorne. After the game, President McLean wired the result to the New York papers, at the same time filing a claim to play for the World's Championship during the coming fall. In the golden book of time, therefore, is written a vivid account of the victory at Cobourg, but the travelers state that it was hardly a square deal to invite them to the outing, challenge them to a game and conclude by "beating their heads off."

The return trip was particularly delightful and almost at midnight the final curtain dropped on the last scene of a comedy that everyone enjoyed.

Heard on the Side.

A record, and a little better than the best.

The committee looked "nifty" in their yachting caps.

Heard frequently on the hurricane deck from a party of the fair sex, "Oh, you Charlie Kimpton."

Considerable anxiety was felt for the safety of Dick Van Loon, who disappeared shortly after the boat's arrival. However, he had only slipped around the corner to buy a dog.

David Bell—applause from the gallery —won the coveted gold medal, beating out a whole field of fast men in the ¼-mile stampede. He will wear it on his evening suit at the next "at home.'

In a coffee manufacturer's guessing contest—coffee beans in a tin—many of the guesses qualified as "has-beens."

A note in passing re the "Harrigan Club." They sang all day and are probably singing yet. Their efforts were enjoyed although at times the tenor shot off at a tangent.

Jack Beaumont, the secretary, got away with a lot of hard work that was appreciated.

Dave Clarke, better known as "Ear Clipper," made an ideal starter in the racing events.

Tom Clarke caught the "lydies" at the tape. He had offers for all kinds of help, but intimated that he could look after his duties all right.

That little cabin on the hurricane deck! It was the committee room. You know, where they count the coin, discuss the weather and—other things.

The soap race was a hummer, and was well arranged.

Frank Johnston and W. C. Miller, the megaphone artists, may apply for positions on the Toronto or New York police force. As cops of the race course they were big hits.

The millionaire residents of Cobourg heard that Lord Charles Beresford was in their midst, but on enquiry they discovered the stranger to be J. S. Bond, who closely resembles "his nibs."

Tea and baking powder hats were conspicuous and made the committee "sore" on account of the similarity to their dinky yachting caps.

Tom Vance has at last left off that old time and well known two-piece suit. His little nephews sang songs before a large assembly on the top deck.

Dave Bell was right at home in Cobourg. That is where he spent his apprenticeship days.

The knights of the grip who really make a noise were all there. They mix well with any crowd and as fun makers they have it on the best circus jesters that eper swung a slap stick.

Dave Radcliffe, "The Euchre Fiend" and other associates such as Fred Mason, Charlie Collins, John Butcher, Milton Cork, Geo. Crosbie, Jack McBride, Jack Wright, J. Balfour, Sam Richardson and others, could be found trying to play lone hands.

Don McLean, the president, was as happy as a lark and de-lighted with the outing.

THIS, Brother Grocer, is our New Building. ¶ After twenty-one years in the "other man's" house, we have moved into Our Own. ¶ Could we have chosen a better time than our Twenty-First Anniversary—the year of our Coming of Age? ¶ For several years past we have felt much like the small boy whose clothes are getting too tight due to his getting too big. So, in a sense, we have "grown" into our new quarters. ¶ To-day our feelings may be compared to those of the industrious retailer who, after many years of wishing and striving, sees his fondest ambitions realized—beholds himself installed in a nice, new store of his own, from cellar to attic his own. Maybe you have experienced the feeling. ¶ We might tell how our Business has grown and the wherefore—how Quality was a watchword, Confidence the basis, Square-dealing the corner-stone. But we shant. ¶ Give a peep to the opposite page. There, Brother Grocer, stands a monument to the Success of our Retailers, to the Satisfaction of their customers. ¶ Our Success is based on Yours. Without You we would have failed. So we thank you. From now on we are Optimists. ¶ And when you happen in Montreal, we want to see you, chat about things. You'll come in, won't you? For we like to talk business with a Business Man. We shant mention FIVE ROSES at all, at all—unless you start the floury topic first. ¶ We have all the space we need to make "Better Service Best"—mean to. ¶ And we're awful proud of our bright, new workplace. Won't you congratulate a fellow?

London Grocers Annual Outing a Success

Took Large Crowd to Detroit Where the Day was Spent in Many Different Ways—Provided Lunch on the Train for their Guests Who had an Enjoyable Day—Some of the Little Incidents of the Trip—Jottingsfrom Along the Line.

London, Ont., June 22nd, 1910.—The annual excursion of the London Retail Grocers' Association was held on Wednesday, June 15th to Detroit, Mich., and proved a success from every viewpoint. The special G.T.R. vestibule train left the city at 7.30 a.m. and arrived in Detroit at 10.30 o'clock after a splendid run when it is remembered that there were 14 coaches and a baggage car. The latter was fitted up as a buffet car where the grocers looked after the inner wants of their friends. Everything was free and the Grocers proved themselves generous hosts. The lunch included oranges, hananas, sandwiches, olives, old cheese, biscuits, pickles, etc. and all kinds of soft drinks and tobacco. The ladies were not forgotten by the committee who passed fruits, sandwiches, etc., to all on board. Souvenir packages of chocolates and biscuits were passed around to all the ladies by the representatives of the manufacturers.

Arrival in Detroit.

After the arrival of the excursionists in Detroit, most of them took the boat to Belle Isle where they enjoyed an auto trip around the island. The boys had hard work to keep Joe Beechey and Norman Ripley from taking the young seal from the Aquarium with them. Jim Wilkey said he never did like fish because they were always thirsty. After dinner, all the boys wended their way to the ball game between Detroit and Boston. They were sadly disappointed however, by the trouncing the Tigers received, 8 to 3 being the score. Mullen, Detroit's star pitcher was batted all over the garden. Alex. Boyd said he could see better ball in the Eastern league. This was the first time Alex. accompanied the Grocers on their outing, succeeding his namesake Joe Boyd, who the Grocers are sorry to learn, is leaving for the west. However, they are pleased with his successor. Fred Tobias was a welcome visitor. At the hall game he could he heard alright, hut not seen. He was not only right at home with the boys, but was a general favorite with the ladies. They seem to like his curly hair. Ed. Ryan and Tom Ranahan were the singing comedians in the baggage car. Everybody helped them in the chorus especially with "Has Anyhody Here Seen Kelly?" Clem Garvey was out looking up something new to the trade and bought a bottle of nuts in Maraschino which he said were fine.

Clem left them behind. He met some girls and forgot all about the parcel. By the way, Clem made a fine speech in the baggage car on the return trip. President C. W. Summers and Treas. Thos. Shaw also responded, the crowd singing "They are Jolly Good Fellows." Too much praise cannot be given Bob Ross and Boh Collins for the way they served out the good things in the baggage car. They are a great team, always jolly and springing something new in the joke line. This is the the third year for the two Bobs and the Grocers hope they will have their company often. E. F. Reed and Tom Haskett were among the hardest workers on the train and needless to say made a hit with the fair sex. Dick Donaghy says passing out tickets is harder work than it looks.

Home Again.

The return trip was made in good time. Special street cars were at the station to take the tired but happy crowd to their homes after one of the most enjoyable outings in the history of the local retail grocers' association. The committee that had charge of the arrangements was composed of Pres. C. W. Summers, Vice-pres. Jas. Haskett, Treas. Thos. Shaw, Sec. Cyril Hayes, R. A. Ross, R. J. Donaghy, Ed. Bodkin, Frank Paull, Fred, Travers, M. A. Young, J. A. McFarlane, Ernie Shaw and E. J. Ryan. The Grocers presented Hughie Jennings, manager of the Detroit ball club with a box of cigars which the Tiger leader passed around to his cubs.

WANTS GROCERS TO ORGANIZE.

Some of the Important Questions That Could Be Ventilated.

In referring to the recent convention of wholesale grocers in Toronto and the address of E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., the Barrie (Ont.) Saturday Morning says relative to Barrie grocers:

"The question might he asked: Should Barrie have a retail grocers' association? The majority of towns of the size of Barrie, in Ontario, have such an association, under whose auspices are held grocers' picnics and the like. If Barrie had such an association many subjects could be taken up, such as the half holiday, a betsystem of delivery, which is realized by all to be one of the most expensive parts of the grocery trade. Cities and large towns adopt certain rules, goods ordered at certain hours go out at a stated delivery. At present in Barrie small orders are requested to be sent all over town at any hour of the day. A campaign of systematic huying would prove heneficial to buyer and seller. The writer has in mind a town in southern Ontario not half the size of Barrie, where not a single husiness firm has a delivery rig, all deliveries heing made by a firm who make a specialty of delivering goods, at stated hours—at a cost to the store-keeper away below the up-keep of horses, rigs or delivery boys—and, what is of prime importance, the work is satisfactorily done.

"The dry goods departments, in July and August, their slack season, have forced or persuaded the grocers into giving a half holiday during the two slack months. It so happens that the dry goods men's slack months are the grocers' busy months, heing the fruit season. A grocers' association would have something to say along this line.

"It is expected that a meeting of the retail grocers of the town will be held in the near future. There are some 32 grocery establishments in town, which is a large proportion of the retail traders.

"Getting hack to the puhlishing of Mr. Johnston's address, it may he noted that the convention was so well pleased with it, that 5,000 copies were ordered printed, to be distrihuted amongst the retail grocers of Ontario."

AN EARLY CLOSING WAVE.

There is a great wave of progress passing over the continent so far as early closing among the retail trade is concerned.

"Shorter hours" is the slogan and converts among merchants are reported every week. There is just now a proposition before the Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association to close during the summer months on Saturday night at 9 o'clock and if we are to judge from the progressiveness of this association it is likely that results will be seen at their next meeting when the question comes up for final disposal.

Grocers in all parts of Canada are freely admitting that there is no money in late hours. So far as inconveniencing the public is concerned, they say that the public are easily educated and, in fact, consider a merchant in a better light in a great many cases if he is more independent.

There is little sense in working until 11 o'clock on Saturday night if as much business can be done before 9—and if your customers can be educated to shop before nine, why not educate them to do it?

THINGS TRAVELERS SHOULDN'T DO.

The series of cartoons on things that should not be done by travelers is creating considerable interest.

In connection with the recent caricature of a traveler who was puffing cigar smoke in the face of a retailer, one knight of the grip tells of a somewhat similar occurrence.

He had just stepped into a store where there already was a young traveler talking to the merchant. Presently a woman came in, and while the grocer was serving her, the young traveler filled his pipe, lit it, and began puffing smoke about the heads of both woman and merchant.

The result was that that traveler secured no order, and, moreover, the grocer remarked to the competitive salesman who had watched the whole proceedings, that the firm he represented would never have another order from him so long as they sent out the young man in question.

No one will condemn a man for smoking, but there are times when it is undesirable for travelers to do so. The above was one.

GETTING TOGETHER.

At recent conventions wholesale and retail grocers have had conferences for the purpose of discussing the elimination of trade abuses and ways and means of improving business generally.

This is the right idea. It is in keeping with the spirit of the age, which is to "get together." The day has passed when one man will refuse to discuss his methods with a fellow worker, for it has been proved that by associating with one another we not only exchange thoughts but develop the original ideas which we were formerly in the habit of hugging to ourselves and working out as best we could. The other fellow has had experience that we have not had, and we have learned by the sad lesson many things which he has not. A talk over the common subject clears the atmosphere, saving time and money.

Trade conventions are excellent. They should be encouraged by bumper attendances. Frequently a merchant can make a good deal more money at a convention than he can at home, in that he will learn much which otherwise he may have to experience.

WHAT QUALITY IN TEA DOES.

In the matter of the price of teas the Canadian consumer has been rather fortunate during the past 15 or 20 years. While tea has gone up in price to the retailer and jobber in that time, the consumer gets it at practically the same price.

Instances are many where retailers to-day are buying teas at 18 cents which they would scarcely look at a few years ago at 11 cents.

Too many retailers view the selling of tea with indifference and to this may be attributed the losses of many customers in tea and even altogether.

The majority of people enjoy a good cup of tea and are willing to pay for it. Inferior teas may attract some on account of cheapness, but the bulk of the public want quality.

Grocers should aim so far as possible to cultivate a taste in everyone for the better class. If they do this they are more likely to get repeat orders and to hold their custom—if not all the better class. In making a sale it is wise to assume that others are using a tea of quality. You are more likely to sell a customer the same kind—and you not only satisfy her palate, but increase your profit as well.

CHANGE IN SHIPPING TIME.

A recent order of the Grand Trunk Railway anent the shipping of freight from Toronto has caused a number of manufacturers and jobbers in that city to request that merchants ordering goods for prompt shipment try to get the orders into Toronto before noon; otherwise it will be almost impossible to fill the order and ship the goods the day of receipt.

The railway's order, which went into effect on May 23, states that no goods will be received for shipment arriving at the freight sheds after 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Up to that date goods were accepted up to 6 o'clock. It was then possible to fill and ship the same day orders received before 3 o'clock in the afternoon; but now, owing to earlier collections, 1 o'clock is the latest hour.

As jobbers are frequently requested to hold shipments for enclosures from other houses, the new rule may work hardships by making it impossible for the goods for enclosure to be made up and sent to the shipping house for enclosure in time for that day's delivery.

General merchants ordering goods from Toronto houses will do well to remember this change when sending orders.

EVERY LITTLE HELPS,

Frequently there are articles in The Canadian Grocer which will bear reproduction in the newspapers, with good results.

Not long ago The Grocer published an article on the advisability of all merchants dealing at home, instead of with the catalogue houses. It was pointed out that grocers often send out of the town for dry goods, and the drygoodsman for groceries, etc.

It has since come to our notice that several newspapers throughout the country reproduced the item upon request of some of the grocers. In addition to printing it, editorial reference was made to the principle, which cannot fail to have a good effect.

Merchants should be on the watch for everything that will tend to place trade on a better basis. The higher business plane cannot be reached all at once; it takes time, and every little helps.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Raw Sugar—Firmer.
Cream Tartar—Firm, at recent advance.
Brazils—Half cent lower.
Teas—New Japans on the market.

Montreal, June 23, 1910.

The reeent warm weather has stimulated trade to such an extent that local jobbers report conditions better than in the fall. Business is not confined to any one line but seems to be generally brisk. Colleetions might be improved, but at the same time, taking it all through, the situation is very satisfactory.

Raw sugars are again firm and higher. The situation at first looked as if the weakening would be sufficient to bring down the price of refined, but evidently sueh will not be the case.

The report regarding damaged by frost tomatoes seems to have been well founded if we are to judge by the trade passing at present. The buying has even extended to the other lines of vegetables.

Cream of Tartar seems to be almost impossible to obtain and is holding fully 2c higher than six weeks ago.

Country buyers are beginning to come in much more frequently owing to the roads being in such dry condition at present. Taken altogether the situation looks very promising to local men.

SUGAR—The eondition of the raw market is firmer, both for beet and cane, and prospects look much better for the future. Sales are increasing rapidly, owing to the warm weather now prevailing. No changes seem likely in jobbers, prices for some time to eome.

Canned Goods — Every indication points to high prices for good sockeye salmon. Light stocks are reported from all quarters of the world and the new supply is not considered sufficient to go around. Previous statements regarding a light pack as far as Canada is concerned are still supported by authorities. Certain it is that American prices opened at a higher figure than was quoted last year. It is rumored that the opening quotations for Canadian salmon will be from $1 to $1.25 higher than those offered at the opening of last year's season. One wholesale grocer said, "I told you months ago that salmon would be good property and I do not think I made a made a mistake that time."

Regarding canned fruits, the low prices of new fruits that now prevail generally have, of course, sidetracked the canned article for a time. Canned peas are scarce at a high price. Corn and tomatoes are moving freely at full prices.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—
Canned Salmon—Very strong.
Sugar—Firm.
Raisins—Moving rapidly.

Toronto, June 23, 1910.

The past week has been a little quiet in the trade although the general season is good. Jobbers report extensive business and from all parts of the country the reports are encouraging. The weather has had a beneficial result. The prospects of good crops and the activity that is met generally have had effects upon business that have not gone unappreciated. The fruit season practically at its height as far as strawberries are concerned promises to be marked by a heavy crop. Sugar and other articles are bound to benefit thereby. Canned goods in the vegetable line are in good demand and at stiff prices. As might be expected, canned fruits are for the time being secondary with the majority of people and the new crop figures are likely to be low.

Salmon occupies much attention and opinions do not vary that it is going to open much higher than last year. Nothing definite has been received although speculation has been rife. Salmon is good property and it will not deteriorate from the fact that the run this year is expected to be small. An item in another part of this issue deals with the situation.

Teas are embraced with the goods that are selling well at present. There are many lines of breakfast foods, bottled goods sold as thirst quenchers, lemons, etc., which are particularly seasonable and should not be overlooked. There should be no difficulty in making sales in these lines, particularly with the weather man stirring up the coals above 80 degrees.

Sugar—The market in sugar has stiffened up a bit during the past week before an increased demand. The question of what effect the berry season will have on the demand is occupying the attention of the trade. Advices from the fruit district confirm statements that the crop will be heavy and it has also been said that the season will not be a long one. The idea apparently prevails among the fruitmen that an extensive business will be done, but within a shorter time than usual. Altogether sugar is firmer before an increased demand.

Dried Fruits—The market is steady with trade good. Fancy seeded raisins are scarcer and Valencias are moving rapidly with the price stiffening. Raisins in fact have braced up and are enjoying a good run of business. Prunes continue at firm quotations. Estimates of the coming California crop place the total at 100,000,000 to 125,000,000 pounds. Currants are still unsettled as far as the extent of the new crop is concerned. Prices are now 2s 6d higher than the opening price last year. Peronospora is a disease that is said to have appeared in some places but every kind of protective measure is being effected to protect the crop. A recent letter contained the following, "Holders and growers of currants dream of 1900. We shall see." In the year referred to currants reached a high price. Apricots are rather high. The demand for peaches is light. Nothing definite can be said about the raisin crop yet, but as regards the old stock it is being pretty well sold off.

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS—
Dried Fruits—Stronger.
Sugar—Steady.
Syrup and Rolled Oats—Reduced.

Winnipeg, June 23, 1910.

Trade reports from this centre at this particular time are interesting in that there is a marked change in the ordering. Yesterday the thermometer registered ninety degrees in the shade, and it is obvious the same class of goods that was moving all winter and spring will not be ordered now. Ice cream, soft drinks and other confectionery forms the bulk of the trade just now. Fresh fruits have a heavy run, but only such staples as are absolutely required to meet needs are going out. Were it not for the new stores that are opening in large numbers everywhere in the west, and the rapidly increasing number of newcomers to the country, wholesalers would find trade quiet. Crop reports show prospects very bright over the whole west and the present weather conditions are what is required. Markets show little signs of advancement and there are some declines.

Sugar.—This is the steadiest item on the market list this week. Grocers always stock well in this line, particularly when an uncertain market prevails. Lump sugar has revived.

Foreign Dried Fruits.—All eyes are turned to crop centres in anticipation of more favorable reports than have come in during the past two weeks. The crop on the whole, it is believed, will run below that of last year. The consumption in the west is rapidly increasing and prices will have to go up. Best grade raisins, apricots, prunes and peaches are having the best sale just now.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, June 22.

With a large crop of strawberries this year, the price is down to $1.75 and $2, making it possible for a retail price of three boxes for 25c. The quality, too, is of the best, in fact this is one of the best years that the industry has had.

Eastern butter is down to 28c, following the drop in local to 30c.

There is quite a feature in the potato market, showing how there may be quantities of an article available, but how they are held back to get high prices. A couple of weeks ago, it was mentioned that potatoes were coming in, but they are so plentiful that they are being offered as low as $5 a ton, old stock, to get rid of them, now that the new potatoes are coming in. Even at that ridiculously low price, they cannot be got rid of. It was not very long ago that they were selling at $40 a ton, every change to medium cold weather having been taken advantage of to hoist the price by the commission men. They feel they can afford to waste some now, since they cleared on the big figure. They stood to gain, but to lose nothing. One even stated that it paid to put potatoes in the garbage heap rather than have the price drop. The middlemen get the benefit, while the retail grocer gets the objections, and has to put up with complaints of all kinds when prices go almost beyond reason, without any apparent excuse.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, N.S., June 22nd.

The chief feature of the market this week is the decline in the price of butter. This was mainly brought about by the increased supply of fresh made dairy butter. During the week many farmers came to the city with small tubs of fresh made dairy butter which they sold from their teams. It was all good stock and some of it was disposed of at 20 cents per pound. This increased supply caused a drop all around from one to two cents per pound. Some of the dealers say that the drop is only temporary, and that, as soon as the farmers get busy at haymaking the supply will fall off and prices will go up again.

The receipt of eggs this week show a slight falling off. The price, however, remains steady at 19 cents per dozen, but an early advance is looked for.

Canned goods of all kinds are in good demand. Several dealers report heavy sales of peas.

The prices of flour and feed remain unchanged. There is a fairly good demand for flour, the lower prices having proved attractive to the buyer. The fish markets are very active and fairly good catches are being made. The steamer Kanawha that sailed from here this week took away 20,000 cases of canned lobsters for the European markets.

The jobbers in fruit report business brisk. The orders from country customers are heavy and the quality of the stock offered is said to be excellent. Large quantities of bananas are being handled, and the price ranges from $1.75 to $2.40 per bunch. The price of lemons has been advanced. They are quoted at $4.25 per case. The first big shipment of "Verdelli" lemons, arrived in good condition. They are sound and will keep well. Navel oranges range from $3.25 to $4. Good pineapples are also on the market in large quantities, and are selling at $3 per crate. American cabbage are $1.75 per crate, and potatoes $1.25 per bag. Tomatoes are selling at $3.50 per crate, and American wax beans at $4.50.

The recent heavy frost in the western portion of King's County did considerable damage to small fruits. Thousands of tomato plants, it is reported have been destroyed, beans are completely ruined, and the market gardeners are predicting a dearth of early vegetables.

MANUFACTURER AND JOBBER.

"Manufacturers," says a writer in the New York Journal of Commerce, "in order to defend themselves against the competition of the manufacturing jobbers are being compelled more and more, it is said, to favor the so-called legitimate jobber by allowing him an extra discount. It is the opinion of many observers of the situation that this is at present the most effective defence of the manufacturer. It has been figured out that of two orders of 100 cases each turned over by the manufacturer, one of them to the straightjobber and the other to the manufacturing jobber, the straight jobber will by the work of his own salesmen add a re-order of 30 cases to the original one, whereas the manufacturing jobber may not even fill all of the original order. The manufacturer claims, moreover, that the competing jobber is quite apt to take advantage of the initial work done among the retailers by filling re-orders from his own brands.

At the present time some manufacturers estimate, it is said, that the straight jobber should have an advantage of 2½ per cent.

"This expedient illustrates the condition in the grocery business from the manufacturer's and jobber's point of view, especially in some of the large cities such as New York and Chicago. The large wholesaler with considerable capital has naturally attempted to maintain his individuality by getting out products under his own name. The result has been an inevitable clash with the manufacturer. Compromises have been attempted from time to time, with the usual temporary results of such arrangements. The end will necessarily be a readjustment on both sides in conformity with the natural evolution of trade."

GROCERS ISSUE CHALLENGE.

In a recent issue of The Grocer an article appeared in regard to the adulteration of food stuffs in as shown by a Pure Food exhibition held at Westminster, England. Grocers and provision dealers resent the assertion of the promoters of the exhibition made as to the "general practice" of "faking" or adulterating articles of food. The metropolitan Grocers' Association, at a large representative meeting challenged the "pure food" exhibitors to state explicitly where they bought the articles they have been showing, and which they assert are found on analysis to contain the foreign substances described. The secretary of the association visited the exhibition, and examined, as far as permitted, the substances stated to be used as adulterants. They were such, he says, as not even the poorest person in the poorest street in London would buy, and he refused to believe that any of the articles were purchased unless the names of the vendors and manufacturers are disclosed. The statements made at the exhibition are declared to have been made with the view of prejudicing the public mind against the food supply of the country, and the latest reports of the Local Government Board are pointed to as proving that the adulteration of food stuffs in England is yearly becoming less and less.

Price of Lard Experiences a Slight Decline

Changes in Some Lines of Pork Products — Cheese is Also Quoted at Lower Figure—Poultry, Too, is Coming in Freely and Prices Have Slumped—Butter and Eggs are Firm With Production Still Large.

Butter, eggs and cheese are moving in what might be called large quantities these days. The production of cheese is high, reports from different parts of the Dominion seeming to agree on this point. The price is slightly lower than that of a week ago. Butter and eggs are holding their prices, although in some parts the tendency is to lower quotations. The production in each case is large but the demand is likewise heavy and a brisk trade is reported. There is apparently a good opportunity for exporting butter now owing to increased prices in foreign markets. Regarding the production of eggs a large dealer states that they have never handled as many eggs as during the present season.

In the provision market lard is generally easier. There is a good demand for hog products, the warm weather having an effect that was expected. Smoked ham and cooked meats are now asked for on account of the relief they offer to the housewife and also on account of their individual qualities.

Prices for poultry are lower. The shipments are more liberal but many reasons combine to decrease the demand. Prices are expected to go still lower.

The weather, if anything, has had a rather good effect on business.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Prices are down in all lines of provisions. Both lards have dropped ½c and with the exception of live and dressed hogs, practically all other pork products are lower. Trade at the reduction is much better and the volume seems to be on the increase. Dry roads are bringing in country buyers.

Provisions—The supplies of hogs during the past week have been good and prices have generally been a little easier. The demand for smoked hams and cooked meats has increased since the first notice of the warm wave that is now making itself felt. Eggs—Locally eggs are quite firm. Shipments continue heavy, but the demand is good. One dealer stated that they had never sold as many eggs as during the past spring. This may be attributed perhaps to the higher prices of meats and as the egg supply was heavy the demand was well met. Prices will not go any lower was the statement one dealer offered and this seems to be the general belief.

Lard—Since the increased production of Manitoba butter, lard has not enjoyed a heavy output. It is a winter commodity and a strong market is not expected to prevail for some months. Merchants, however, keep a quantity continually in stock and the prices now are as follows:

Pure, 20-lb. pails	3 55
" 3-lb. tins, 60-lb. cases	10 90
" 10-lb. tins, 60-lb. cases	10 70
Compound, 20-lb. pails, per pail	2 80
" 5-lb. tins, 60-lb. cases	8 80

Butter—All grades are in heavy demand and the supply is abundant as is usually the case at the beginning of summer. The picnic and festival baskets consume a good quantity of this product and the demand may reach the supply limit before long. This week the market is down 1 cent, creamery being 23 and No. 1 dairy 21 cents.

Eggs—The local market is in good condition and jobbers are fearing the supply will not be satisfactorily maintained. Last week's price of 21 cents rules to-day in spite of rumors of a decline.

Cheese—Nothing below 12 cents is expected to rule the cheese market this summer since the possibility of exporting will likely be taken advantage of. Ontario cheese is coming west and jobbing for 13½ cents. Wholesalers claim that this price will have to be raised to keep the product here because of the foreign demand.

Honey—As a staple this trade is very satisfactory at present although no heavy sales are being made just now. Prices have been slightly reduced and although nothing lower is expected, yet an advance is highly improbable until the fall. This year's production is expected to move off well as a good market is established everywhere in the west.

British Columbia Salmon Pack Will be Small

Packers Have Made Preparation for Only a Small Pack and Even Though the Run Should be Large There will be no Means of Taking Care of the Fish.—This is the Year of the Small Run.—Some Interesting Facts Concerning British Columbia's Great Industry.

Vancouver, B.C., June 23.—In respect to the annual pack of salmon, which will begin next month, the packers in British Columbia have made preparations for a small pack. Last year was the quadrennial big year, but even then the amount of fish put up was much smaller than in the previous big year of 1905, in fact so small that the expectations were not realized. This is one of the off years, and there is no reason to expect a big run, and should all precedents be broken and many fish come in, they will pass through, since there will be no means of taking care of them. If preparation is made for a pack say of 500,000 cases after that amount has been filled, it would be next to impossible to have things ready to pack a larger amount.

Figures already presented in these columns show that the annual pack of salmon in British Columbia is steadily decreasing, this being particularly noticeable in the big year. The falling off has been more remarked since the operation of traps by Americans. Notwithstanding, the efforts of the government to propagate and conserve the salmon, it is annoying to Canadians to see that the industry is losing its importance, while that in Puget Sound is gaining, simply because they recognize no close season and take advantage of what is done in Canada.

Spring Run a Failure.

This year the spring salmon run is a failure. It was thought that since some catches were made at the traps off Victoria that this pack would have been fairly good, but on the Fraser only three or four fish per boat are being taken whereas last year it was 300 or so. It looks all right to those in Victoria, though, for with the catch of the traps they are shipping fresh salmon east for the first time. Generally large quantities are sent from points on the mainland. Spring salmon is retailing for fifteen cents per pound as compared with ten cents last year, a fifty per cent. increase that indicates the scarcity.

On Puget Sound so active has been the demand for canned salmon futures that salmon packers and brokers there, for one of the first times in the history of the canned salmon business, are refusing to book orders for future Alaska red, medium red or pink fish. The entire 1910 output, which has not yet been packed, is said to have been sold, and the brokers are quite indifferent about securing new business. That there should be such an indifference is regarded as very unusual. So active has been the demand for spot salmon that stocks of sockeyes are said to have been reduced to about 100,000 cases and pink stocks to about the same level.

Traps Arrest the Run.

While the pack of spring salmon on the Fraser has been below the average this season, on the Columbia river the pack to date is much ahead of that of last year. That being the case, the only reason given for the small pack locally is because of the traps, demonstrating how effectual they are in arresting the run. If that is the case in the one or two instance off the Vancouver Island coast, what must it be in the height of the sockeye run, when the whole pathway through American waters is blocked with traps, open day and night, weekday and Sunday?

WESTERN RETAIL ASSOCIATION.

Has Secured Charter Incorporating The Retail Merchants' Fire Insurance Company.

The work of the Western Retail Association with headquarters at Winnipeg is progressing rapidly, yet due care is being taken that a department is only added when required to meet a direct demand of the times or to supply some need of its members. Recently the association added a collecting department, which will be in the hands of a collector, who will collect accounts for the members. All members are being requested to send in the accounts they wish collected to this department and to forward to the office any information that might be of value to the collector or aid in the building up of an information bureau.

There are various committees at work from which good results are anticipated. Special mention might be made of the committee on general purposes, which is composed of a member from each of the trade sections and one representative from the country. The duty of this committee will be to take up and deal with any of the many general troubles that arise from time to time. Just now the committee has in hand a meeting with the wholesalers and jobbers for the purpose of devising some way whereby the retail trading by wholesale houses will be discontinued.

The new association has also secured control of a charter incorporating The Retail Merchants' Fire Insurance Company, with a capitalization of $1,000,000. A prospectus has been issued and the shares are now being offered for sale at $115 per $100 share.

The company is organized on regular old-line principles and while the stock will be pushed amongst retailers, it is not exclusively so. In this way it is entirely different from the company which the Ontario Retail Hardware and Stove Dealers' Association has taken steps to organize. The latter is to be a specialized mutual company with no share capital and accepting insurance solely from members of the Retail Hardware Association.

The prospectus of the Retail Merchants' Fire Insurance Co. gives figures showing that eight Manitoba fire insurance companies in 1906 did $15,993,856 worth of business. In 1907 the figures were $25,439,057 and in 1908, $33,505,246 an increase of over 100 per cent. in two years.

The organization committee of the new company includes: W. T. Devlin, shoe merchant; D. E. Adams, coal merchant; R. D. Richardson, stationer; W. R. Milton, baker; John Dyke, grocer, John Noxam, contractor; A. T. Connell, druggist, and W. S. Lafresnaye, accountant, all of Winnipeg; John Heibert, general merchant, Altona, Man., and A. E. Hill, general merchant, Griswold, Man. The secretary is George J. Hyndman, secretary Western Retail Association, 406 Travelers' Building, Winnipeg.

Wheat Market Firmer due to Weather Reports

Statements to the Effect that Moisture is Badly Needed and That Crops May be Affected—Local Trade is Fairly Good But No Improvement has Been Felt in Exports — Weather Has Had an Effect on Cereal Market.

During the past few days the wheat market has been slightly influenced by reports that the weather will have a detrimental effect on the crops. It is pointed out that moisture is badly needed and unless rain falls shortly much damage will be wrought. Such is the gist of the statements that have been made, but it is also pointed out that about this time of the year reports of that nature are generally due. At any rate there is a slightly firmer tone to the wheat market. Flour is firm locally but export trade has not undergone any improvement. If anything is likely to transpire affecting the wheat market it will not be long before the boards will give notice of it.

General copious showers will put an end to these rumors.

The demand for rolled oats has not suffered a great deal, although it is admitted that this season of the lowest demand is now opening. Corn meal is in good demand at $2 per bag of 98 pounds.

MONTREAL.

Flour—The local flour trade seems to be rapidly on the up grade. Prices remain unchanged, but are very firm. At the same time the situation as regards export is not so satisfactory, and orders are considerably under what they were at this time last year.

RETAILERS WANT AGREEMENT.

With Wholesale Fruitmen Regarding Selling to the Consumer—Appoint Committee.

Toronto, June 23.—The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association have decided to try to secure an agreement with the local wholesale fruitmen whereby the latter shall sell only to the trade. At their regular meeting on Monday, June 20th, the following committee was appointed to meet the fruitmen: D. W. Clark, J. M. Cork, J. Blood, W. C. Millar, T. Clark and D. McLean. It was stated that last year an agreement had been entered into in which the fruitmen promised that they would not sell to the consumer. A few days later a grocer noticed a wholesale man making a retail sale. His attention was called to the promise but the wholesaler replied that they were all doing it and he intended to do the same. That was only two days after tthe agreement had been formed. "If you can't take them as men of honour and depend on their word" said the grocer who related the ineident "you can't rely on them at all." It was also pointed out that the wholesalers did not desire to sell directly to the consumer but in many cases they could scarcely refuse. It was thought that if an agreement could be made whereby a forfeit would be paid by the offending wholesaler the difficulty would be removed. They could then refuse the consumer on the ground that they were liable to this forfeit.

Inadequate Peddlers' Law.

F. Johnston called attention to the street hawkers of strawberries. They had been in his district and did a big business. There were three men with the wagon which he felt was contrary to law only two being allowed. One of the members said "The laws governing peddlers in this city are the worst on the continent."

The question of amalgamating with the Grocers' branch of the Retail Merchants' Association was not discussed.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, have purchased a new auto delivery wagon. The truck has a 35 h.p. 2-cylinder motor, and is built to carry three tons. Montreal wholesalers are evidently believers in the benefit of such machines for economical and rapid delivery, as this the second to be installed within a few months, Chaput Fils & Cie. having the other.

Heavy Demand for Fruit is Experienced

Season Has Opened With a Rush—Prices are Generally Holding Firm Before the Summer Demand—Strawberries are Slated for a Decline—Lemons are Firm and Fancy Stocks are Quickly Snapped Up—Steady Market for Vegetables—Supply of Fish is Shorter Than Usual.

The fruit season has opened at last and the heat of the past two weeks, felt generally throughout the Dominion, creates a craving for foods that cool the blood. While not writing a treatise on what to eat at this time of the year it is a known fact that fruits are particularly welcome at this time. Many grocers have built up a good fruit business and now is the time they will make hay. All fruits are in demand with the thirst quenchers probably leading. Lemons are none too plentiful and the demand has been heavy of late. Watermelons and cantaloupes are in good demand. Strawberries are now received entirely from Canadian patches and easier prices are looked for. Pineapples are strong.

Vegetables as far as the ordinary householder is concerned are neither here nor there. They are waiting for the new crops. But there is a good demand for imported stocks with cucumbers, tomatoes, etc. leading.

There is a fairly good demand for fish with the supply below normal. Reports from Winnipeg state that the catch in that province is good.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—California deciduous fruits have made their appearance on the local market, and appear to be having a very brisk sale for this early in the season.

The lemon market seems to be firmer, and higher prices are looked for in the near future.

Almeria grapes are scarce, and the price has advanced somewhat.

Vegetables—The vegetable market this week shows rather a peculiar state of affairs. A great many prices have gone down, but, on the contrary, a number of them are higher. Why there should be such a difference is not quite apparent to local dealers, but the general reason assigned is a large increase in demand forcing certain lines up. There is practically a new price scale throughout.

Fish—Contrary to expectations Gaspe salmon has not turned out plentiful, nor has mackerel, and both of these lines are holding higher this week.

It is now close season for sturgeon until July.

The demand keeps good for all cods.

A few lines of new salt fish have been shipped to this market, particularly green cod, pickled salmon, and imported pickled herrings. The demand in this line is limited, however.

Shad is nearly finished for this season, but some are being offered for this week. A run of salmon is expected this week.

TORONTO.

Green Fruit—The warm wave of the past ten days has helped the fruit market to a noticeable extent. In some respects it is making business hazardous and trade must be carried through without any holding of stock which in the most cases is liable to suffer from the heat. Pineapples seem to suffer most in this respect but does not materially affect the retailer. There is a firm tone to this market and prices are maintained at a figure much higher than that quoted a few weeks ago. There is a good demand for lemons and stocks are reported short. Fancy Verdellis are quoted at from $4.00 to $4.50 a case with a strong possibility that they may be higher. In a recent issue of The Grocer it was stated that an authority gave his opinion that this fruit would go to five dollars and even now that mark is not far distant. Recent arrivals have been picked up immediately. Watermelons are in good demand at firm prices. Canadian strawberries are arriving plentifully, having displaced the American variety which are practically through for the season. Prices are at 10 to 12 cents with a downward tendency to the market.

FINE IN WRONG PLACE.

A Kingston, Ont., grocer writes as follows to the editor of The Canadian Grocer.—"Regarding an item which appeared in last week's Grocer about pepper adulterations in Kingston, I cannot understand why the government does not send their inspectors to the wholesale houses and there obtain the unbroken packages and punish the manufacturer. The retailer has to depend on the word and honor of the wholesalers from whom he buys and the wholesaler the manufacturer. If a sample is sent to Ottawa about $8 is required for analysis and few retailers can afford such exorbitant

"One grocer told me he was going to get a rubber stamp and mark everything compound.

"The fines were not $10—they were $24 for 2 samples and one $39. All were bought as pure and sold as such."

Using the Blackboard at Association Meetings

A Method Made Use of by the Seattle Retail Grocers' Association—Chairman Shows Members What It Costs Them to do Business—Figures Loss Caused by Shrinkage in Dried Fruits, Etc.

The blackboard in the grocery business! In a recent issue of The Grocer appeared an item referring to the educative methods of the Retail Grocers' Association of Seattle, and the practical benefits derived under the direction of the chairman, J. J. Higgins.

This is not altogether an innovation as far as some of the grocers' associations of Canada are concerned, but it is worthy of notice from the fact that the helpfulness of the blackboard may not have been entirely appreciated even by those associations that were using it.

After all, the retail associations should aim to assist its members as much as possible; Higgins' blackboard has put many thousands of dollars in the pockets of the Seattle grocers. It must be admitted that every grocer is not able to solve all the problems that confront him in his first experience. As he continues, however, he learns, but it often happens that this kind of education is not only too slow, but it is too costly. This is the gap the blackboard filled for the grocers of Seattle.

Figuring Business Cost.

One of the interesting problems Mr. Higgins has worked out on his blackboard is the percentage of cost of doing business. He found that this most important phase of merchandising was not understood by a majority of the dealers in his city. It is not possible to market goods intelligently when the dealer does not know what it costs to do business.

Working on the correct theory that this is absolutely essential, Mr. Higgins, at each meeting of the local organization, takes up the specific case of some merchant present. He has figured thousands of cases. He has found that the majority of the dealers in Seattle were figuring much too low their cost of doing business. According to his calculations, the cost often will run to 20 per cent. and the average is about 18 per cent.

Loss From Shrinkage.

Another point he brings out clearly on his blackboard is the loss by shrinkage of goods. It is well known that dried fruits will shrink in weight as water evaporates, which is a part of the fruit. Cheese shrinks; so do other similar goods. The dealer must allow for this shrinkage in figuring his profits.

Item by item, Higgins draws out of the members of his class the various items which make up the cost of his business, and as each item is decided upon it is chalked down on the blackboard. So he arrives at the usual conclusion. The dealer's figures are there on the blackboard before him. He cannot get away from them.

The value of Mr. Higgins' blackboard method may be illustrated in another way. Let us suppose for example that a competitor is selling a certain line for less than it costs him. Chances are this competitor is making this sale, believing that he actually is making money instead of losing it. He will stop when the fact is called to his attention.

This is not an unusual case in Seattle. The kindergarten method quickly convinces this man that he has made a mistake in figuring. He changes the price.

The Higgins' kindergarten system aids the dealer to compete intelligently under any conditions.

The successful clerk is he who not only works for the store while he is on duty, but who also continues to boost when he is outside among his friends.

A salesman who makes his employer's business as his own, who feels a personal pride in his employment, and takes a real pleasure in its pursuit is the one who makes his mark later on, for he keeps the mark of the prize constantly in view. Enthusiasm is as important in the employe as the employer; it is this resolute determination that wins, even at the lowest round of the ladder.

THE WORLD'S BEST

SHOE POLISH

Damp, cold and heat alike have no effect on this polish. It does not clog the brush nor soil the clothes, but it lengthens the life of the shoe, and produces a quick, lasting POLISH.

There is more demand for it now than ever before. You are losing a profitable trade if you have been so short-sighted as not to stock it hitherto.
